Cap. 20.  Of the manner how to receive God. Whereunto may be referred that saying of John: If we confess our sins, he is faithfull and righteous to forgive vs, and cleanse vs from all iniquitie. For which cause it behooved praiers in the time of the law to be hallowed with expiation of bloude, that they might be acceptable, and that to the people should be put in mind that they are unworthy of so great a prerogative of honor, till being cleansed from their defilings they should of the onely mercy of God conceiue affiance to pray.

10 But whereas the holy ones seeme sometime for the entreating of God to alle the helpe of their owne righteousnes (as when David faith: Keep me foule, because I am good. Againe Ezchias: Remember Lord I befeech thee, that I have walked before thee in truth, and have done good in thine eyes) by such formes of speeching they meane nothing else than by their very regeneration to testifie them selves to be the servants and children of God, to whom he himself pronounceth that hee will be mercifull. He teacheth by the Prophet (as we have alreadie spoken) that his eyes are, upon the righteous, and his cares vnto their praiers. Againe by the Aposttle, that wee shall obtaine whatsoever we ask, if we keepe his commandements. In which sayings he doth not value prayer by the worthines of works: but his will is so to stablish their affiance, whose owne confidence well assureth them of an vnfained vp-rightnes and innocencie, such as all the faithfull ought to be. For the same is taken out of the very truth of God, which the blinde man that had his sight restored, faith in John, that God heareth not sinnes: if we understand sinnes after the common vse of the Scripture, for such as without al desire of rightousnes do altogether sleepe and rest vpon their sinnes: forasmuch as no hart can ever breake forth into vnfained calling vpon God which doth not also aspire to godlines. Therefore with such promises accord the prayers of the holy ones, wherein they make mention of their owne purenes or innocencie that they may feele that to bee givn them which is to bee looked for of all the servants of God. Againe it is then commonly found that they vse this kind of praiers, when they do in the presence of the Lord compare themselves with their enemies, from whose vnjust dealing they wishd themselves to be deliverd by his hand. In this comparison it is no maruell if they brought foorth their rightousnes, and simplicitie of hart to mooue him the rather by the rightfulnes of their caufe to helpe them. This therefore we take not away from the godly hart of a good man, but that he may vse the purenes of his confidence before the Lord, to freighn himself in the promisses where with the Lord comforteth & upholdeth his true worshipers: but our meaning is, that the trust of obtaining stande vpon the onely mercy of God, laying away all thinking of their owne despurning.

11 The fourth rule is, that being so throwen downe and subdued with true humilitie, wee should neverthelesse with certaine hope of obtaining be encouraged to praiere. These be things indeed contrary in the we to ioyne with the feeling of the just vengeance of Gods sure affiance of fauour: which things do yet very well agree together, if the owne goodness of God raise vs up vs being oppressed with our owne euis. For as we have before taught that repentance and faith are knit as companions together with an vnseparable bond: of which yet the one affaieth vs, the other careareth vs: so in praiers they must mutually meete together. And this agreement David expresseth in fewew words: I (faith he) will in the multitude of thy goodnes enter into thy house: I will worship in the Temple of thy holines with feare. Vnder the goodnes of he comprehended faith, in the mean time not excluding feare: because not only his manfully driueth vs to reuerence, but also our owne vnworthines holdeh vs in feare forgetting all pride and assurednes. But I meaneth not such affiance, which should strocke the minde loosed from all feeling of carefullnesse with a sweete and full quietnesse. For, to rest so peaceable is the dooing of them which hauing all things flowing as they would with it, are touchd with no care, are kindled with no defire, doe swell with no feare. And it is a very good spurre to the holy ones to call vpon
God, when being distressed with their owne necessitie, they are vexed with most great vnquietnesse, and are almost dismayed in themselves, till faith come in fit time to their succours, because in such distresses the goodnesse of God so shineth to them, that they doe in deede grone being wearied with weight of present evils, they are also in paine and grieved with feare of greater: yet being so vpholden by it, they both receiue and comfort the hardnesse of bearing them, and doe hope for escape and deliuerance. Therefore the prayer of a godly man must arise out of both affectiions, must also containe and shew both: namely to grone for present evils, and to be carefully afraid of new, and yet therewithall to flie to God, not doubting that he is ready to reach his helping hand. For God is marvellously provoked to wrath by our dittfulnesses, if we aske of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothing more agreeable with the nature of praiers, than that this law be prescribed and appointed to them, that they breake not forth rashly, but follow faith going before them. To this principle Christ calleth vs al with this saying: I say vnto you, whatsoever things ye require, beleeue that ye shall receive them, and they shall happen to you. The same also he confirmeth in another place. Whateuer ye ask in prayer beleuving, yee shall receive. Wherewith agreeth James saying, If any neede were dome, let him ask of him which giueth to all men frely, and vbrace thenot: but let him ask in faith not doubting. Wherein setting doubting as contrarie to faith, he doth most fidelly expresse the nature of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he addeth, that they obtaine nothing which call vpon God in wauering and doubt, and do not determine in their harts whether they shall be heard or no. Whom he also compareth to waues which are dowerfully tossed and driven about of the wind. Whereupon in another place he calleth a right praire, the praire of faith. Againe when God so oft affirmeth that he will giue to every one according to his faith, he signifieth that we obtaine nothing without faith. Finally it is faith that obtaineth what soever is granted by praire. This is ment by that notable saying of Paul, which the foolish men do take no heed vnto. How shall any man call vpon him, in whom he hath not beleueth? But who shall beleue, vntele he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the word of God. For conueying by degrees the beginning of praire from faith, he plainly affirmeth that God cannot be sincerely called vpon of any other, than them to whom by the preaching of the Gospell his mercifulnesse and gentlenesse hath been made known, and familiarly declared.

12 This necessitie our aduersaries do not thinke vpon. Therefore when we bid the faithful to hold with assured confidence of mind that God is favourable and beareth good will to them, they thinke that we speake a most great absurditie. But if they had any sence of true praire, they would truly understand that God cannot be rightly called vpon without that steadie feeling of Gods good will. Sith no man can well perceiue the force of faith, but he which by experience feeleth it in his hart: what may a man profite by disputing with such men which doe openly shew, that they neuer had any thing but a vaine imagination? For of what force, and how necessarie is that assurednesse which we require, is chiefly learned by iocnuation. Whom whofeath not, he bewraeth that he hath a very dul conscience. Let vs thereforasse, leaving this kind of blinde men, sticke fast in that sayyng of Paul, that God cannot be called vpon of any other, but them that know his mercy by the Gospell, and are fully perswaded that it is ready for them. For what manner of sayyng should this be? O Lord, I am verily in doubt whether thou wilt heare me: but because I am distressed with carefulnesse, Ihee to thee, that thou mayst helpe me if I be worthy. This was not the wonted maner of all the holy ones, whose praiers we reade in the scriptures. Neither hath the holy Ghoufe thus taught vs by the Apoffle which biddeth vs to go to the heavenly throne with confidence, that we may obtaine grace, and when in another place he teacheth that we haue boldnes and assurance in confidence by the faith of Christ. We must therefore hold.

hold fast with both hands this assurednes to obtaine what we asketh both the Lord with his owne voice to commandeth vs, and all the holy ones teach it by their example: if we wil pray with fruit. For that onely prayer is pleasing to God which springeth out of such a presumption of faith (as I may so call it) & is grounded upon a dreadlesse certainty of faith. He might haue bin content with the bare name of faith, but he not onely added confidence, but also furnished the same with libertie or boldnes, by this mark to put difference betweene vs and unbelieuers, which doe in deed also pray to God as we doe, but at adventure. For which reason the whole Church praieth in the pshaire: Let thy mercy be vpon vs, as we put our trust in thee. The same condition is also spokenc of in another place by the Prophet: In what day I shall criue, this I knowe that God is with mee. Againe, In the morning I will direct my felse to thee, and I wil watch. For of these words we gather, that praiers are in vain cast into the aire, vnlesse hope be adjoined, from whence as out of a watch tower we may quietly waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeeth the order of Pauls exhortation. For before that he moose the faithfull to pray in spirite at all times with wakefulness and diligence, he first of all biddeth them to take the shield of faith, the helmet of saluation, and the sword of the spirite which is the word of God. Now let the readers here call to remembrance that which I haue before faide, that faith is not ouerthrowne where it is ioyned with acknowledging of our misery, neediness, and slthinesse. For with how heauen weight focuer of euill doings the faithfull feel the themselves to be overloden or greed, and that they be not onely voide of all things which may procure favour with God, but also that they be burdened with many offences which may woorthily make him dreadfull to them: yet they caue not to present themselves, neither doth this feeling make them so afraid but that they still refourt to him, for as much as there is no other way to come to him. For praiery was not ordaind, whereby we should arrogantly aduaunce our selves before God, or esteeme at great value any thing of our owne, but whereby confessing our guiltiness, we would be bewaile our miseries to him, as children doe familiarly open their complaints to their parents. But rather the unmeasurable heape of our euils ought to be full of spurers or prickes to pricke vs forward to pray. As also the Prophet teache eth vs by his example, saying: Heale my soule, because I haue sinned against thee. I grant in deed that in such sayings should be deadly prickings vnlesse God did happe: but the most good father of his incomparable tender kindnesse hath brought remedie in fit season, whereby appeasing all troubles, swaging all cares, wiping away scares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea, and taking away all doubts (much more all stops) he might make vs an easie way.

13 And first when he commandeth vs to pray, he doth by the very same com- mendment accuse vs of wicked obstinacie, vnlesse we obey him. Nothing could be more precisly commanded, than that which is in the Pshaire: Call vpon me in the day of trouble. But for as much as among all the duties of godlinesse, the Scripture commandeth none more often, I need not to carrie longer vpon this point. Aske (faith our master) and ye shall receive: knock, it shall be opened to you. Howbeit here is also with the commandement joind a promise as it is necessary. For though al men confesse that the commandement ought to be obeyed, yet the most part would flee from God, whe he calleth, vnlesse he promiseth that he would be caue to be intreated, yea & would offer himselfe. These two things being publisshed, it is certaine that who focuer make delayes that they come not straight to God, are not only rebellious & disobedient, but also are proud guilty of infidelity, because they distrust the promises. Which is so much more to be noted, because hypocrites under the colour of humility & modestie do as well proudly despise the commandement of God, as disredit his gentle calling, yea & defraud him of the chiefe part of his worship. For after that he hath refued sacrifices, in which at that time all holiness seemed to stand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing & most precious to him above al other, to be called vp in the day.

the day of need. Therefore where he requireth his owne, and encourageth vs to cheerfulnesse of obeying, there are none so gay colours of doubting that may excuse vs. Wherefore how many testimonies are commonly found in the scriptures whereby we are commanded to call upon God, so many standards are set vp before our eyes to put affiance into vs. It were rashnes to rush into the sight of God, vnlesse hee did prouent vs with calling vs. Therefore he openeth vs the way with his owne voice, saying: I will say to them, Yee are my people: and they shall say to me, thou art our God. Wee see how he prounceth them that worship him, and willeth them to follow him, and therefore it is not to be feared that this should not be a verie sweete melodie which hee uttereth. Speciallie let this notable title of God come in our minde, whereupon if we stay, we shall easilly passe over all stops. Thou God that hearest prayer, even to thee shall all flesh come. For what is more lowly or more alluring, than that God be garnished with this title which may after more that nothing is more proper to his nature, than to grant the desire of humble suiters? Hereby the Prophet gathereth that the gate standeth open not only to a few, but to all men: because he speaketh even to all in this saying: Call vs in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorifie mee.

According to this rule David laeth for himselfe that a promise was given him, that he may obtaine what hee asketh: Thou Lord haue revealed into the care of thy seruant: therefore thy seruant hath found his hart to praine. Whereupon we gather that he was fearfull, sauing in so much as the promise had encouraged him. So in another place hee uttereth himselfe with this generall doctrine. Hee will doe the will of them that fear him. Yea, and this yee may note in the Psalmes, that as it were breaking his course of praying hee paffeth ouer sometime to the power of God, sometime to his goodnes, sometime to the truth of his promises. It might seeme that David by vnreasonable thrutning in of these sentences, made mangled prayers: but the faithfull know by vs and experience, that seruentnesse faineth vnlesse they put thee nourishments into it, and therefore in praying the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his worde is not superfusious. And so by the example of David: let it not greeue vs to thraunt in such thinges as may refeth fainting hearts with newe liuell strength.

14 And it is woonderfull that such great sweetenesse of promisses we are either but coldly or almost not at all moued, that a great part of men wandring about by compasses had rather leaving the fountain of living waters, to digge for themselves drike pits, than to embrace the liberalitie of God freely offered them. An inuincible tower is the name of the Lord (faith Solomon) to the righteous man shall flee, and he shall be faued. And 10el, after that he had propphecied of that horrible destruction which was at hande, addeth this notable sentence. Whoseoeuer calleth vs in the name of the Lorde, shall bee safe: which sentence we knowe to pertaine properlie to the course of the Gospel. Scarcely euerie hundredth man is moued to go forwarde to meete God. He himselfe crieth by Esay: Yee shall call vs upon me, and I will haue you, yea, before that yee criie, I will answer you. And the same honour also in another place he vouchsaft to give in common to the whole Church, as it belongeth to all the members of Christ. He hath cried to me, I will haue him, I am in trouble with him, that I may delier him. Neither yet (as I have alreadie faide) is it my purpose to reckon vs all the places, but to choose out the cheefe, by which we may take a taste how kindly God allureth vs vnto him, and with howe fraite bonds our vnthankfulness is bounded, when among so sharpe prickings our sluggishesnes still maketh delaye. Wherefore let these sayings alwaye be founde in our cresses: The Lord is nie to all them that call vs upon him, that call vs upon him in truth: also these sayings which wee have alledged out of Esay and 10el, by which God affirmeith that he is heedful to heare prayers, yea and is dehted as with a sacrifice of sweete favour, when wee call our Lord vpon him. This singular fraite wee receiue of the promisses of H.I

God, when we make our prayers not doubtfully and fearlessly: but trusting upon his words, whose majesty would otherwise make vs afraid, we dare call upon him by the name of Father, for as much as he vouchsafteth to put this most sweete name into our mouths. It remaineth that we having such allurements should know that we have thereby matter enough to obtaine our prayers: for as much as our prayers stande vpon no merite of our owne, but all their woorthines and hope of obtaining are grounded vpon the promises of God, and hang vpon them: so that it needeth none other vnderpropping, nor looketh vpward hither or thither. Therefore we must determine in our minde, that although we exell not in like holiness as is prayed in the holy fathers, Prophets and Apostles, yet because the commandement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is also common, if we rest vpon the word of God, in this right we are fellowes with them. For God (as we haue before shewed) promising that he will be gentle, and mercifull to all, giueth cause of hope to all even the most miserable that they shall obtaine what they aske. And therefore the generall formes are to bee noted, from which no man (as they say) from the first to the last is excluded: onely let there bee present a pureenesse of heart, misliking of our felues, humilitie, and faith: let not our hypocriite vnholie abuse the name of God with deceitfull calling vpon it: the most good father will not put backe them, whom he not only exhorteth to come to him, but also moueth them by all the meanes that he can. Hereupon commeth the manner of praying of David which I haue euuen now rehearsed. Lo thou haft promised, Lord, to thy seruante: for this cause thy seruante at this day gathereth courage, and haft found what prayer he might make before thee. Now therefore O Lord God, thou art God, and thy words shalbe true. Thou haft spoken to thy seruante of these benefits: begin therefore, and do them. As also in another place, Perroune to thy seruante according to thy word. And all the Israelites together, so oft as they armee themselues with remembrance of the covenante, do sufficiently declare that we should not pray fearfully, whereas the Lord do appointeth. And herein they followed the examples of the fathers, specially of Iacob, which after that he had confessed that he was unworthy of so many mercies which he had receaued at the hand of God, yet he faieith that he is encouraged to require greater things because God had promised that he would do them. But whatsoever colours the unbelieuers do pretend, when they flee not to God so oft as necessitate presseth them, when they seeke not him nor craue his helpe, they do as much defraud him of his due honor as if they made to themselues new Gods and idols: for by this meanes they decree that he is to them the author of all good things. On the other side, there is nothing stronger to deliuere the godly from all doubt, than to be armed with this thought, that no stop ought to stay them while they obey the commandement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleasing to him than obedience. Here againe that which I faie before more clearly appeareth, that a dreads spirit to pray agreeth well with feare, reverence, and carefullnes: and that it is no aburditie to say that God raiseth vp the overthrowen. After this manner those formes of speech agree well together which in seeming are contrarie. Jeremia and Daniel say that they throw downe prayers before God. In another place Jeremia saith: Let our prayer fall downe in the sight of God, that he may haue mercie on the remnant of his people. On the other side, the faithful are oftimes said to lift vp prayer. So speaketh Ezekiel, requiring the prophet to make intercefsion for him. And David desireth that his praters may ascended as incense. For although they being perswaded of the fatherly loue of God, cheerfully commit themselues into his faithfull keeping, and doubt not to craue the helpe which he freely promiseth: yet doth not all carefullnes lift them vp, as though they had cast away shame, but they ascended vpwarde by degrees of promises, that they still remaine humble suppliants in the abatement of theirsellues.
the grace of Christ. Lib. 3. 234

15 Here are questions objected more than one. For the Scripture reporteth that the Lord granted certain desires which yet brake forth of a minde not quiet nor well framed. Verily for a suit cause: loatham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichem, to the destruction which afterward came upon them: but yet God kindled with frequenes of anger and vengeance following his execution seemeth to allow ill tempered violent passions. Such heate also carried Samson when he said, Strengthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the uncircumcised. For though there were some piece of good zeal mingled with it: yet a hope, and therefore faultie greedinesse of vengeance did beare rule therein. God granted it. Whereupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the prayers be not framed according to the prescribed rule of the word, yet they obtaine their effect. I answere first that a general lawe is not taken away by singular examples: againe, that sometime special motions have been put into a few men, whereby it came to passe that there was another consideration of them than of the common people. For the answere of Christ is to be noted, when the Disciples did vndescreetly define to counterfaite the example of Eli., that they knew not with what Spirit they were endued. But we must goe yet further, and say that the prayers do not alwaies please God which he granted: but that, so much as is neceffity for example that is by cleere praisfe made plaine which the Scripture teacheth, namely that he succoureth the miserable, hearreth the groanings of them which being vnjustly troubled do crave his helpe: that therefore he executeth his judgements, when the complaints of the poore rife vp to him, although they be vnworthie to obtaine any thing be it never so little. For how oft hath he taking vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lustes, and other wicked doings of the vngodly, subduing their boldnes and rage, and also overthrowing their tyrannous power, testified that he helpe them vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beate the ayre with praying to an uncertaine Godhead? And one Psalm plainly teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet doe not pearce into heaven by faith. For he gathereth together those prayers which necessity wringeth no leffe out of the vbelievers than out of the godly by the very feeling of nature: to which yet he proueth by the effect, that God is favourable. Is it because he doth with such gentlenesse testify that they be pleasing to him? No. But to enlarge or to set out his mercy by this circumstance, for that eu'n to vbelievers their prayers are not denied: and then the more to pricke forward his true worshippers to pray, when they see that prophane wallings sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithfull should swaine from the law laid vp upon them by God, or should enuie the vbelievers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they obtained their desire. After this manner we have saide, that the Lord was bowed with the Repentance of Ahab, that he might then by this example how easie he is to entreat toward his elect, when true turning is brought to appease him. Therefore in the Psalme he blameth the Jews, that they having by experience prooued him so easie to grant their prayers, yet within a little after returned to the stubborneesse of their nature. Which also plainly appeareth by the historie of the Judges: namely that so oft as they wept, although their tears were deceitfull, yet they were deluert out of the hands of their enemies. As therefore the Lord indifferently bringeth forth his Sunne vpon the good and the euill: so doth he also not despire their weepings, whose cause is righteous and their miseries worthie of helpe. In the meantime he no more hearreth these to salvation, than herein minisfretre foode to the despiers of his goodnes. The question seemeth to be somewhat harder of Abraham and Samuel: of whom the one being warranted by no word of God, prayed for the Sodomites: the other against a manifest forbidding prayed for Saul. Likewis is it of Jerome which prayed that the City might not be destroyed. For though their requestes were denied, yet it seemeth hard to take faith fro them. But this solution shal (as I trust) satisfie sober readers: that they being

Hh 2 instructed

Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receiue

instructed with the generall principles, wherby God comandeeth them to be mercifull enough also to the vnworthie, were not altogether without faith, although in a speciall case their opinion deceived them. Auguffine wrighteth wisely in a certayne place. How (faith he) do the holy ones pray by faith, to aske of God contrarie to that which he hath decreed? Even because they pray according to his will: not that hidden and vnchangeable will, but the will which he inspireth into them, that he may heare them after another maner: as he wise ly maketh difference. This is well saide: because after his incomprehensible counsell he do tempereth the successe of things, that the prayers of the holy ones be not voide which are wrapped both with faith and eorror together. Neither yet ought this more to auaine to be an example to follow, than it excludeth the holy ones themselves, whom I dare not to have paied measure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promise, we must aske of God with a condition adjoyned. To which purpose seuerely that saying of David, Watch to the judgement which thou haft commanded: because he telleth that he was warranted by a speciall oracle to aske a temporal bennefit.

Lib. de cœli. Dei.
22. cap. 1.

Phal. 7, 7.

The rules of prayer must not be rigorously applied.

16 This also it is profitable to note, that those things which I have spoken of the power rules of right prayer, are not so exactly required with extreme rigour, that God refuseth the prayers in which he shall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a ferventnes of zeal and well ordered requestes. We have saied that although prayer be a familiar tale of the godly with God, yet we must keepe a reverence and modestie, that we giue not loofe reins to all requestes whatsoever they be, & that we desire no more than God giueth leave: and then, leaft the mightie of God should grow in contempt with vs, that wee must lift our minds vpward to a pure and undefiled worshipping of him. This no man hath ever performed with such pureesse as it ought to be. For (to speake nothing of the common sorte) how many complaints of David do favour of intemperance: not that hee meant of purpose to quarrell with God, or carpe against his judgements: but because hee fainting for weakness, found no other better comfort, than to cast his sorowes into his bosome. Yet and God beareth with our childish speech and pardoneth our ignorance, so oft as anything vnadvisedly escapeth vs: as truly without this tender bearing, there should be no libertie of praying. But although David's mind was to submit himselfe wholly to the will of God, and he prayed with no lesse patience than desire to obteaine: yet there arose yea boile out sometimes troublous affections, which are much disagreying from the first rule that we haue fet. Specially we may perceive by the conclusion of the xxxix. Psalm, with how great vehemenie of sorrow that holy man was carriied away, that he could not keepe measure. Cælla (faith he) from me, till I goe away and be not. A man would say that he like a desperate man defiereth nothing else but that the hand of God ceaseth, he might not in his eul. His faith it not for that he wish an annowed minde runneth into such outrages, or (as theprobate are wont) would haue God to depart from him: but onely he compreheneth that the wrath of God is too heauie for him to bare. In these tentations also there fall out ofteentimes requestes not well framed according to the rule of the word of God, and in which the holy ones do not sufficiently weigh what is lawfull and expedient. Whence ouer prayers are spotted with these faults, they deserveth to be refuseth: yet if the holy ones do bewaile, correct themselves, and by and by come to themselves againe, God pardoneth them. So they offend also in the second rule, because they are ofteentimes driven to wrangle with their owne coldnesse, and their need and miserie doth not sharply enough pricke them to pray earnestly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes do slippe aside, and in a maner wander away into vanitie. Therefore in this behalfe also there is neede of pardon, lest our faint, or vnperfect, or broken and wandering prayers haue a denial. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with minds lifted vpward,
But as Lam. 51.19. the whither tan fedvuth full dence prayers neither Father. That is, which when he lifteth vp his hands doth not in his own conscience find himselfe dull, because his hart refleth vpoun the ground? As touching the asking of forgiveness of sinnes, although none of the faithfull doe ouerpaue it, yet they which are truely exercised in prayers doe feele that they bring scarcely the tenth parte of that sacrifice, of which David speaketh. An acceptable sacrifice to God is a troubled Spiriite: a broken and humbled hart O God thou wilt not despife. So there is alway a double pardon to be asked, both because they know themselves gilte in consciences of many faultes, with feeling whereof they are not yet so touched, that they dislike themselves so much as they ought: and also that, so much as it is given them to profit in repentance and in the feare of God, they being throwne downe with iuft sorrow for their offences, should pray to escape the punishment of the Judge. Cheefely the feeblenes or imperfection of faith corrupteth the prayers of the faithful, vnlesse the fender mercie of God did helpe them. But it is no maruell that God pardoneth this default, which doth oftentimes exerciseth the that be his with tharp instructions, as if he shoulde of purpose quench their faith. This is a moft hard tentation, wheth the faithfull are full are compelled to cry: How long wilt thou be angry vpon the prayer of thy servant? as though all the very prayers made God more angrie. So when Jeremie layeth: Lam. 3.8. The Lord hath that out my praire, it is no doubt that he was shaken with a violent pang of trouble. Innumerable such examples are commonly found in the Scriptures, by which appeareth that the Faith of the holy ones was oftentimes mingled and tossed with doubtings, that in beleuening and hoping they were rayed yet some vnfaithfulness: but because they come not so far as it is to be wished, they ought to iudeaue so much the more that their faultes being amended, they may dayly come nearer to the perfect rule of praying, & in the meane time to feele in how great a depth of emuls they be drowned, which euin in the very remedies doe get to themselves new diseaues: if there is no praire, which the Lord doth not worthyly loth, vnlesse he winke at the Ipots wherewith they are all besprinkled. I recresse not these things to this end that the Faithfull should carelesly pardon themselves anything, but that in tharpelie chaffing themselves they should strive to overcome these stopes, and although Satan labour to stop vp all the waies, that he may keepe them from praying, yet nevertheless they should break through, being certainly perswaded, that although they be not vncombed of all hindrances, yet their iudaeuaue doe please God, and their prayers are allowed of him, so that they traual and bend themselves thitherward, whither they doe not by and by attaine.

17 But forasmuch as there is no man worthie to present himselfe to God, and to come into his sight: the heauenly Father himselue to deliuer vs both from blame and fear which should have throwne downe all our courages, hath giuen to vs his Sonne Jesus Christ our Lord, to be an Adoucate & Mediator with him for vs, by whose leading we may boldly come to him, traueting that we have such an intercellor, nothing shall be denied vs which we ask in his name, as nothing can be denied him of the Father. And hereunto must all be referred whatsoever we have herebefore taught concerning Faith: becaufe as the promises of God vnto vs vnto Christ for our Mediator, so vnlesse we hope of obtaining stay vpon him, it taketh from it felfe the benefite of praying. For so soone as the terrible majestie of God commeth in our minde, it is impossible but that we should tremble for fear, and the acknowledging of our owne unworthinesse shoulde drive vs farre away, till Christ come betweene vs and him, which may change the thron of dreadfull glory into the thron of grace: as also the Apostle teacheth that we may be bold to appeare with all confidence which shall obtaine mercy and find grace in helpe comming in fit seacon. And as there is a lawe that we should call vpon God like as there is a promise giuen, that

That the rofidence of our owne imbecilie discourage vs not too much, we are to release our felves in praire with the mediation of Christ Jesus besides his name another way of intercellor should be mentioned in our prayers.

they shall be heard which call upon him: so are we peculiarly commanded to call upon him in the name of Christ, and we have a promise set forth, that we shall obtain that which we shall ask in his name. Hither (faith he) ye have not asked any thing in my name: ask & ye shall receive. In that day ye shall ask in my name, & whatsoever ye ask, I will do that the father may be glorified in the son. Hereby it is plain without controversy, that they which call upon God in any other name than of Christ, do stubbornly break his commandements, and regard his will as nothing, & that they have no promise to obtain any thing. For (as Paul saith) all the promises of God are in Christ, yea and Amen, that is to say, they are confirmed and fulfilled.

18 And the circumstance of the time is diligently to be marked, where Christ commandeth his disciples to flee to intercession to him after that he is gone vp into heaven. In that hower (faith he) ye shall ask in my name. It is certain that even from the beginning none were heard that prayed, but by mean of the Mediator. For this reason the Lord had ordained in the lawe, that the Priest alone entering into the sanctuarie, should bare upon his shoulders the names of the tribes of Israel, and as many precious stones before his breast: but the people should stand a far off in the porch, and from thence should joyn their prayers with the priest. Yea and the sacrifice attendant hereto, that the prayers should be made sure and of force. Therefore that shadow of ceremonial of the law taught that we are all shut out from the face of God, and that therefore wee neede a Mediator, which may appear in our name, and may beares upon his shoulders, and hold vs fast bound to his breast, that wee may be heard in his person: then that by sprinkling of blood our prayers are cleansed, which (as wee have alreadie faide) are never voide of sliomness. And wee see that the holy ones, when they desired to obtaine any thing, grounded their hope upon sacrificies, because they knewe them to bee the stablisings of all requests. Let him remember thy offering (faith David) and make thy burnt offering fatte. Hereupon is gathered that God hath beene from the beginning appeareth by the intercession of Christ, to receive the prayers of the godly. Why then doth Christ appoint a new heire, when his Disciples shall beginne to praise in his name, but because this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, so doth much more commendation with vs. And in this same sense he had faide a little before: Hither to yee have not asked anything in my name, now ask ye. Not that they understood nothing at all of the office of the Mediator (whereas all the Jews were instructed in the principles) but because they had not yet clearly known that Christ by his ascending into heaven should be a sure patron of the Church than he was before. Therefore to comfort their griefe of his absence with some speciall fruit, he claimeth to himselfe the office of an advocate, and teacheth that they have hitherto wanted the chief benefit, which it shall be granted them to enjoy, when being aided by his mediation, they shall more freely call upon GOD: As the Apostle faith that his new way is dedicate in his blood. And so much lesse excusable is our frowardness, vnlesse we doe with both armes (as the saying is) embrace so inestimable a benefit, which is properly appointed for vs.

19 Now whereas he is the onely way, and the onely entrie by which it is granted vs to come in unto God: who so do swave from this way and forfake this entrie, for them there remaineth no way nor entry to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, judgement, and terror. Finally saith the Father hath marked him for our head, and guide, they which do in any wise swave or goe away from him, do labour as much as in them lieth to race oue and disfigure the market which God hath imprinted. So Christ is set to be the onely Mediator, by whose intercession the Father may be made to vs favourable and easy to be entreated. Howbeit in the meantime the holy ones have their intercessions left to them, whereby they do mutually commende the saluatic one of another to God, of which the Apostle maketh mention.

But those be such as hang upon that one only intercession: so farre is it off, that they minish any thing of it. For as they spring out of the affection of love, wherewith we embrace one another, as the members of one body: so they are also referred to the venitie of the head. Sith therefore they also are made in the name of Christ, what doe they else but refuse that no man can be holpen by any prayers at all, but with the intercession of Christ? And as Christ with his intercession withstandeth not, but that in the Church we may with prayers be advocates one for another: so let this remain certaine, that all the intercessors of the whole church ought to be directed to that only one. Yea and for this cause we ought specially to beware of vnthankfullnes, because God pardoning our vnworthines, doth not onely give leave to every one of vs to praise for himselfe, but also admiteth vs to be entreaters one of another. For, where God appointeth advocates for his Church which deserve worthily to be reacted if they pray privately every one for himselfe: what a pride were it to abuse this libertie to darken the honour of Christ?

20 Nowe it is a mere trifling, which the Sophisters babble, that Christ is the Mediatour of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediatours of intercession. As though Christ having performed a Mediation for a time, hath given to his servants that eternall Mediatourship which shall never die. Full curteously forfooth they handle him, that cut away so little a portion of honor from him. But the Scripture faith farre otherwise, with the simplicitie whereof a good man ought to be contented, leaving those deceivers. For where John faith, that if any doe sinne, we have an advocate with the Father, Christ Iesus: doth he meaneth that he was once in olde time a patrone for vs, and not rather assigned to him an everlastinge intercession? How say we to this that Paul also affirmeth, that he sitteth at the right hande of God the father and ma-keth intercession for vs? And when in another place he calleth him the onely Medi-atour of God and men: meaneth hee not of prayers, of which hee had a little before made mention? For when hee had before said that intercession must bee made for all men: for proofs of that saying, hee by and by addeth, that of all men there is one God and one Mediatour. And none otherwise doth Augustine expound it, when he faith thus: Christian men do mutually commende themselves in their prayers. But hee for whom none maketh intercession, but hee for all, he is the onely and true Mediatour.
Paul the Aposelle, though he were a principall member vnder the head (yet because he was a member of the body of Christ, and knew that the greatest and truete priest of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inward places of the vaile, to the holy of holy places, but by expresse and stedfast truth into the innermost places of heauen, to a holinesse not shadowish but eternall ) commendeth himselfe also to the prayers of the faithfull. Neither doeth hee make himselfe a Mediatour betwene the people and God, but prayeth that all the members of the bodie of Christ should mutually praise for him: because the members are carefull one for another:
and if one member suffer, the other suffer with it. And that so the mutuell prayers one for another of all the members yet trauailing in earth, may ascend to the head which is gone before into heauen, in whom is appeasement for our sinnes. For if Paul were a Mediatour, the other Aposellses should also be Mediatours: and if there were manie Mediatours, then neither shoulde Paulus owne reason stande fast, in which hee had said, For there is one God, one Mediatour of one GOD and men, the man Christ, in whom we also are one if we keepe the venitie of faith in the bond of peace.
Againe in another place. But if thou secke for a Priest, hee is above the heauen, where he maketh intercession for thee, which in earth died for thee. Yet do we not dreame that he faileth downe at the fathers knees and in humble wise entreateth for vs: but wee vnderstannde with the Aposelle, that he feeleth the death and intercession for vs:
yet so that being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, into the ende of the ages

Cap. 20. Of the manner how to receive

of the world he alone carrieth to God the prayers of the people abiding a farre off in the porch.

21 As touching the Saints, which being dead in the flesh do lie in Christ, if we give any prayer at all to them, let us not dreame that they themselves have any other way of asking than Christ which only is the vate, or that their prayers be acceptable to God in anie other name. Therefore saith the Scripture calleth vs backe from all to Christ onely: fis the heavenly fathers wills to gather together all in him: it was a point of too much dulness, I will not lay madnesse, so to desire to make for our selves an entrie by them, that we should be led away from him without whom even they themselves have no entrie open. But, that this hath beene visuall done in certaine ages past, and that it is at this day done whereof our Papistry reigneth, who can deny? Their merites are from time to time thrust in, to obteine the good will of God: and for the most part, Christ being passed over, God is praid to by their names. Is not this, I beseech you, to conuey a waie to the office of that onlie interceffion, which we have affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Again, what Angell or Diuell ever recouled to any man anie one syllable of this their interceffion which there men faine? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? True it is when the wit of man so feakesh for it selfe succours, wherewith we are not certifie by the word of God, it plainlie be wraith his owne dullnesse. If we appeale to all their confessions that are delughted with the interceffion of Saints, we shall finde that the fame commeth from no other ground, but because they are grieved with carefullnesse, as though Christ were in this behalfe either too weake or too rigorous. By which doublenenesse first they dishonor Christ, and rob him of the title of only Mediator, which as it is given him of the Father for a singular prerogative, so ought not also to be conueayd away to any other. And in this verie doeing they take the gorie of his birth, they make vs his croffe, finally whethersoever he hath done or suffered they spoile and defraud of the due praishe thereof: for all tend to this end that he may be decede and be accompted the onlie Mediator. And therewith they cast away the goodness of God, which gave himselfe to be their Father. For he is not there father, vnlesse they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they utterly deny vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection toward them, than which there can nothing be more kind or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth only him to vs,sendeth vs to him, and sayeth vs in him. He (faith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we speake to the Father: our eye, by which we see the Father: our right hand, by which we offer vs to the father, other wise than by whom interceffion neither we nor all the Saints have any thing with God. If they answere that the common prayers which they make in Churches, are ended with this conclusion adiogned, Through Christ our Lord: this is a tripling shifte because the interceffion of Christ is nolesse prophane when it is mingled with the prayers and merites of dead men, than if it were utterly omitted and only dead men were in our mouth. Again, in all their Letanies, Hymnes, and Profes, where no honour is left vngiven to dead Saints, there is no mention of Christ.

22 But their foolish dulnesse proceded so farre, that here we have the nature of superstition expressed, when it hath once shaken off the bridle, is wont to make no end of running affray. For after that men once begin to looke to the interceffion of Saints, by little and little there was giuen to every one his speciall doing, that according to the diuerfitie of businesse, sometime one and sometime another should be called upon to be interceffor: then they tooke to themselves every one his peculiar Saint, into whose faith they committed themselves as it were to the keeping of safeguarding Gods. And not only (wherewith the Prophet in the old time reproched Israel) gods were set vp according to the number of Cities, but even to the number of persones. But fith the Saints referre their desires to the onely will of God, and behold

hold it and rest upon it: he thinketh foolishly, and fleshly, yea and sloaеhously of them, which assigneth to them any other prayer, than whereby they pray for the coming of the kingdom of God: from which that is most faire distant which they blame to them, that every one is with private affection more partially bent to his own worshippers. At length many abstained not from horrible sacrilege, in calling now upon them not as helpers, but as principal rulers of their salvation. Loe whereunto foolish men do fall when they wander out of their true standing, that is, the word of God. I speake not of the greater monstrouousnesse of vngodlineffe, wherein although they be abominable to God, Angels, and men, they are not yet ashamed nor wearie of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catherine, and such other, doe mumble Peter nofter, Our father. This madnes the Patient do so not care to heale or restraine, that being allured with the sweete savour of gaine they allow it with relishing it. But although they turn from themselves the blame of their hainous an offence, yet by what colour will they defend this that Lay or Medard are prayed vnto, to looke downe vpon and help their femmants from heaven? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to command her sonne to do that which they aske? In the old time it was forbidden in the Counsell at Carthage, that at the altar no direct prayer should be made to Saints. And it is likely then that when the holy men could not altogether suppress the force of the naughty custome, yet they added at least this restraint that the publike prayers should not be corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter pray for vs. But how much further hath their due weight much increased, which stickes not to give away to dead men that which properly belongeth onely to God and Christ?

23 But whereas they travaile to bring to passe that such intercession may seeme to be grounded vpon the authortie of Scripture, therein they labour in vaine. We reade oftentimes (lay they) of the prayers of Angels: and that not onely: but it is said that the prayers of the faithful are by their hands caried into the sight of God. But if they lift to compare holy men departed out of this present life, to angels: they should prove that they are ministering spirits, to whom is committed the ministerie to looke to our safetie, to whom the charge is given to keepe vs in all our wayes, to go about vs, to admonish and counsell vs, to watch for vs: all which things are giuen to Angels, but not to them. How wrongely they wrap vp dead holy men with Angels, appeareth largely by so many diuers offices, whereby the Scripture putteth difference betweene some and other some. No man dare execute the office of an advocate before an earthly judge, vnlesse hee be admitted, from whence then haue worrie from great libertie, to thrust vnto God those for patrons to whom it is not read that the office is mingned? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to looke vnto our safetie, wherefore they do both frequent holy assemblies, and the Church is a stage to them, wherein they wonder at the diuerse and manifold wisdome of God. Who so convey away to other that which is peculiar to them, verily they confound and pervert the order set by God, which ought to have beene inuiolable. With like handomnesse they proceed in allleging other testimonies. God said to Jeremie: If Moses and Samuel should stand before me, my foule is not to this people. How (lay they) could he have spokenthus of dead men, vnlesse he knew that they made intercession for the living? But I on the contrary side gather thus, that God thereby appeareth that neither Moses nor Samuel made intercession for the people of Israel, there was then no intercession at all of dead men. For which of the Saints is to be thought to be carefull for the safetie of the people, when Moses ceased, which in this behalfe farre passed all other whiche he liued. But if they follow such sleight suitteries, to say that the dead make intercession for the living, because the Lord said, If they should make intercession: I will much more colourable reason in this manner: In the extreme necessitie of the people Moses made not intercession, of whom it is said, if he shall make intercession. Therefore it is likely that none other maketh intercession, but they are all so farre from the gentleness, goodnesse, and fatherly carefulnesse of Moses. This forsooth they get with caulling, that they be wounded with the fame weapons, wherewith they thought themselves gaily fenced. But it is very fond that a simple sentence should be wrested, because the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not spare the offences of the people, although they had seen Moses to be their patron, or Samuel, to whole prayers he had shewd himselfe so tender. Which sentence is most clearly gathered out of a like place of Ezekiel. If (faith the Lorde) these three men were in the citie, Noe, Daniel, and Job, they shall not deliver their sonsnes and daughters in their righteousnesse: but they shall deliver onely their owne soules. Where it is no doubt that he meant if two of them should happen to reunite againe, for the third was then alive, namely Daniel, who (as it is known) did in the first flourishing of his youth shew an incomparable example of godlinesse: let vs then leave them whom the Scripture plainly sheweth to haue ended their course. Therefore Paul, when he speake of David, teacheth not that he doth all prayer help his posteritie, but onely that he serveth his owne time.

24. They answered againe: shall we then take from them all prayer of charitie, which in the whole course of their life breathed nothing but charitie and mercie? Verily as I will not curiously search what they doe, or what they must vpon; so it is not likely that they are carried about hither and thither with divers and particular requests: but rather that they doe with a staid and unmoved will, long for the kingdom of God, which standeth no lesse in the destruction of the wicked, than in the salvation of the godlie. If this be true, it is no doubt that their charitie is contained in the communion of the body of Christ, and extendeth no further, then the nature of that communion beareth. But now though I grant that they pray in this manner for vs, yet they do not therefore depart from their owne quietnesse, to be diuely drawn into earthly cares: and much lesse must we therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby followe that they must so doe, because men which live in earth may command one another in their prayers. For this doing serueth for nourishing of charitie among them, when they doe as it were part and mutually take vpon them their necessitie among themselues. And this they doe by the commandement of the Lord, and are not without a promise, which two things, I use alway the chiefe place in prayer. All such considerations are farre from the dead, whom when the Lord hath conuated from our companie, he hath left to vs no enterchange of doings with them, not to them with vs, so farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man allege, that it is impossible but that they must kepe the same charitie toward vs, as they be joyned in one faith with vs: yet who hath revealed that they have so long cares to reach to our voices? and so piercing eyes to watch our necessitie? They pray in their shadows I wot not what of the brightnesse of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on high behold the matters of men beneath. But to affirm that, specially with such boldnesse as they dare, what is it else but to goe about by the drunken dreames of our owne braines, without his word to pace and breake into the hidden judgements of God, and to read the Scripture vnder feete which so oft pronounceth that the wisdome of the flesh is enemie to the wisdome of God, which wholly condemneth the vanity of our natural wit, which willth all our reason to be throwen downe, and the onely will of God to be looked vnto of vs.

25. The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defend this their lie, they most naughtily wret. But Iacob (saith they) praieth that his name and the name of his Fathers Abraham and Isaac be called vpon our posteritie. First let vs see what forme of calling vpon this is among the Israelites. For they call not vpon their Fathers, to help them; but they beseech God to remember his servants Abraham, Isaac and and Jacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for them that speake to the Saints themselves. But because those blocks (such as their dulness) neither understand what it is to call upon the name of Jacob, nor why it is to be called upon, it is no manner if in the verie forme of it they so childishly stumble. This maner of speech is not feldome found in the Scriptures. For Esay faith that the name of the men is called upon over the women, when they haue them as their husbands vnder whose charge and defence they live. Therefore the calling upon of the name of Abraham upon the Israelites, standeth in this when they convey their pedegree from him, and do with Islemee memorie honor him for their author and parent. Neither doth Jacob this becaus he is carefull for the enlarging of the remoue of his name: but for asmuch as he knew that the whole blest dille of his potterie consisted in the inheritance of the covenant which God had made with him: he wished that that which he seeth should be the chiefe of all good things to them, that they be accounted in his kindred: For, that is nothing els but to convey to them the sucession of the covenant.
They againe when they bring such remembrance into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of dead men: but do put the Lord in mind of his covenant, whereby the most kinde father hath promiseth that he will be fauorable and beneficall to them for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacobs sake. How little the holy ones did otherwise leane upon the merits of their father, the common sayings of the Church in the Prophet testith, Thou art our Father, and Abraham knew vs not, and Israel was ignorant of vs.
Thou Lord art our Father and our redeemer. And when they say thus, they add erewithall, Returne O Lord for thy servants sake: yet thinking vpon no intercesion, but bending their mind to the benefite of the covenant. But now we haue the Lord Iesus, in whose hand the eternall covenant of mercie is not onlie made, but also confirmed to vs: whose name should we rather vs in our prayers? And because these good matters will have the Patriarches to be by these words made intercessors, I would faine knowre of them way in so great a rout Abraham the Father of the Church hath no place at all among them. Out of what sinke they fetch their advocates, it is not unknown. Let them answere me, how ftr it is that Abraham, whom God preferred above all other, and whom he advanced to the highest degree of honor, should be neglected and suppressed. Verily when it was evident that such vs was unknown to the old Church, they thought good for hiding of the newnesse to speake nothing of the old Fathers: as though the diuerfie of names excused the new and forged manner. But whereas some object that God is praised vnto, to haue mercie on the people for Davids sake, it doth so nothing at all make for defence of their error, that vs a most strong profece for the contufation thereof. For if we consider what perfon David did heare: he is seuered from all the assembly of the Saints, that God should stabish the covenant which he hath made in his hand. So both the covenant is rather considered than the man and vnder a figure the onely intercession of Christ is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belonged only to David, in so much as he was the image of Christ, accordeth not with any other.

26 But this forsooth moueth some, that it is often times read that the praiers of Saintes have beene heard. Why so? Euen because they praied. They trusted in thee (faith the Prophet) and they were seene: they cried, and they were not confounded.
Therefore let vs also pray as they did, that we may be heard as they were. But these men, otherwisse than they ought, do wrongfullie reason, that none shall be heard but they that have once bee seen. How much better doth James say? Elia (faith he) was a man like to vs: and he prayed with praiers that it should not raine, and it rained not vpon the earth in three yeeres and five moneths. Againe he praied, and the heaven gau raine, and the earth gave her fruitie. What? doth he gather any singular prerogative of Elia, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is the continuall strengthe of godly and pure praiers, to exhout vs likewise to praiy. For we do niggardlie.
Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receiue

niggardly construe the readines and gentlenesse of God in hearing them, vnlesse we be by such experiences confirmed into a more sure affiance of his promises, in which he promiseth that his care shall be inclined not to one, or two, nor yet to a few, but to all that call upon his name. And so much leffe excusable is this foolishnes, because they feeme as it were of set purpofe to despire so many admonitions of Scripture.

David was oft delivred by the power of God. Was it that he should draw that power to himselfe, that we should be delivred by his helpe? He himselfe affirmeth otherwife: The righteous looke for me, till thou render to me. Againe, The righteous shall fee, and they shall rejoyce, and truft in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, and he hath answered him: There be in the Psalms many such prayers, in which to crave that which he requireth, he moueth God by this manner, that the righteous be not made ashamed, but many by his example be raised vp to hope well. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore every holy one shall pray to thee in fittime. Which place I haue so much the more willingly rehearsed, because the lewed babbllers which doe let out to hire the service of their waged roonge, have not beene ashamed to alledge it to prooue the inceffion of the dead.

As though David meant any thing else, than to shew the fruite that shall come of the meruifie and gentlenes of God, when he shall be heard. And in this kind we must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well toward our selves as others, is no flender helpe to confirme the credite of his promises. I haue unrehearsed many places, where David setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of confidence, because the readers of the Psalms that commonly find them without seeking. This selfe same thing had Jacob before taught by his owne example: I am wyse of all thy mercies, and of the truth which thou haft performed to thy servant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Jordan, and now I come forthe with two bands. He alleageth in deed the promis, but not alone: but he also fooureth the effect, that he may the more courageously in time to come truft that God will be the same towards him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are weary of their liberalitie, or whose abilitie is wafted: but he is to be weighed by his owne nature, as though wisely doth, where he faith, Thou haft redeemed me, O God that speakest truth. After that he hath given to God the praises of his salvation, he addeth that he is a true speaker, because vnlesse he were continually like himselfe, there could not be gathered of his benefits a sufficiently strong reason of affiance and calling upon him. But when we know that so oft as he helpeth vs, he sheweth an example and proofe of his goodnes, we need not to feare that our hope shall be put to shame or disappoint vs.

The directing of praiers amongst Saines departed is the offering of iniurie vnto God, and of defrace vnto Christians interceffion, which by the mutuall praiers of Saines as ye liuing, is not prejudiced.

27 Let this be the tumme. Whereas the Scripture setteth out this vnto vs for the cheefe point in the worshipping of God, (as refuing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this dutie of godlines) praying is not without manifet sacrilege directed to other. Wherefore alfo it is laid in the Psalme. If we fretch foorth our hands to a strange God, shall not God require these things? Againe whereas God will not be called vpon but of Faith, and expressly commandeth prayers to be framed according to the rule of his word; finallly whereas Faith founded vpon the word, is the mother of right praiers: So foone as we swarde from the word, our prayer must needs be corrupted. But it is already shewed, that if the whole Scripture be sought, this honor is therein challenged to God only. As touching the office of interceffion, we have also shewed that it is peculiar to Christ, and that there is no praiers acceptable to God, but which that Mediator halloweth. And thogh the faithful do one for another offer prayers to God for their brethren, we have shewed that this abateth nothing from the onely interceffion of Christ: because they altogether standing vpon it doe command both themselves and other to God. Moreover we have taught that this is vnfitly drawne to dead men, to whom we never read that it hath been commanded that they should pray for vs. The Scripture doth oftimes exhort vs to mutuall dooings of this duty one for another: but but of dead men there is not so much as one syllable; yea and James joyning these two things together, that we should confess our felues among our felues, and mutually pray one for another, doth secretly exclude dead men. Therefore to condemn this error, this one reason sufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, springeth out of faith, and that Faith commeth of the hearing of the word of God, where is no mention of the fained intercession, because superstition hath rashly gotten to it selfe petitions which were not given them of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many forms of prayer, there is no example found of this patronship, without which in the Papacie they beleue that there is no praiser. Moreover it is certaine that this superstition hath growen of distrustfulness either because they were not content with Christ to be their intercessor, or have altogether robbed him of his praise. And this latter point is easily proued by their shamelesse; because they have no other stronger argument to proue that we have neede of the intercession of Saints, than when they object that we are unworthy of familiar access to God. Which we in deed grant to be most true: but thereupon we gather, that they leave nothing to Christ, which etime seems his intercession nothing woorth, vnlesse there be adioyned George, Hypolite, or such other visors.

28 But although prayer properly signifieth onely wishes and petitions: yet there is so great affinitie betweene petition and thanksgiving, that they may be fittly comprehended both under one name. For, these speciall lottes whiche Paul rehearseth, fall under the first part of this division. With asking and craving we powre forth our desires before God, requiring as well those things that seeme to spread abroad his grace, and set forth his name, as the benefits that are profitable to our life. With gaigng of thanks, we doe with due praise magnifie his good doings towards vs, acknowledging to be received of his liberalitie whatsoever good things do come to vs. Therefore David comprehended these two parts together, saying: Cal upon me in the day of necessitie, I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vain commandeth vs to vie both. For we have said in another place, that our necessities are so great, and the experience of this crieth out that we are on every side pinched and pressed with so many and so great distresses, that all haue cause enough why they should both figh to God, and in humble state call upon him. For though they be free from adversities, yet the guiltines of their wicked doings, & their innumerable assaults of temptations ought to pricke toward the most holy to aske remedy. But in the sacrifice of praise & thanksgiving there can be no interruption without hainous sin, forasmuch as God receaft not heape vpon dueste men dueste benefits to drive vs though we be flacke & flowe, to thankfulness. Finally so great & so plenteous large of his benefites doth in a maner overwhelme vs: there are so many and so great miracles of his scene on every side which way soever thou turnesthee, that we never want ground and matter of praise and thanksgiving. And that these things may be somewhat plainlie declared: fieth all our hopes & wealth stande in God (which wee have before sufficently proued) that neither we nor all our things can be in prosperitie but by his blessing: wee must continually committ our felues and all our things to him. Then whatsoever we purpose, speake, or doe, let vs purpose, speake, & doe vnder his hand & will, finally vnder the hope of his helpe. For all are pronounced accurst of God, which dene or determine any purposes vpon their owne, or of anie other, which without his will, & without calling vpon him doe enterprize or attempt to begin any thing. And whereas we haue dueste times already said, that he is dueste honored when he is acknowledged the author of all good things: therupon following that all those things are so to be received at his hand, that we yeeld continually thanks for them: & that there is no other right way for vs to vie his benefites, which grow & proceed from his liberality to no other end, but that we should be continually bulted in confessing his praise & giving of thanks. For Paul, when he testifieth that they
Of the manner how to receive more to the opinion of men than to the secret judgment of God. In the mean time, that the common prayers of the Church should not grow into contempt, God in olde time garnished them with glorious titles, specially where he called the temple the house of prayer. For, by this laying he both taught that the chief part of the worshipping of him is the duty of prayer: and that to the ende that the faithful should not with one consent exercise themselves in it, the temple was set vp as a standard for them. There was also added a notable promise: There abideth for thee, O God, praise in Sion: and to thee the vow shall be paid. By which words the prophet telleth vs, that the prayers of the Church are never voice: because the Lord alway ministreth to his people matter to sing upon with joy. But although the shadowes of the law are ceased: yet because the Lords will was by this ceremonie to nourish among vs also the vnitie of faith, it is no doubt that the same promise belongeth to vs, which both Christ hath established with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

34 Now as the Lord by his wordes commanded the faithful to use common prayer: so there must be common temples appointed for the vsing of them: where who so refuse to communicate their prayer with the people of God, there is no cause why they should abuse this pretence, that they enter into their chamber that they may obey the commandement of the Lord. For he that promiseth that he will do whatsoever two or three shall ask being gathered together in his name, teacheth that he despiseth not prayers openly made: so that boasting and seeking of glory of men be absent, so that vaunted and true affection be present which dwelleth in the secret of the hart. If this be the right use of temples (as truly it is) we must againe beware that neither(as they have begun in certaine ages past to be accounted) we take them for the proper dwelling places of God from whence he may more recently bend his care vnto vs: nor faile to them I wote not what secrete holiness, which may make our prayer more holy before God. Forth we our selues be the true temples of God we must pray in our selues if we will call vs God in his owne holy temple. As for that grossenesse, let vs which have a commandement to call vs God in spirit and truth without difference of place, leave it to the Jews or the Gentiles. There was in deede a Temple in olde time by the commandement of God for offering of prayers and sacrifices: but that was at such time as the truth lay hid figured under such shadowes, which being now lucely expressed vnto vs doth not suffer vs to sticke in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Jewes themselves with this condition, that they should incline the presence of God, within the walls thereof, but whereby they might be exercised to behold the image of the true temple. Therefore they, which in any part thought that God dwelleth in temples made with hands, were sharply rebuked of Esay and Stephen.

31 Here moreover it is more than evidente, that neither voice nor song, if they be vised in prayer, have any force, or doe any whit profite before God, vnslese they proceede from the deepe affection of the hart. But rather they provoke his wrath against vs, if they come onely from the lips and out of the throate: for as much as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockerie of his maiestie: as we gather out of the wordes of Esay, which although they extende further, yet certaine also to reprooue this fault. This people(faith he) commeth neere to me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: but their hart is farre from me: and they have feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men. Therefore behold I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at. For wise some shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neither yet doe we here condemn voice or singing, but rather doe highly commend them, so that they accompany the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and holde it intent in thinking upon God: which as it is slipperie and rolling, easily flacketh and and is diuersely drawn vnlike; it be staid with diuers helps. Moreover whereas the glorie of God ought after a cermayne manner to shine in all the partes of our bodie, it speecially behooueth that the toong be applied and auowed to this seruice both in finging and in speaking which is properly created to shew forth and display the praise of God: But the cheefe vse of the toong is in publike prayers, which are made in the afsemblie of the godly: which tends to this ende, that we may all with one common voice, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God whom we worshippe with one spirite and one faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, every one of his brother, may receive the confession of Faith, to the example whereof they may bee both allured and stirred.

32. As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is cermayne that it is not onely most auciente: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, we may gather by the words of Paul. I will sing in Spirite, I will sing also in minde. Again to the Colossians, Teaching and admonishing you, mutually in Hymnes, Psalmes, and spirituall songs, singing with grace in your harts to the Lorde.
For in the first place he teacheth that we should sing with voice and heart in the other he commendeth spirituall songs, wherewith the godly doe mutually edifie themselves.
Yet that it was not vninterfall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the Church of MilMaulist Begin began to sing, when while Basil the mother of Valentinian cruelly raged against the true faith, the people more vted watchings then they were wont: and that afterward the other western Churches followed. For he had a little before said that this manner came from the Eastern Churches. He telleth also in his second booke of Retractions that it was in his time received in Afric. One Hilarius (faith he) a rular did in a cuiuerse place, where souere he could, with malicious blaming raile at the manner which then began to be at Carthage, that the Hymnes at the altar should be pronounced out of the booke of Psalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had been offered was distributed to the people. Him I answered at the commandement of my brethren. And truly if song be tempered to that grauate which be commeth the presence of God and Angels, it both procureth dignitie and grace to the holy actions, and much vnlesse to stirre vp the minde to treu affection and fruency of praying. But we must diligently beware that our cares be not more heedfully bent to the note, then our minde to the spirituall sense of the wordes. With which perl Augustine in a cerme place faith that he was so moued, that he sometime wished that the manner which Athenians kept should be establiished, which commanded that the Reader should sound his words with so small a bowing of his voice, that it should be liker to one that readeth then to one that singeth. But when he remembered how much profite he himselfe had receuued by singing, hee inclined to the other side. Therefore vning this moderation, there is no doubt that it is a most holy and profitable ordainace. As on the other side what songs fouer are framed onely to sweemes and delight of the cares, they both become not the majestie of the Church, and cannot but highly displeasie God.

33. Whereby it also plainly appeareth that common prayers are to bee spoken not in Greke among Latince men, nor in Latince among Frenchmen or Englishmen (as it hath heretofore beene ech where commonly done) but in the peoples mother toong, which commonly may bee understood of the whole assemblie: (era much as it ought to be done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receive no fruite at all of a sound not understood, but they which have no regard neither of charitie nor of humanitie, should at least have been somwhat moued with the authority of Paul, whose words are nothing doubtfull. If thou blesse (faith he) in spirite, how shall he be that filleth the place of an vnlearned man answer Amen to thy blessing, if he knoweth not what thou failest? For thou in deed giuest thankes, but the other is not edificed.
Who therefore can sufficiently wonder at the vnbridled licentiousnes of the Papists,
Cap. 20. Of the manner how to receive

which, the Apostle so openly crying out against it, feare not to roar out in a strange toong most babling prayers, in which they themselfes sometime vnderstand not one syllable, nor would have other folks vnderstand it? But Paul teacheth that we ought to do otherwise. How then? I will pray (faith he) with spirite, I will pray also with minde: I will sing with spirite: I will sing also with mind: signifying by the name of spirite, the singular gift of toongs, which many being endued with, abused it, when they feuered it from the minde, that is, from vnderstanding. But this we must aliogether thinke: that it is by no meane possible, neither in publicke nor in private prayer, but that the toong without the heart must highly displeafe God. Moreover we must thinke that the minde ought to be kindled with ferventnes of thought, that it may far summit all that the toong may expresse with vterrance. Finally that the toong is not necessarie at all for private prayer, but so farre as the inward feeling either is not able to suffice to enkindle itselfe, or the vheemensie of inkindling violently carrieth the worke of the toong with it. For though very good prayers somet ime be without voice, yet oftentimes besideth, that when the affections of the minde is fervent, both the toong breaketh forth into voice, and the other members into gelland without exceeffe how. Hereupon came the muttering of Hans, and such a like thing all the holy ones alwaye feele in themselves, when they burst out into broken and unperfect voices. As for the geslures of the bodie which are wont to be vsd in prayer (as kneeling and vncouering of the head) they are exercises by which we endeauour to rise vp to a greater reverencing of God.

34 Now we must learne not onely a more certaine rule, but also the verie forme of praying: namely the same, which the heauenly father hath taught vs by his beloved sonne: wherein we may acknowledge his vnmeasurable goodnes and kindnes. For beside this he warneth and exhorteth vs to seek him in all our necessitie (as children are wont to飞e to their fathers defense, so o’t as they be troubled with any distresse) because he sawe that he did not sufficiently perceiue this, how slender our pouerrie was, what were meete to be asked, and what were for our profit: he prouided alio for this our ignorance, and what our capacitate wanted, he supplied and furnished of his owne. For he hath prescrib’d to vs a forme wherein he hath as in a Table set out whatsoever we may desire of him, whatsoever vaileth for our profit, and whatsoever is necessarie to ask. Of which his gentlenes we receive a great fruit of comfort that we understand, that we ask no inconvenient thing, no vuleeming or vaft thing, finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, that we ask in a manner after his owne mouth. When Plateau the follicte of men in making requestes to God, which being granted, it oftentimes befell much to their owne hurt: he pronounced that this is the best manner of praying taken out of the old Poet, King Jupiter gave vnto vs the best things both when we ask them, and when we do not ask them, but command euill things to be away from vs: even when we ask them. And verly the heathen man is wise in this, that he judgeth how prouilous it is to ask of the Lord that which our owne desirous soueretie vth: and therewithal he bewrayeth our unhappie cafe: that we cannot once open our mouthes before God without danger, vnlesse the spirite do instruct vs to a right rule of praying. And in so much greater estimation this pruillag is worthie to be had of us, with the onely begotten son of God misterke words into our mouth which may deluer our mind from all doubting.

35 This whether you call it forme or rule of praying is made of sixe petitions. For the cause why I make not to them that divide it into euens parts, is this, that by putting in this adversatatie word (but) it steemeth that the Evangell meant to joine these two pieces together, as if he had said, Suffer vs not to be oppressed with temptation, but rather helpe our weakesness, and deluer vs, that we faint not. The old writers also think on our side, so that now that which is in Matthew added in the seuenth place, is by way of declaratiue to be joined to the sixe petition. But although the whole prayer prayer is such that in every part of it regard is specially to be had of the glory of God, yet the three first petitions are peculiarly appointed to God's glory, which alone we ought in them to look unto without any respect (as they say) of our owne profit. The other three have care of vs, and are properly assign'd to ask those things that are for our profit. And when we pray that the name of God be hallowed: because God will prove whether he be loved and honored of vs freely or for hope of reward, we must then thinke nothing of our owne commoditie, but his glory must be set before vs, which alone we must behold with fixed eyes: and no otherwise ought we to be minded in the other prayers of this sort. And even this turneth to our great profit, that when it is sanctified as we pray, it is also likewise made our sanctification. But our eyes (as it is said) must winke and after a certaine manner be blind at such profit, so as they may not once looke at it: that if all hope of our private benefit were cut off, yet we should not cease to with and pray for this sanctification and other things which pertain to the glory of God. As it is seene in the examples of Moses and Paul, to whom it was not greevous to turn away their minde and eies from themselves, and with vehement and inflamed zeal to with their owne destruction, that though they were with their owne lofe, they might advance the glory and kingdom of God. On the other side when we pray that our dayly bread be giuen vs: although we wish that which is for our owne commoditie, yet here also we ought cheerfully to seek the glory of God, so that we should not ask it vnlesse it might turne to his glory. Now let vs come to the declaring of the prayer itself.

Our Father which art in heaven.

A comfort to Christians that they may call God their Father.

1 Cor. 12. 32. 1 John 3. 16. 1 Tim. 2. 13.

36 First in the very entry we meete with this which we said before that all prayer ought none otherwise to be offer'd of vs to God than in the name of Christ, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For since we call him Father, truely we alleadge for vs the name of Christ. For by what boldnesse might any man call God, Father? who should hurft foorth into fo great rashnesse, to take to himselfe the honor of the Sonne of God, vnlesse we were adopt'd children of grace in Christ? Which being the true Sonne, is giuen to him to vs to be our brother: that that which he hath proper by nature, may by the benefit of adoption be made ours, if we doe with sure Faith embrace so great bountifulnesse. As John faith, that power is giuen to them which beleue in the name of the only begotten Sonne of God, that they also may be made the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himselfe our Father, and will be so called of vs, by this sweetenesse of name deliuer-

37 Neither let vs alleadge that we are worthily made fearefull with conscience of sinnes, which may make a Father be heuer to mercifull and kinde, dayly to be displeased.
Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receive displeased. For if among men the sonne can with no better advocate plead his cause to his Father, and by no better meanes get and recover his fauour being lost, than if he himselfe humbly and lowly, acknowledging his fault, do beseech his fathers mercie (for then the fatherly bowels cannot hide them selves but must bee moued at such prayers) what shall that father of mercies do, and the God of all comfort? shall not he rather heare the teares and groanings of his children intreating for themselves (especially if he doth call and exhort vs to do so) than any other intercessions whatsoever they be to the succour whereof they do so carefullie fle, not without some shew of deli parte, because they differfull of the kindnes and mercifullnes of their father? This overflowing plenty of fatherly kindnes he depainted and setheth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father lovingly embraceth the sonne that had estranged himselfe from him, that had riotously wasted his substance, that had every way grievously offended against him, and he tarieth not till he do with words crue pardon, but he himselfe preventeth him, knoweth him a faire off returning, of his owne will geeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueth him into fauour. For, setting out in a man this example of so great gentlenes, he minded to teach vs how much more plentiful kindnes we ought to looke for at his hand, who is not onely a Father, but also the best and most mercifull of all Fathers, howfaucuer we be vnkinde, rebellious and naughtie children, so that yet we cast our felues vpon his mercie. And that he might make it to be more assuredly beleued, that he is such a Father to vs, if we be Christianes: he willed not onely to be called Father, but also by express name Our Father: as if we might thus talke with him, O Father which hast so great naturall kindnesse toward thy children, so great easinesse to pardon, wemy children, call to thee & pray to thee, being assured and fully perswaded, that thou bearest no other affectation to vs than fatherly, howfaucuer we be vnworthie of such a father. But because the small capacities of our heart conceive not so great vnmeasurable easinesse of fauour, not onely Christ is to vs a pledge and earnest of our adoption, but also he giueth vs the spirit for wines of the same adoption, through whom we may with a free and lowd voice criie Abba, Father. So oft therefore as any dayly shall wildestand and vs, let vs remember to aske of him, that correcting our fearefullnes he will set before vs that spirit of couragion to be our guide to pray boldly.

Whereas wee are not so taught that every one should severally call him his owne father, but rather that we should all in common togethre call him Our Father: thereby we are put in mind, how great affectation of brotherly love ought to be among vs, which are allgethre by one same right of mercie and liberalitie, the children of such a father. For we all have one common Father, from whom commeth whatsoever good thing may beide vnto vs, there ought to bee nothing seuerall among vs, which we are not readie with great chearfulnesse of minde to communicate one to another, so much as neede required. Now if we be so destitue, as we ought to be, to reach out hand and helpe one to another, there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commend them to the care & prudence of the most good father, who being well pleased and faunouring, nothing at all can be wanting. And verily euene this same we owe to our father. For as he that truly and hartily loueth any father of houehold, doth also embrace his whole househould, with love and good will: likewise what love and affectation we beare to this heavenly Father, we must shew toward his people, his househould and his inheritance, which he hath so honored, that he hath called it the fulnesse of his onely begotten Sonne. Let a Christian man therefore frame his prayers by this rule, that they be common, and may comprehend all them that bee brethren in Christ with him: and not onely those whom he prefently seeth and knoweth to be such, but all men that liue vpon earth: of whom, what God hath determined, it is out of our knowledge seeing that it is no lette godly then natural to with the best to them, & hope the best of them. Howbeit we ought with a certain singular affection to beate a speciall inclination to them of the houshold of Faith, whom the Apostle hath in every thing peculiarly commendeth vnto vs. In a summe, All our prayers ought to be so made, that they have respect to that community which our Lord hath stablished in his kingdom and his house.

39 Yet this withstandeth not, but that we may specially pray both for our selves and for certaine other: so that yet our minde depart not from having an eye to this community, nor once swear from it, but apply all things vnto it. For though they be singularly spoken in forme, yet because they are directed to that mark, they cease not to be common. All this may be easily vnderstood by a like example. The commandement of God is general, to reheue the neede of all poore: and yet they obey this commandement which to this end doe helpe their poore, whom they know or see to be in neede, although they passe over many whom they see to be pressed with no leffe necessitie: either because they can not know all, or be not able to helpe all.

After this maner they also doe not against the will of God, which having regard vnto and thinking vpon this common fellowship of the Church, doe make such particular prayers, by which they do with a common mind in particular words, commend to God themselues or other, whose necessitie God willed to be more neerely known to them. Howbeit all things are not like in praire and in bestowing of goods. For, the liberalitie of giving cannot be vfed but toward them whose need we have perceived: but with praires we may helpe euen them that are most strange and most vnknownen to vs, by how great a space of ground lowere they be distant from vs. This is done by the general forme of prayer, wherein all the children of God are contained, among whom they also are. Hereto we may apply that which Paul exhorteth the faithfull of his time, that they lift vp every where pure hands, without strife: because when he warneth them that strife thusteth the gate against praires, he willeth them with one minde to lay their petitions in common together.

40 It is added, that he is in heauen. Whereupon it is not by and by to be gathred that he is bound fast inclosed and compassed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon also confesseth that the heauens of heauens cannot containe him. And he him selfe faith by the Prophet that heauen is his scate, and the earth his footstoole. Whereby visibly he signifieth that he is not limitted in any certaine coast, but is spread abroad throughout all things. But because our minde (such is the grosseesse of it,) could not otherwise conceiue his vnspakeable glory, it is signified to vs by the heauen, than which there can nothing come vnder our sight more ample or fuller of majestie. Sith therefore wherefore our senses comprehend any thing, there they vse to fasten it: God is set out of all place, that when we will seeke him we should be raised vp above all sense both of body and soule. Againe by this maner of speaking he is lifted vp above all chaunce of corruption and change: finally it is signified that he comprehendeth and containeth the whole world and governeth it with his power. Wherefore this is all one as if he had been called of infinite greatness or height, of incomprehensible substance, of vncaurable power, of everlasting immortalitie. But while we haue this, we must lift vp our minde higher when God is spoken of, that we darre not any earthly or fleshy thing of him, that we measure him not by our small proportions, nor draw his will to the rule of our affections. And therewithall is to be raised vp our affiance in him, by whose providence and power we understand heauen and earth to be governed. Let this be the summe, that vnder the name of Father is set before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, that he may be called vpon with assiured Faith: and that the familiar name of Father is not onely applied to stablish affiance, but also availeth to hold fast our minde that they be not drawen to doubtfull or fained Gods, but shoulde from the ouely begotten sonne climbe vp to the ouely Father of Angels and of the Church: then, that because his seate is placed in heauen, we are by the governance of the world put in minde that not without cause we come to him which with present care commandeth his owne will to meeke vs. Who so come to God (faith the Apostle) they must first believe that there is a God; then that he is wiser and kinder to all them that seeke him. Both these things Christ affirmeth to be proper to his father, that our faith may be staid in him; then, that we may be certainly persuaded that he is not careles of our safety: because he will not give reason to vs to extend his providence. With which introductions Paul prepareth vs to pray righteously. For before that he biddeth our petitions to be opened before God, he faith thus, Be ye carefull for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Wherby appeareth that they doubtfully and with perplexity rolle their prayers in their minde which have not this well settled in them, that the eie of God is upon the righteous.

The following of the name of God which is the first petition both in that which be teacheth and that which be worketh, earnestly to be longed for and craved in prayer. Psal.33.18. Psal.48.11.

41 The first petition is, That the name of God be hallowed, the neede whereof is joyned with our great fame. For what is more shamefull then that the glorie of God should be partly by our vnthankfulness, partly by our maliciousnes darkened: and so much as in it lieth by our boldnes & furious stubbornnes, vterly blasted out? Though all the wicked would burst themselues with their wilfulnes full of sacrilege, yet the holinesse of the name of God gloriously thineth. And not without cause the Prophet crieth out, As thy name O God, so is thy praise into all the ends of the earth. Wherefore as the name of God is known, it cannot be but that his strengthes, power, goodnes, wisdom, rightouesnes, mercy, and truth must shew it selfe, which may draw vs into admiration of him, and thinke vs to publish his praise. Sith therefore the holinesse of God is so shamefully taken from him in earth, if we be not able to rescue it, we be at the least commancted to take care of it in our prayers. The sense is, that we with the honour to be given to God which he is worthie to have, that men never speake or think of him without most high reverence; whereunto is contrarie the vnholie abusing, which hath alway beene too common in the world, as at this day also it rangeth abroad. And hereupon commeth the necessitie of this petition, which if there lusted in vs any godlines, though it were but a little, ought to have beene superfluous. But if the name of God haue his holinesse sake, when being feuered from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, here we are commanded not only to pray that God will deliver that holy name from all contempt and dishonour, but also that he will subdue all mankind to the reverence of it. Now whereas God discloseth himselfe to vs partly by doctrine, and partly by works, he is no otherwise sanctified of vs, than if we giveth to him in both behalves that which is his, and so embrace whatsoever shall come from him: and that his feuerite haue no lesse praise among vs than his mercifullenesse, so as much as he hath in the manifold diverte of his works imprinteth marks of his glorie which may worthily draw out of all toonges a confession of his praise. So shall it come to passe that the Scripture shall have full authority with vs, and that no good successfull shall hinder the blessing which God deserveth in the whole course of the governning of the world. Againste, the petition also tendeth to this purpose, that all vngodlinesse which defleeth this holy name, may bee destroyed and taken away: that whatsoever things doe darken and diminish this sanctifying, as well flanders as mockings, may bee driven away: and when God subdueth all sacrileges, his glorie may thereby more and more thine abroad.

42 The second petition is, that The kingdom of God may come: which although it containe no new thing, is yet not without cause seuered from the first: because if we consider our owne drownes in a thing greatest of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it selfe to haue beene most well known, bee with many words of beaten into vs. Therefore after that we have beene commancted to pray to God to bring into subjection, and at length vitally to destroy whatsoever spoteth his holy name: now is added a like and in a manner the same request, that his kingdom come. But although wee haue already set forth the definition of his his kingdom, yet I now briefly rehearse, that God reigneth when men as well with forsaking of the pleasures as with despising of the world & of the earthly life, do so yield themselves to his righteousnes, that they aspire to the heavenly life. Therefore there are two parts of this kingdom: the one that God correct with the power of his Spirit all corrupt desires of the flesh, which do by multitudes make warre against him: the other, that he frame all our sentences to the obedience of his government. Therefore none do keep right order in this prayer, but they which begin at themselves, that is to say, that they be cleaned from all corruptions which trouble the quiet state of the kingdom of God, and infect the purenesse thereof. Now because the word of God is like a kingly scepter, we are here commanded to pray he will subdue the minds and hearts of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the secret instinct of his Spirit he uttereth the effectual force of his words, that it may be advanced in such degree as it is woorthie. Afterward we must come downe to the wicked which do obstinately and with desperate rage resift his authority. God therefore setteth vp his kingdom by humbling the whole worlde: but that in diverse maners: because he teacheth the wantonnesse of men, and of other some he breaketh the vaunted pride. This is daily to be wished that it be done, that it may please God to gather to himselfe Churches out of all the coastes of the world: to enlarge and encrease them in number, to enrich them with his gifts, to establish right order in them: on the other side to overthrow all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to scatter abroad their counsels, to cast downe their enterprises. Whereby appeareth that the endeavour of daily proceeding is not in vaine commanded vs: because the matters of men, are neuer in so good cafe, that filthinesse being shaken away and cleansed, full purenesse flourisheth and is in liuely force. But the subtilitie of it is deferred unto the last comming of Christ, when Paul teacheth that God shall be all in all. And so this prayer ought to withdrawe vs from all the corruptions of the worlde, which doe devour vs from God that his kingdom should not flourish in vs, and also to kindle our endeavour to mortifie the flesh, finally to instruct vs to the bearing of the crosse: forasmuch as God will in this wile have his kingdom spread abroad. Neither ought we to take it uncontentedly that the outward man be destroyed, so that the inward man be renwed. For this is the nature of the kingdom of God, when wee submut our felues to the righteousnes thereof, to make vs partakers of his glorie. This is done when brightly setting forth his light and truth with alway newe enereafes, whereby the darknes and lies of Satan and his kigdonde may vanish away, be destroyed and perished, he defendeth them that be his, with the helpe of his Spirit, directeth them to vprightnesse, and strengeth them to continuance: but overthroweth the wicked conspiracies of his enemies, shaketh abroad their treasons and deceits, preventeth their malice, and beateth downe their stubbornnesse, till at length he killeth Antichrist with the Spirit of his mouth and destroy all vngodlines with the brightness of his comming.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Which although it hangeth upon his kingdom, and cannot be seuered from it, is not in vaine added faterall, for our grossenesse, which doth not easily or by and by conceive what it is that God reigneth in the world. It shall therefore be no absurditie if this be taken by way of planter exposition: that God shall then be king in the world when all things shall submit themselves to his will. Nowe here is not meant of his secret will whereby he governeth all things and directeth them to their ende. For though Satan and men are troubleomely carried against him, yet hee can by his incomprehensible counsell not onely turne aside their violent motions, but also drive them into order that hee may doe by them that which he hath purposed. But here is spoken of another will of God, namely that, whereunto answered willing obedience: and therefore the heaven is by name compared with the earth: because the Angels, as it is said in the Psalme, do willingly obey God and are diligently bent to doe his commandements. We are therefore commanded to wish that as in heaven nothing is done but by the becke of God, and the Angels are quietly framed to all uprightness: so the earth, all stubbornesse and persecutinelle being quenched, may be subject to such gouernement. And when we require this, we renounce the desires of our owne flesh: because whosoever doth not resigne and yeild his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth set himselfe against him, forasmuch as nothing commeth out of vs but faultie. And we are againe by this praiser framed to the forsaking of our felues, that God may gouerne vs after his will: and not that only, but that he may also create in vs new minds, and new hearts, our old being brought to nought: that we may feele in our felues none other motion of desire than a meer colent with his will: summanly that we may will nothing of our felues, but that his Spirit may gouerne our hearts, by whom inwardly teaching vs we may learn to love those things that please him, and to hate those things that displeafe him. Whereupon this also followeth, that whatsoever affections fight against his will, he may make them vaine and void. Let here be the first three chief points of this prayer, in asking whereof we ought to have the onelie glorie of God before our eyes, leaving the respect of our felues, and having no regard to any of our owne profit, which although it come hereof largely vnto vs, yet we ought not here to secke it. But alitbe all these things, though we neither thinke of them, nor with them, nor aske them, must neuertheless come to passe in their due time, yet we must with them and require them. And this to do is no small profit for our travaile, that we may seerifie and prooffe our felues to be the seruants and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeauouring and being truelie and througly givit to set forthe his honour, which is due to him being both a Lord and a Father. Who to therefore do not with affection and zeale of announcing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God be hallowed, that his kingdom come, that his will be done: they are not to be accounted among the children and seruants of God: and as all these things shall be done against their willes, so they shall tumne to their confusion and destruction.

44 Now followeth the second part of the prayer, in which we come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding farewell to the glorie of God (which as Paul wittnesseth, is to be regarded euen in meate and drinke) we should secke onelie what is profitable for our felues: but we have alreadie givin warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himselfe doth drawe vs to himselfe wholly, that he may in this wile prove our godlines. Then he graunteth vs also to have an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition, that we ask nothing for our felues but to this end that whatsoever benefite he bestowe on vs, they may set forthe his glory: forasmuch as nothing is more rightfull then that we live and die to him. But in this petition we aske of God generally all things which the use of the bodie needeth under the elements of this world, notonly wherein we may be fed and clothed, but also whatsoever he foreseeth to be profitable for vs, that we may eate our bread in peace. By which prayer briefly we yeeld our felues into his care, and commit vs to his providence, that he may feede, cherish, and preferue vs. For the most good Father disdained not to receive also our bodie into his faithfull safeguard and keeping, to exercise our Faith in these small things, when we looke for all things at his hands euen to a crumble of bread and a drop of water. For whereas it is come to passe I wrote not how by our iniquitie, that we be mouted and vexed with greater care of the flesh then of the soule: many which dare trust to God for their soule, are yet carefull for their flesh, are yet in doubt what they shal eate, and wherewith they shal be clothed: and if they have not plentie of wine, wheate, and oile aforhand, they tremble for feare. So much more do we esteeme the shadow of this life which lasteth but a moment, than that everlastinge immorta-
the grace of Christ.

Wc ought this ioined nor with onely the tented With mouth. that cur offraile is of the vnleileit are fuftained, but the other vpon fayde in Mafs) doe by themselues get vs any thing, vnleffe the blessing of God be present: yea the plenty of bread should nothing at all profite vs, vnleffe it were by God turned into nourishment. And therefore this liberalitie of God is no leffe necessarie for the rich than for the poore: because haung their cellars and their barnes full, they should yet faint for drincke and emptincsse, vnleffe they did by his grace enjoy their bread. The word This Day, or euerday as it is in the other Evangclift, and also the adieutte Daily, do bridle the too much greedines of fiaile things, wherewith we are wont to burne out of measure, and whereunto are ioyned other caules: fis if we have plentiful abundance, we do gloriously powre it out vpon pleasure, delights, boating, and other kinds of riotous excelle. Therefore we are commanded to aske only so much as is enough for our necessitie, and as it were from day to day, with this affiance, that when our heavenly Father hath fed vs this day, he will also not faile vs to morrow. Therefore how great plenty of things souer do flowe vnto vs, yet when our barnes be stuffed and our cellars full: yet we ought alway to aske our dayly bread: because we must certainly beleue that all substance is nothing, but in somuch as the Lord doth by powring our of his blussing with continuall encreas make it fruitfull: and that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but in somuch as he doth euerie houre giue vs a portion and granvt vs the vfe of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardlie suffer it fellow to be perviade: the Lord testifieth that he hath shewd a singular example thereof for all ages, when he fed his people with Manna in the wildernesse, to teach vs that man liuet not in bread onlie, but rather in the word that commeth out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that its his power alone by which our life & strenghs are sustaine, although he do minifter it vnto vs vnder bodilie instruments. As he is wont also to reach vs by the contrade example, when he so oft as he will, breake the strengh and (as he calleth it) the stale of bread, that men eating may pine, with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But whoe not being contented with daily bread, but with vnbridled greedinesse are gaping for endelss foare, or whose being full with their abundance, and carelesse by reason of the hape of their riches, doe neverthelesse flie to God with this prayer, they doe nothing else but mocke him. For, the first sort of such men aske that which they would not obtaine, yea that which they most of all abhorre, that is, to have onely daily bread, and so much as in them lieth they dissemblingly hide from God the affecti on of their countouesfiell; whereas true praiere ought to powere out before him the very whole minde it selfe, and whatsoever inwardly lieth hidden. But the other fote doe aske that which they looke not for at his hande, namely that which they thinke that they hae with themselves. In this that it is called ours the bountifull of God (as we haue sade) fo much more appeareth, which maketh that ours that is by no right due to vs. Yet that expostution is not to be rejected which I haue also touched, that by our bread is meant that which is earned with rightfull and harmislesse trauell, and not gotten with deceit and extortions: because that is alwaye other mens which we get to our felues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be giuen vs, thereby is signified that it is the onely and free gift of God, from whence ever it come to vs, yea when it shall most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne policie and trauell, and earned with our owne hands: for as much as it commeth to passe by his owne bleffing that our labours prosper well.

45 Now followeth. Forgivie vs our dets: in which petition and the next following, Christ hath breifly contained whatsoever maketh for the heavendy life: as in these two partes fiandeth the spirituall covenant which God hath made for the saluation of his Church, I will write my lawes in their hartes, and I will be mercifull to their iniquitie. Here Christ beginneth the forgiveneffe of sinnes: after this, he will by and by adoyne the second grace, that God defende vs with the power of his Spirit, and sustaine vs with his helpe, that we may fiand vs overcome against all tentations. And sinnes he calleth dets, because we are debound to pay the penaltie of them, and were by no meanes able to satisfie it, vnlesse wee were acquired by this forgiveneffe. Which pardon is of his free merciwe, when he himselfe liberally wipeth out these dets, taking no payment of vs, but with his owne merci satisfying himselfe in Christ, which hath once giuen himselfe for recompence. Therefore who fo trueth that God shall be satisfied by their owne or other mens merites, and that with fuch satisfactions the forgiveneffe of sinnes is recommodated and redeemed, they have no part of communicating of this free forgiveneffe: and when they call vpon God in this maner, they doe nothing but subscribe to their owne accustommation, yea and scale their owne condemnation with their owne witnesse. For they confesse themselves dets, vnlesse they be acquited by the benefite of forgiveneffe, which yet they doe not receive, but rather refuse, when they thultz unto God their owne merites and satisfactions. For, so they doe not beseech his merciwe, but doe appeale to his judgemen. As for them that dreame of a perfection in themselves, which taketh away neede to crave pardon, let them haue such discipes whom the itching of their cares druzeth to errors: so that it be certaine that so many discipes as they get, are taken away from Christ: for as much as he instructing all to confesse their guiltiness, receieth none but sinners: not for that he cherisseth sinnes with flatterings, but because hee knew that the faithfull are never throughly unclothed of the vices of their flesh, but that they alwaye remaine subiecte to the judgemen of God. It is in deed to be wished, yea and to be earnestly endued, that we haue performing all the partes of our dutie may truly reioice before God that we are cleane from all spot: but for as much as it pleaseth God by little and little to make against his image in vs, that there alway remaineth some infection in our fleth, the remedie ought not to have been despised. If Christ by the auhtoritie giuen to him of his Father, commandeth vs throughout the whole course of our life, to flee to cruasing of pardon of our guiltines: who shall be able to suffer these new masters, which goe about with this imagined ghost of perfect innocencie to daounce the eyes of the simple, to make the to trauell that they may be made free from all fault? Which, as Iohn witteth, is nothing else but to make God a liar. And with all one worke these lewd men by cancelling one article do teare in funder and by that mean do weaken the very foundation the whole covenant of God, wherein we have shewed that our salvation is contained: so as they be not only robbers of God, because they feuer those things so coniroyed, but also wicked and cruell because they ouerwhelme poor soules with despaire: and traitours to themseles and others, that be like them, because they bring themselves into a slothfulnesse directly contrarie to the mercie of God. But whereas, some object, that in willing the comning of the kingdom of God, we do also ask the putting away of sinne:
that is too childifh, because in the first table of this praiser is set forth unto vs most high perfection, but in this part is set forth our weaknesse. So these two things do finely agree together, that in a spring toward the maie we despise not the remedies which our necessities requireth. Finally, we pray that we may be forgiven as we our felues do forgive our debtors, that is, as we do forgive and pardon all of whomsoever we have beene in any thing offended, either vnhuftly handled in deed, or reprochfully vied in word. Not that it lyeth in vs to pardon the guiltines of the faute and offence which pertaineth to God alone: but this is our forgiving, of our owne willingnesse to lay away out of our mind wrath, hatred, and desire of reuengement, and with voluntary forgetfulness to tum over foote the remembrance of injuries. Wherefore we may not aske forgiuenesse of sinnes at the hand of God, if we do not also forgiue their offences toward vs which either do or have done vs wrong. But if we keepe any hatreds in our hearts, and purpose any reuengements, and imagine by what occasion we may hurt, yea, and if we do not endeouer to come into fauour againe with our enemies, and to denever well of them with all kinde of friendly doings, and to winne them vnto vs: we do by this prayer beeche God that he do not forgiue vs.
For we require that he grant vs the same forgiuenesse which we grant to other.
But this is to praye that he grant it not to vs, vnlesse we grant it to them. Whoso therefore be fuch, what doe they obtaue by their prayer but a more grievous judgement? Last of all it is to be noted, that in this condition that he forgiue vs as we forguine our debtors, is not therefore added for that we doe his forgiuenesse by the for-giuenesse which we grant to other, as if that cause of forgiuenesse to vs were there expressed: but by this word partly the Lords will was to comfort the weaknesse of our Faith, for he added this as a signe whereby we may be assured that he hath as surely granted to vs forgiuenesse of our finnes, as we surely know in our conscience that we have granted the same to other, if our mind be void and cleansed of all hatred, emie, and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a maie, he wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not be called to call vpon him as their Father, which being headlong hastily to reuenge, and hardly entretained to pardon, do we by this continually continuing enmities, and do cherish in them they same displeasure toward other which they pray to be turned from themselves. Which is also in Luke expressly spoken in the words of Christ.

46 The six petition (as we have said) answereth to the promise of engraving the lawe of God in our hearts. But because we do not without continuall warfare and hard and great strinings obey to God, we do here pray to be furnished with such weapons and defended with such succor, that we may be able to get the victorie:
whereby we are warned that we stand in neede not onlie of the grace of the Spirit, which may soften, bow, and direct our hearts to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby he may make vs invincible against both all the witterous entrappings and violent conflicts of Satan. But now of tentations there are manie and diverse sorts. For, both the perverse thoughts of minde prouoking vs to trespassing against the lawe, which either our owne lust, doth ministre vnto vs, or the devill Math.4.1. & 3. furreth vp, are tentations: and also those things which of their owne nature are not cuill, yet by the craft of the devill are made tentations, when they are set before our eyes, that by the occasion of them we be drawn away or do swaue from God.

And
Of the manner how to receive

And these temptations are either on the right hand or on the left. On the right hand, as riches, power, honours, which commonly doe with their glittering and shew of good so daftell the sight of men, and catch them with the bated hooke of their flatterings, that being entrapped with such deceites, or dronke with such sweetenes, they may forget their God. On the left hand, as puertrie, reproches, despisings, troubles, and such other: that they being grieved with the bitterness and hardnes thereof may be utterly discouraged, cast away faith and hope, and finally be altogether estranged from God. To these temptations of both sortes, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our owne lust, or being set against vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heavenly Father that he suffer vs not to yelde: but rather that hee uphold vs and raise vs vp with his hand, that being strong by his strength, we may stand fast against all the assaults of the malicious enemie, whatsoever thoughts he put into our minde: then, that whatsoever is set before vs on either side, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with prosperitie, nor throwne downe with aduerbite. Neither yet doe we heere require that we may feele no temptations at all, with which we have great neede to be starded vp, pricked, and pinched, leaft by too much rest we grow dull. For not in vaine did Dauid wish to be tempted: and not without cause the Lord dayly tempreth his elect, chastising them by flame, puertrie, trouble, and other kindes of Cruelie. But God tempteth after one manner, and Satan after another: Satan, to destroy, damne, confound, and throwe downe headlong: but God, that by prouing them that be his he may haue a triall of their vsnainednesse, and by exercising them may confirme their strength, to mortifie, purge by fire, and feare their fleth, which vnlesse it were in this wife restrained, would waxe wanton, and would wildly outrage about measure. Moreouer Satan affaileth men vnarmed and vnreadie, that hee may oppresse them vnware: God eu'n with tempting worketh the effect, that they which be his may patiently beare whatSOever hee tendeth upon them. By the name of the Evil, whether we understand the Deuill, or sinne, it maketh little matter. Satan in deedde himselfe is the enimie that lieth in waitre for our life: but with sinne he is armed to destroy vs. This therefore is our request, that we may not be overcome or ouerwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lord stand strong against all contrarie powers wherewith we are affaile: which is, not to yelde vs vanquished to tentations, that being receiued into his keeping and charge, and being safe by his protection: we may endure vnovercome ouer sinne, death, the gates of hell, and the whole kingdom of the deuill: which is to be delereted from euill. Where it is also to be diligently marked, that it is aboue our strength to matche with the deuill so great a warrier, and to beare his force and violence. Otherwise we should but vainely or as it were in moccage askethat which we had alreadie in our felues. Surely, they which prepare them to such a battle with trust of them felues, doe not sufficiently understand with how fierce and well armed an enimie they haue to doe. Now we pray to be delereted from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad & raging lion, whereas we should be torn in pieces with his teeth & pawes, and swallowed with his throte, vnles the Lord do deleret vs out of the midde of death: yet therewithall knowing this that if the Lord shall stand by vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrouned, we shall in his strength shew strength. Let other trust as they lift to their owne abilities and strengthes of freewill, which they think that they haue of them felues: but let it suffice vs that we stand and are strong by the onely strength of God. But this prayer containeth more than at the first sight it beareth in shew. For if the Spirite of God be our strength to figh out our combate with Satan, we shall not be able to get the victorie vnles we being filled with that Spirite shall haue put off all the weakenesse of our fleth. When therefore we pray to be delereted from Satan and the Deuill, we pray to be from time to time enriched with new encreas of the grace of God, till being fully stuffed with them, we may triumph over all euill. It seemeth hard and rough to some, that we craue of God that he leade vs not into tentation, for as much as it is contrarie to his nature to tempt, as James wittnesseth. But this question is already partly inquired, where wee finde that our owne luft is properly the caufe of all the tentations wherewith we are overcomen, and therefore woorthily beareth the blame thereof. Neither doeth James meane any thing else, but that the faults are without caufe and wrongfully laide vpon God, which we are driven to impute to our felues,becaue we knowe our selues in our conscience guiltie of them. But this withif andeth not, but that God may when it pleareth him make vs bond to Satan, cast vs away into a reprobate sense, and to filthie lustes, and so leade vs into tentation by his judgement which is righteous in deed but yet oftentimes secret: for as much as the caufe of it is often hid from men, which is yet certainly knowne with him. Whereupon is gathered that this is not vnfit manner of speaking, if we be perswaded that he doth not without caufe so oft threaten, that when the reprobate shall be striken with blindnesse and hardening of hart, these shall be sure tokens of his vengeance.

47 Those three petitions, wherewith we doe peculiarly commende vs and our things to God, doe euidently shew this which we have before saide, that the prayers of Christians ought to be common and to tend to the common edifying of the church, and to the encreafe of the communion of the faithfull. For there doth not every man pray to have any thing privately gien, but all in common together doe pray for our bread, for forgiveness of sinnes, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euill. There is furthermore adioyned a caufe why we have both so great boldnesse to ask, and so great trust to obteaine: which although it be not in the late copies, yet it agreeth more fiely in this place than that it should seeme worthwhile to be omitted, namely that his is the kingdom, and the power and the glory for ever. This is the perfect and restriet of our foule. For if our prayers were to be commended to God by their owne woorthines, who should be so bold, as once to open his mouth before him? Now howsoever we be most miserable, howsoever most vnwoorthie of all men, howsoever void of all commendation: yet wee shall never want caufe to praje, and never be defiitute of confidence: forasmuch as our father cannot haue his kingdom, power, & glorie taken away from him. At the end is added Amen, whereby is expressed the ferventnesse of desire to obteaine those things that wee have asked of God; and our hope is confirmed that all such things are alreadie obtained and shall bely be gien vs because they are promised by God, which cannot deceive. And this agreeth with that maner of prayer which we have here before rehearsed, Do it Lord for thy names sake, not for our sake, or our right ouerinnesse: whereby the holy ones do not onely expresse the end of their prayers, but also confesse that they are vnwoorthie to obteaine vnlesse God fetch the caufe from himselfe, and that their trust to speed commeth of the onely nature of God.

48 Thus haue we whatsoever we ought yea or in any wife may ask of God, set forth in this form as it were a rule of praying taught by the best Schoolmaster Christ, whom the Lord hatte sett vs to be our teacher, and whom alone he hath willed to be harkened vnto. For he both hath beene his eternall wisdome, and being made man is giuen to men the angell of great counsell. And this prayer is in all points so fully perfect, that whatsoeuer forreine or strange thing is added which cannot bee referred to it, it is vnгодliche and vnwoorthie to be allowed of God. For in this summe he hath set forth, what is meete for him, what is pleasing to him, what is necessarie for vs: finally whathe will grant. Wherefore who do dare go further, and to ask any thing of God before these, first they will add of their owne to the wisdome of God (which cannot be done without mad blaspheemie) then they holde not themselves under the will of God, but delining it doe with greedinesse wander further: finally they shall never obteaine any thing, forasmuch as they praje without faith.
Cap. 20. Of the manner how to receive faith. And there is no doubt that all such prayers are made without faith, because here wansthe worde of God, upon which unless faith be grounded, can in no wise stand. But they which forsaking the matters rule, do follow their own desires, are not only without the worde of God, but also so much as they be able with their whole endeavor are against it. Therefore Tertullian no lesse stily than truly hath called this: a lawfull prayers, secretly signifying that all other are lawlesse and unlawful.

49. We would not have these things so taken as though we were so bound with this forme of prayer, that we may not change a worde or a syllable. For there are ech where read many prayers in the Scripture, farre differing from this in wordees, yet written by the same Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vfed of vs. Many are continually put into the mouths of the faithful by the same Spirit, which in likenes of wordees do not so much agree. This onely is our meaning in so teaching, that no man should seeke, looke for, or ask any other thing at all than that which is summarily comprehended in this prayer, and which though it most differ in wordees, yet differeth not in sense. Like as it is certaine that all the prayers which are found in the Scriptures, and which doe come out of godly harts, are applieed to this, so verlie none can any where be found, which may match, much lesse passe, the perfectnes of this prayer. Here is nothing left out, that mightbe thought vpon to the prayers of God, nothing that ought to come into the minde of man for his owne profits: & the same so fully that all hope is woorily taken away from all men to attempt to make them better. In a sum, let vs remember that this is the doctrine of the wisdome of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needfull.

50. But although we have above said, that we ought alway to breeth upward with mindees lifted vp to God, and pray without ceasing: yet forasmuch as such is our weaknesses, as needeth to be vpholde with many helpees: such is our childlike, as needeth to be pricked forward with many spurs: It is good that every one of vs appoint to himselfe privately certaine hours which may not passe away without prayer, and which may have the whole affectiones of our minde thoroughly busied to that purpose: as, when we rise in the morning, before that we go to our dutes worke, when we sit downe to meate, when we have been fed by the blessing of God, when we take vs to rest. Onely let this not be a superstitious observing of hours, by which, as praying a taske to God, we may think our felues discharged for the other hours: but a training of our weaknesses, whereby it may so be exercised and from time to time stirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to look that so oft as either we our felues are in diffexte, or we see other to be in diffexte with any hardnes of a deserfue, we run straight way to him, not with feste but with harts: then, that we suffer not any prosperitie of our owne or other mens, to passe but that we recollewe that we acknowledge it to bee his with praisfe and thanksgiving. Finally, this is diligently to be obserued in all prayer, that we go not about to bind God to cernaine circumstancens, nor to appoint to him, what he shall do, at what time, in what place, and in what manner: as by this prayer we are taught to make to him no lawe, nor to appoint to him any condicion, but to leave to his will that those things which he will do, he may doe in what manner, at what time, and in what place it passefeth him. Wherefore wee make any prayer for our felues, we first pray that his will be done: where we doe alreadie submit our will to his: with which when it is refrained as with a bridle put vpon it, it may not presume to bring God into rule, but make him the judge and gouernour of all her desires.

51. If we do with mindees framed to this obedience, suffer our felues to bee ruled with the lawes of Gods prouidence, we shall easie ly learn to continue in prayer, and with longing desires patiently to waite for the Lord: being assured that although he appeare not, yet he is alway present with vs, and will when he seeth his time declare howe we not daufe earcs he gaue to the prayer, which in the eyes of men seemed to be despised, dispised. And this shall be a most present comfort, that we faint not and fall downe by depaire, if at any time God do not answere at our first requestes. Like as they are woont to doe, which while they are caried with their sudden heete, doe so call vpon God, that if he come not to them at their first brunts and bring them present helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angrie and hatefully bent against them, and casting away all hope of obtaining doe cease to call vpon him. But rather deflecting our hope with a well tempered cuennesse of minde, let vs goe forward in that perforeuance which is so much commended to vs in Scriptures. For in the Psalms we may oftentimes see how Dauid and other faithfull men, when they seeme in a manner wearied with praying, did beare the aire, because they threw away their words to God that heard them not, and yet they cease not from praying: because the worde of God hath not his full autoritie maintained, vnlesse the credit thereof bee fett above all successe of things. Moreover let vs not tempt God and prouoke him against vs being wearied with our importunacie, which many vs do to doe, which doe nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and binde him to the lawes of their covenantning, as though he were feruant to their desires: which if he doe not presently obey, they disdain, they chafe, they carpe against him, they murmure, they turmoile. Therefore to such oftentimes in his furor he being angry granteth that, which to other in his mercy he being favorable denieth. An example hereof are the children of Israel, for whom it had bene better not to have been heard of the Lord, than with flesh to eate vp his wrath.

52 But if yet at length after long looking for it our sence do not perceiue what we have preuiled with praying, and feel no fruit thereof: yet our faith shall assur vs of that, which cannot bee percieued by sence, namely that we have obtained that which was expedient for vs, for as much as the Lord doth so oft and so certainly call vpon him that he will have care of our greeces, after that they have been once laide in his bosome. And so he will make vs to possifie abundance in pouertie, comfort in affliction. For howsoeuer al other things do faile vs, yet God wil never faile vs, which suffireth the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. He alone shall suffice vs in stead of all things, for as much as he containeth in him selfe all good things, which he shall one day dill lose vnto vs at the day of judgement when he shall plainly then forth his kingdom. Beside this although God grantt to vs, yet he doth not alway answer according to the express forne of our request, but holding vs after outward seeming in suspence, yet by a meanes unknowne he sheweth that our prayers were not vaine. This is meant by the worde of John, If we knowe that he hareth vs when we ask any thing of him, we know that we haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weake superfuousnesse of words: but it is a singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doth not follow our desires, is yet gentle and fauourable to our prayers, that the hope which refeth vpon his wordes may never disspoint vs. But with this patience the faithfull doe so faire neede to be saultained, that they should not long stand vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lord doth by no light trials proue them that be his, and not tenderly doth exercise them: but oftentimes drueth them into the greatest extremeties, and when they are driven thither he suffereth them long to flieke fast in the mire, ere he give them any taste of his sweetenesse: and, as Hamanfaith, he flieeth, and quickeneth: he leadeth downe to the hells, and bringeth backe againe. What could they here doe but be discouraged, and fall headlong into depaire: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and alreadie lye dead, this thought did raise them vp, that God doth looke vpon them, and that there shall be at hande an ende of their euils? But howsoeuer they stonde fast vpon the assurednesse of that hope, they cease not in the meanes time to pray; because if there be not in praiers a steadfastnesse of continuance, we nothing preuaile with praying.

Cap. 21. Of the maner how to receive
The xxj. Chapter.

Of the eternall Election, whereby God hath predestinate some to salvation, and other some to destruction.

By now whereas the covenant of life is not equally preached to all men, and with them to whom it is preached it doth not either equally or continually finde like place: in this diuersitie the woonderous depth of the judgement of God appeareth. For neither is it any doubt but that this diuersitie also serveth the free choise of God's eternal election. If it be euident that it is wrought by the will of God that salvation is freely offered to some, and other some are debarred from comming to it: here by and by arise great and hard questiones which cannot otherwise be discusst, than if the godly minde haue that certainly established which they ought to holde concerning election & Predestination. This is (as many thinke) a combersome question: because they thinke nothing to bee lesse reasonable than of the common multitude of men some be forordained to salvation, other some to destruction. But how they wrongfully encomber themselves, shall afterwarde be euident by the framing of the matter together. Beside that in the very same darkenesse which maketh men afraid, not onely the profitableness of this doctrine, but also the most sweete fruite thereof it selfe. We shal never ye be cleerely persuyaded as we ought to bee, that our salvation floweth out of the fountain of the free mercie of God, till his eternall election bee knoone to vs, which by this comparison brightely setteth forth the grace of God, that he doth not without difference adopte into the hope of saluation, but giueth to some that which he denieth to other. How much the ignorance of this principle diminishteth the glorie of God, how much it withdraweth from the true humilitie, it is plaine to see. But Paul denieth that that which is so necessarie to bee known, is possible to bee known, vnlesse God leaving altogether the respect of workes doe choose them whome he hath determined with himselfe. In this time (faith hee) the remannts were saved according to the free election, If by grace, then not of workes: for as much as grace should be then not be grace. If of workes, then not of grace: for as much as workes should now not be workes. If we must be brought backe to the beginning of election, that it may be certaine that saluation commeth to vs from no other where than from the meere liberalitie of God: they which will have this princible quenched, doe niggardly so much as in them lieth daire which which ought gloriously and with full mouth to have beeene published, and they plucke vp the very roote of humilitie. Paul, where the saluation of the remnant of the people is ascribed to free election, cleerely teftifieth that onely then it is known that God doth by his meere good pleasure saue whom he will, and not render reward vs which cannot be done. They which that the gates, that none may be holde to come to the drafting of this doctrine, doe no lesse wrong to men than to God: because neither shall any other thing suffice to humble vs as we ought to be, neither shall wee otherwsie seele from our hart how much we are bound to God. Neither yet is there any other where the upholding faine of sounde affiance, as Christ himselfe teacheth, which to deliuer vs from all scare, and to make vs vnuaquishable amonst so many dangers, ambusies, and deadly battell, promiseth that whatsoever he hath receiued of his father to keepe, shall be safe. Whereas we gather that they shall with continuall trembling be miserable, whosoeuer they bee that know not themselves to bee the proper poftition of God: and therefore that they doe very ill provide both for themselves and for all the faithful, which being blind at these three profits which we haue touched, would with the whole foundation of our saluation to be quite taken from among vs. Moreover, hereby the Church appeareth vnto vs, which otherwsie (as Bernard rightly teacheth) were were not possible to be found, nor to be known among creatures because both ways in marriellous wise it lieth hidden within the bofome of blessed predestination, and within the Maffe of miserable damnation. But ere I enter into the matter it selfe, I must before hand in two forts speake to two forts of men. That the intreating of predestination, whereas of it selfe it is somewhat cumberome, is made verie doubtfull yea and dangerous, the curiousnesse of men is the cause: which can by no stops be restrained from wandring into forbidden compasses, & climbing vp on high: which, if it may, will leveus to God no secret which it will not search and turne ouer. Into this boldnes and importunacie forasmuch as wee commonly see many to rune headlong, and among thole some that are otherwise not culle men: hereis his occasion to warne them what is in this behalfe the due measure of their dutie. First therefore let them remember, that when they enquire upon predestination, they prince into the secret closets of the wifedome of God: whereinto if any man do carelessly and boldly break in, he shall both not attaine wherewith to satisfie his curiousnesse, and hee shall enter into a maze whereof he shall finde no way to get out againe. For neither is it meete that man shoulde freely search those things which God hath willed to be hidden in himselfe, and to turne ouer from vnnecessary the height of wifedom, which he willed to be honored and not be conceuued, that by it also he might be maruellous ynto vs. Those secrets of his will which he hath determined to be opened ynto vs, he hath disclosed in his word: and he hath determined, so farre as he foresee to pertaine to yvs and to be profitable for yvs.

2. We are come (faith Augustine) into the way of Faith, let vs stedfastly holde it. It bringeth into the Kings chamber, in which all the treasures of knowledge & wisedome are hidden. For the Lord himfelfe Christ did enuie his excellent and most choosen discipiles, when he faide, I haue many things to befaide to you, but yee cannot beare them now. We must walk, we must profite, we must encreafe, that our harts may be able to conceuue those things which now we cannot conceuue. If the last day find vs profiting, there we shall learne that which here we could not. If this thought be of force with vs, that the word of the Lord is the onely way, that may leade vs to search whatsoeuer is lawfull to be learned of him, that it is the onely light, which may guie vs light to see whatsoeuer we ought to see of him: it shall easilie hold back & retraigne vs from all rathhes. For we shall know that so soonne as we be gone out of the bounds of the world we runne out of the way, and in darknes, in which race we must needs oftentimes strake, flipppe, and stumblle. First therefore let this bee before our eyes, that to ecounter any other knowledge of predestination than that which is set forth by the words of God, is a point of no lesse madness then if a man have a will to go by an vnprofitable waie, or to see in darknesse. Neither let vs be ashamed, to be ignorant of somewhat in it wherein there is some learned ignorance. But rather let vs willingly abstaine from the searching of that knowledge, whereof the excessiue coeting is both foolish and perillous, yea and deadly. But if the wantones of wit provoke vs, it shall bee profitable alwaye to set this against it, whereby it may be beaten backe, that as too much of hye is not good, so the seaching of glory doth not turne ynto glory to the curious. For there is good cause why wee shoulde bee frayed away from that boldnes, which can do nothing but throwe vs downe headlong into ruine.

3. There be other which when they have a will to remedie this euill, doe command all mention of predestination to be in a manner buried, at the least they teach men to trie from everie manner of questioning thereof as from a rocke. Although the moderation of these men be herein worthy to be praised that they judge that mysteries shoulde be tastef in with such sobrietie: yet because they descend too much beneath the meanes: they little preuaile with the wit of man, which doth not lightlie suffer itself to be restrained. Therefore, that in this behalfe also wee may kepe a righteously we must return to the word of the Lord, in which we have a sure rule of understanding. For the Scripture is the school of the holy Ghost, in which as nothing is left out which is both necessary and profitable to be known, so nothing is taught but that which is behooveful to be learned. Wherefore therefore is uttered in the Scripture concerning predestination, we must beware that we debarr not the faithful from it, lest we should seem either ensnored to deprive them of the benefit of that God, or to blame and accuse the holy Ghost who hath published those things which it is in every wise profitable to be suppressed. Let vs therefore go to a Christian man; to open his mind and his ears to all the sayings of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, so that soone as the Lord hath cleaved his holy mouth, he may also foreclose of himselfe all the way to inquire further. This shall be the best bond of sobriety, if not only in learning we may follow the Lord going before us, but also when they maketh an end of teaching, we cease to will to learn. Neither is the danger which they fear of so great importance, that we ought therefore to tune away our minds from the oracles of God. Notable is the laying of Sa<"", ". But in both godliness & common rea"", "in that this is not generally, mean of every thing, we must seeke a difference, lea"", "luther ignorance should please vs vnder colour of modestie and sobriety. For we see how he commendeth to the people the studie of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it pleased God to publish it; and how he withholdeth the people within those bounds, by this only reason, because it is not lawful for mortall men to thrust themselves into the secrets of God.

4. Prophane men (I grant) do in the matter of Predestination suddenly catch hold of some what which they may earpe, or caull, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their waryn"", ". And therefore I must make them to know that there is almost none in which they or such as they do leave untouched with blasphemic. A straitly we will no Joffe, proudly outrage when he heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if he heareth that God forewary what should become of man when he created him. Neither will they abstaine from laughing when they shall understand that there is little more than five thousand yeers passed since the creation of the world: for they will ask why the power of God was so long idle and a sleepe. Finally there can be nothing brought forth, which they will not scoffe at. For the refraining of these faulenties, must we hold our peace of the Godhead of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost? or must we passe over in silence the creation of the world? Yea but the truth of God is both in this behalfe and euerie where mightier than that it neede to fear the cull speaking of the wicked: as Augustine strongly maintaineth in his worke of the good of Perseverance. For we see that the false Apostles could not by defaming and las"", "ed to be ashamed of it. For, this also is verie well saide of Augustine, that we may safely follow the Scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth stouppingly, least it should forfake our weaknesses. But who so are so ware and so fearfully that they would have Predestination to be buried, lest it should trouble weake soules: with what colour, I beeke you, will they cover their arrogancy, when they indirectly accuse God of foolish vanity, as though he forsooke not the danger, which they thinke themselves to have wisely met with? Whosoever therefore travelleth to bring the doctrine of Predestination into mistaking, he openly faith cuill of God: as though somewhat had vanadusely flipped from him which is hurtfull to the Church.

5 Predestination whereby God adopteth some into the hope of life, and judgeth some to eternall death, no man that would be accounted godly dare simply deny: But they wrapp't vp with many caullations, specially they which make foreknowledge the cause of it. We in deed doe say that they be both in God, but we say that the one is wrongfully made subject to the other. When we give foreknowledge to God, we mean that all things alwaye have beene and perpetually doe remaine under his cies, so that to his knowledge there is nothing to come orpast, but all things are present, and so present that he doth not imagine onely by conceited forms (as those things are present to vs, whereof our mind holdeth the remembrance) but he truly beholdesth and seeth them as far before him. And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compasse of the world and to all creatures. Predestination we call the eternall decree of God, whereby he had it determined with himselfe what he willd to become of every man. For all are not created to like estate: but to some eternall life, and to some eternall damnation is fore-appointed. Therefore as every man is created to the one or other end, so we say that he is predestinate either to life or to death. But this Predestination God hath not onely retifified in every severall person, but hath showed an example thereof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might plainly appeare that it lyeth in his will what shall be the estate of every nation. When the Highetdevided the nations, and ferued the children of Adam, his part was the people of Israel, the cord of his inheritance. The separation is before the cies of all men; in the peron of Abraham as in a drie flocke one people is peculiarly chosen, all other being refused: but the cause appeareth not, saving that Moses, to cut off all occasion of glorying in posterity, teacheth that they excellently by the free loue of God. For he assigneth this to be the cause of their delurcance, for that God loved the Fathers, and chose their seed after them. More plainly in another Chapter: He was pleased in Deut. 7.8. to choose you, not because you pasted other nations in number, but because he loved you. The same admonition is often repeated with him, Behold, to the Lord thy God belongeth the heaven the earth, & whatsoever things are in it: and he hath pleased himselfe only in your Fathers, & hath loved them, and hath choosed you their seed. Againe in another place fancifitions are commanded them, because they are chosen to bea peculiar people. And againe in another place, Loue is affixed to be the cause of protection. Which also the Faithfull doe declare with on one voice, saying: He hath choosen for vs our inheritance, the glory of Israel, whom he hath loved. For they doe all impute to free loue all the gittes wherewith they were garnished of God: not onely because they knew that they themselues had obtained them by no deserving, but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he could purchase to himselfe and his posterity so great a prerogative of honor. And the more strongly to tread downe all pride, he upbranded them that they have despised no such thing, forasmuch as they are a stubborne and hard-necked people. And oftentimes the Prophets doe hatefully and as by way of reproch cast the Jews in the teeth with this election, because they had fowly departed from it. Whatsoever it be, now let them come fouth which will bind the election of God either to the worthines of men, or to the merits of worke. When they see one nation to be preferred before all other, and when they heare that God as led with no respect to be more favourably bent to a few and vnnoable, ye and froward and disobedient men: will they quarrel

Cap. 21. Of the manner how to receive with him, because his will was to shew such an example of mercy? But they shall neither with their prating voices hinder his worke, nor with throwing stones of taunts into heauen shall bit or hurt his righteousnesse, but rather they fall backe upon their owne heads. Moreover the Israelites are called backe to this principle of the free covenant, when either thankes are to be given to God, or their hope to bereified vp against the time to come. He made vs, and not we ourselves (faith the Propher) his people and the sheepe of his pastures. The negativisme is not superfuous, which is added to excludivs, that they may know that of all the good things wherewith they excell, God is not only the author, but fetched the caufe thereof from himselfe, because there was nothing in them worthie of fo great honour. Also he bidde them to bee contented with the meere good pleasure of God in these words. The feeode of Abraham are his servants: the children of Isaac his elect. And after that he hath rehearsed the continual benefits of God as fruits of the election, at length he concluded, that he dealt so liberally because he remembered his covenant. With which doctrine agreed the song of the whole Church, Thy right hand and the light of thy countenance gave the land to our Fathers, because thou wast pleased in them. But it is to be noted, that where mention is made of the lande, it is a visible signe of the secret seuering wherein the adoption is contained. To the fame thankfulness David in another place exhorteth the people, saying, Blessed is the nation whose God the Lord is, the people which he hath chozen for an inheritance to himselfe. And Samuel encourageth them to good hope, saying, The Lord will not forsake you, for his owne great names sake, because it pleased him to creat you for a people to himselfe. Likewise David when his faith is satisfied, armeth himselfe to flight, saying, Blessed is he whom thou hast chosen, he shall dwell in thy courts. But for as much as the election hidden in God was manifested as well by the first delivrance as by the second, and other mean benefits: in Esay the word of Election is transferred to this, God shall have mercy on Isaac and he shall yet choose out of Israel: because he signifying the time to come, faith that the gathering together of the remnant of the people which hee seemed to have forsaken, shall be a signe of the stable and steadfast election, which once seemed to have beene fallen away. When also it is said in another place, I have chozen thee and have not cast thee away: he fethet out the continual course of the notable liberality of his fatherly good will. And yet more plainly the Angell fath in Zacharie, God shall yet choose Jerusalem: as though in hardly chastening, he had reected it; or as though the exile were an interrupting of the election: which yet remaineth immovable, although the signes thereof do not always appeare.

6. There is to be added a second degree more narrowly restraine, or in which was socne a more speciall grace of God: when of the same kinred of Abraham God had refreshed some, and other some by nourishing them in the church he shewed that he retained among his children, Imanuel had at the beginning obtained egall degree with his brother Isaac, because the spirituall covenant had beene no lesse sealed in him by the signe of Circumcision. He is cut off, and then Esaias at the laft an innumerable multitude and almost Israel. In Isaac was the feeode called: the same calling endured in Iacob. A like example God shewed in erecting Sauf: which thing is also gloriously rect forth in the Psalm. He hath put back the tribe of Joseph, & the tribe of Ephraim he hath not chosen, but hee hath chozen the tribe of Judah. Which the holy history divers times repeateth, that the wonderful secret of the grace may the better appeare in this change. Irael, Ephraim, and such other (I grant) fell from the adoption by their own fault and guiltinesse: because there was a condition adioyned, that they should faithfully keepe the covenant of God, which they falsely brake. But this was yet a singularl benefit of God, that hee vouchsafed to prefer them above the other Gentiles: as it is said in the Psalm. He hath not so done to other nations, nor hath opened his judgments to them. But here I have not without cause said that, there be two degrees to be noted; noted: because now in the choosing of the whole nation God shewed that he is in his owne sincere liberallitie bound to no laves: but he is free, so that equal portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequalitie wherof sheweth that it is truely of free gift. Therefore Malachi amplifieth the vtnthankfulness of Israel, because they being not onely chosen out of all mankinde, but also favoured out of a holy house to be a peculiar people, doe vnsaintfully and wickedly despise God so beneficiall a Father. Was not Esau the brother of Jacob? (faith he) and yet Jacob I loved, but Mal.1.2. Esau I hated. For, God taketh it for confessed, that where either of them was borne of a holy Father, and successor of the covenant, finally a branch of the holy roote: now the children of Jacob were more than commonly bond, which were taken into that dignitie. But when Esau the first begotten being resued, their Father which was by nature inferior was made the heire, he pronouched them doubly vtnthankfull, and complaineth that they were not holden with that double bond.

7 Although it be already sufficiently evident, that God doth by his secret counsell freely choose whom he will, reiecting other, yet his free election is hitherto but halfe shewed, till we come to all particular persons, to whom God not onely offereth salvation, but so assigneth it, that the certaintie of the effect thereof is not in suspence or doubtfull. For, these are accounted in that onely seede, whereof Paul maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet because many of his posteritie were cut off, as rotten members: that the election may be effectuall and truely stedfast, we must needs ascend to the head, in whom the heavenly Father hath bound together his election one with another, and hath knit them to himselfe with a knot impossible to be loosed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, shined the liberall favour of God, which he denied to other men: yet in the members of Christ, appeareth a much more excellent strength of grace, because they being graffed into their head doe never fall away from salvation. Therefore Paul doth fully reason out of the place of Malachi which I cuen now alleged: that where God with making a covenant of euerall life calleth any people to himselfe, there is in part a special manner of election, that he doth not choose all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is said, I have loved Jacob, this pertaineth to the whole issue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there setteth in comparision against the posteritie of Esau. Yet this withstandeth not but that in the person of one man was set forth to vs an example of the election, which cannot slip away, but must come to the mark that it tendeth to. These Paul doth not vaineely note to be called remnants: because experience teareth that of a great multitude many slide and vanish away, so that oftentimes there remaineth but a small portion. But why the generall election of a people is not alwaye firm and stedfast, there is a reason offering it selfe in readines: because with whom God covenanteoth he doth not by and by give to them the fire of regeneration, by the power whereof they may continue in the covenant to the ende: but the outward changing without the inward effectuall grace of grace, which might be of force to hold them in, is a certaine meaneth thing betwixt the forlaking of whole mankind, and the election of a small number of the godly. The whole people of Israel was called the inheritance of God, of whom yet there were many strangers. But because God had not for nothing made covenant with them that he would be their Father and Redeemer, he rather hath respect to his owne free favour than to the vnsaintfull falling away of many: by whom also his truth was not abolished: because where he refered any remnant, it appeared that his calling was without Repentance. For whereas God did from time to time choose vnto himselfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, he had regard to his covenant, which being broken of the whole multitude he restrained to a few, that it should not vterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the seede of Abraham was a certaine visible image of a greater benefite, which God hath vouchsafed.

vouchsafed to graunt to seue out of many. This is the reason why Paul so diligentely putte th difference betwene the children of Abraham according to the flesh, and his spiritual children which were called after the example of Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and unfruitfull thing simply to be the childe of Abraham (which might not bee said without dishonor of the covenant) but because the vnchangeable counsel of God, whereby he hath predestinate whom he would, is by it selfe effectuall only to this latter forto vnto salvation. But I warne the readers that they bring not a foreconceived judgement on either side, till it appeare by the places of scripture brought forth what is to be thought. That therefore which the scripture clearly sheweth, we say that God by eternall and vnchangeable counfell hath once appointed whom in time to come he would take to salvation, and on the other side whom hee woulde condempne to destruction. This counsell as touching the elect, we say to be grounded vp on his free mercie without any respect of the worthines of man, but whom hee appointeth to damnation, to them by his just in deed and irreprehensible, but also incomprehensible judgement the entry of life is foreclosed. Now in the elect we set vocation, to be the testimonie of election: and then justification to be another signe of the manifest shewing of it, till they come to glory wherein is the fulfilling of it. But as by vocation and election God maketh his elect; so by shuttung out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name or from the sanctification of his spirit, he doth as it were by these markes open what judgement abideth for them. I will here passe over many tainted inventions, which foolish men haue forged to overthrow predestination. For they need no confusion, which so soon as they are brought forth, do largely bewray their owne fallencesse. I will tarry only vpon those, which either are in controversy among the learned, or which may bring any hardnes to the simple, or which vngodlines with faire seeming shew prettendeth so scoffe at the righteounes of God.

The xxij. Chapter.

A confirmation of this doctrine by testimonies of the Scripture.

AL these things which we have set are not without controversy among many, especially the free election of the faithfull: which yet cannot be weakened. For the common fort doe thinke that God, as hee foreseeth that every mans deffeering shall be, do maketh difference betwene men: that therefore whom he foreknoweth that they shall be not unworthy of his grace, them hee adopteth into place of children: and whose natures hee elsipeth that they will bee bent to wickednesse and vngodlinesse, them hee appointeth to the damnation of death. So by cloaking it with the veile of foreknowledge they do no only darken election, but frame that it hath beginning from elswhere. And this opinion received of the common fort is not the opinion of the common fort alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I do plainly confesse, to the entrent that no man should trust that it shall much hurt our cause if their names be objected against us. For, the truth of GOD herein is more certaine, than that it may bee shaken: more cleare, than that it may be darken with the authentic of men. But some other neither exercised in the scripture, nor worthie of any voice, doe raile at this doctrine with greater malcioninesse, than that their forward pride ought to be suffered. Because God choosing some after his owne will, leaueth other some, they picke a quarrell against him. But if the thing be fully be knowne for true, what shall they prevaile with brawling against God? We teach nothing but that which is approoved by experience, that it was alway at liberty for GOD, to bestow his grace to whom he will. I will not enquire whereby the posteritie of Abraham excelleth other, but by that vouchsafing, whereof there is founde no cause elswhere than in GOD. Let them aunhewe why why they be men rather then oxen or afes. When it was in the hand of God to make them dogs, he fashioned them after his owne image. Will they give leave to brute beasts to quarrel with God for their estate, as though the difference were vnrighteous?
Truly it is no more righteous, that they should enjoy the prerogative which they have obtained by no desertings, than for God diversely to deal abroad his benethies according to the measure of his owne judgment. If they skip outer to persons, where the inequality is more hafterfull to them, at the least at the example of Christ, they ought to be afraid to prate so boldly of so high a mysterie. He is concerned of the seed of David, a mortall man: by what vertue wil they say that hee deserveth to be in the very wombe made the head of angels, the only begotten sonne of God, the image & glory of the Father, the light, righteousness, & salvation of the world? This thing Augustine wittily noted, that in the very head of the church is a most clear mirror of free election, least it should trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by righteous ly living, made the sonne of God, but that he had so great honour freely gi-ten him, that he might afterward make other partakers of his gifts. Here if any man aske why other were not the same that he was, or why all we are so farre distant from him, why all we be corrupt and he purenesse: such a man shall beware not onely his madnesse, but there shall also his shamelesnesse. But if they go forward to labour to take from God the free power to choose and refuse, let them also take awaie that which is given to Christ. Now it is worth the travaile to consider what the scripture pronounceth of every one. Paul verily, when he teacheth that wee were chosen in Christ, taketh away all respect of our owne worthines. For it is all one as if hee had said: because in the whole seed of Adam the heavenly father found nothing worthy of his election, he turned his eyes vnto his Christ, to choose as it were members out of his body them whom he would take into the fellowship of life. Let this reason then be of force among the faithful, that we were therefore adopted in Christ into the hea-unly inheritance, because in our fleshes we are not able to receive so great excellen-cie. Which also he touched in another place, when he exhorteth the Colossians to gi-ting of thankes, for this that they were by God made fit to bee partakers of the estate of the holie. If election goe before this grace of God that wee bee made fit to obtain the glorie of the life to come: what shall God himselfe now finde in vs whereby he may be moued to elect vs? My meaning shall yet bee more openly expressed by another saying of his. He hath chosen vs (faith he) ere the foundations of the world were laid, according to the good pleasure of his will, that we might bee holy, and un-spotted, and vnprouisable in his sight: where hee treadeth the good pleasure of God against all our desertings whatsoever they be.

2. That the proofe may be more strong, it is woorthe the labour to note all the parts of that place, which being coupled together doe leave no doubt. Where hee nath the elect, it is no doubt that he speakeith to the faithfull, as he also by and by aftherward affirmeth. Wherefore they do with too soule a glofe abuse that name, which wrest it to the age wherein the Gospel was first published. Where hee faith that they were elect before the beginning of the world, he taketh away all respect of worthines.
For what reason of difference is there betweene them which yet were not, and those which afterward should in Adam be egall? Now if they be elect in Christ, it followeth that not onely every man is seuered without himselfe, but also none of them from another, forasmuch as we see that not all are the electors of Christ. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holy, plainly confuteth the error which deriveth election from foreknowledge, forasmuch as Paul crieth out against it & faith that whatsoever vertue appereith in men, it is the effect of election. Now if a higher cause be fought, Paul answereth that God hath so predestinate, yea and that according to the good pleasure of his will. In which wordes hee overthroweth whatsoever means of their election men doe imagine in themselues. For hee also teaceth that whatsoever things God giveth toward spiritual life, they flow out of this one fountain, because God hath chosen whom he would, and ere they were borne he had severally laid vp for them the grace which he vouchsafed to give them.

3 But wherefoever this pleasure of God reigneth, there no works come to be considered. He doth not here in deed pursue the comparison of contraries, but it is to be understood such as he himselfe declareth. He hath called vs (faith he) with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his purpose and the grace which is gien of Christ before the times of the world. And we have already shewed that all doubt is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holy and vnspotted. For if thou say, because he foreknew that we should be holy, therefore he chose vs, thou shalt pervert the order of Paul. Thus therefore thou must safely gather, If he chose vs that we might be holy: then he chose vs not because he foreknew that we would be such. For these two things are contrarie the one to the other: that the godly have it of election that they be holy, and that they come to it by meanes of works. Neither is there their caullation here any thing worth to which they commonly fitt, that the Lord doth not render the grace of election to any works going before, but yet grace and grace it to works to come. For when it is said that the faithful were chosen, that they might be holy: there with all is signified that the holiness which was to come in them tooke beginning at election. And how shall this sayng agree together, that those things which are derived from election cause causae to election? The same thing which he saide he semeth afterward to conforme more strongly, where he faith, According to the purpose of his will which he had purposed in himselfe. For, to say that God purposed in himselfe, is as much in effect as if it had beene said, that without himselfe he considered nothing whereof he had any regard in decrewing. Therefore he by and by addeth, that the whole summe of our election tendeth to this end, that we should be to the praise of the grace of God. Truly the grace of God defereth not to be praised alone in our election, vnlesse our election be free. But free it shall not be, if God in electing his, do consider what shall be the works of euerie one. Therefore we find that that in which Christ said to his discipiles, hath place vniversally among all the faithfull, ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you. Where he not onely excluded deseruing past, but also signifieth that they had nothing in themselves why they should be chosen, if he had not presented them with his mercy. Like as this sayng of Paul is also to be vnderstood: Who first gaued to him, and shall receive recompence? For he meaneth to shew that the goodness of God so proueeth men, that it findeth nothing in them nyther past nor to come, whereby he may be wonne to be favourable to them.

4 Now to the Romaines, where he fetcheth this question further off, and followeth it more largely, he demeth that all they are Israelites, which are issue of Israel: because although by right of inheritance they were all blessed, yet the succession did not equally pasture to them all. The beginning of this dispute proceeded of the pride and deceitfull glorying of the Jewish people. For when they claimed to themselves the name of the Church, they would have the credit of the Gospell to hang upon their will: as the Papits at this day would gladly with this fained colour thrust themselves into the place of God. Paul, although he grant that the offspring of Abraham is holy by reason of the covenant, yet affirmeth that the most part of them are strangers in it, and that not only because they swarve out of kinde, so that of lawfull children they become bastards, but because the especiall election of God standeth above and reigneth in the highest top, which alone maketh the adoption thereof sure. If their owne godliness established some in the hope of salvation, and their owne falling away alone dihindered other some: Paul verily should both fondly and uncomminently hir vp the readers even to the secret election. Now if the will of God (the cause whereof neither appeareth nor is to be sought, without himselfe) maketh the

one sort differing from the other, so that not all the children of Israel be true Israelites, it is mainly fained that one man's fate hath beginning in himself. Then he further followeth the matter under the example of Jacob and Esau. For when they both were the sons of Abraham, both together enclosed in one mother's womb, it was a monsterlike change that the honour of first birth was removed to Jacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of the one, and the reprobation of the other. The original and cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will have to be set out in the virtues, and vices of men. For this is an easy short way with them, that God spewed in the person of Jacob, that he chooseth the worthy of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeeth to be unworthy. Thus they say boldly. But what faith Paul? when they were not yet borne, and had not done any good or evil, that according to election the purpose of God might abide, not of works, but of him that calleth, it is said: The elder shall serve the younger: as it is written, Jacob I have loved, but Esau I have hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were visible made of the time. Let us grant that Jacob was chosen, because he had worthines gotten by works to come: to what purpose should Paul say that he was not yet borne? And this now should be vndiscoverd added, that he had yet done no good: because this shall be a readie answer, that nothing is hidden from God, and that so the godlins of Jacob was present before him. If works do win grace, they should then worthily have had their price before that Jacob was borne as if he had bene grown to full age. But the Apostle goeth forward in vndoing this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Jacob was not made of works, but of the calling of God. In works he entereth not the time to come or time past: and then he directly setteth them against the calling of God, meaning by stabllishing of the one expressly to overthrow the other: as if he had said that it is to be considered what hath pleased God, not what men have brought of themselves. Last of all it is certain that by the words of election and Purpose, all causes whatsoever men are wont to faine elsewhere than in the secret counsel of God, are quite removed from this matter.

5 What colour will they bring to darken these things, who in election assigne some place to works either past or to come? For this is utterly to mocke out that which the Apostle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not upon any consideration of works, but upon the mere calling of God, because it was put betwene them when they were not yet borne. Neither had he beene ignorant of this their subtletie, if it had had any foundnes in it: but because he very well knew, that God can foresee no goodnes in man, but that which he hath first determined by the benefit of his election to give him: he fleeth not to that vnorderlie order, to set good works before the cause of themselves. Thus have we by the words of the Apostle, that the salvation of the faithful is founded upon the will of the only election of God: and that the fame favour is not gotten by works, but commeth of free calling. We have also as it were an image of that thing set before vs. Esau and Jacob are brethren, issuing both of the same parents, enclosed yet both in one womb, not yet brought out into the world. In them all things are equall, yet of them the judgement of God is divers. For he taketh the one and forsaiketh the other. There was nothing but the onelie first birth, by right whereof the one excelled the other. But this also being paffed over, that thing is gotten to the younger which is dened in the elder. Yea, and in other alio God seemeth alwayes to have despised first birth, to cut off from the flesh all manner of glorying. Refusing Israel, he calleth his minde to Isaac. Plucking backe Mansafe, he more honoured Ephraim.

6 If any man interrupt me with saying, that we must not by these inferior and small benefits determine of the summe of the life to come, that he which hath bin advanced to the honor of the first birth, should therefore be reckoned to be adopted into

The doctrine is so cleare and the example so plain, which St. Paul produceth, that there is no place at all lese to caus.
Cap. 22.

Of the manner how to receive

into the inheritance of heaven: (for there be some which spare not Paul himself, as though in alleging these testimonies he had wrested the scripture to a strange sense;) I answere as I have done here before, that the Apostle neither flipp’d by vnadvised-ness, nor wilfully abused the testimonies of the Scripture: But he faide (which they cannot abide to consider) that God minded by an earthly signe to declare the spiritual election of Jacob, which otherwise was hidden in his inaccessible throne. For vnleffe we referre the first birth granted to him vnto the world to come, it should be a vaine and fond forme of blessing whereby he obtained nothing but manifold miseries, discommodities, grateful banishment, and many bitternesse of sorrow and cares. Therefore when Paul saw without doubting, that God by outward blessing testifie the blessing which he had in his kingdom prepared spiritual and never decaying for his servant: he doubted not for proofs of this spiritual blessing, to fetch an argument from that outward blessing. This also we must remember that to the lande of Canaan was adiomyed the pledge of the heavenly dwelling: so that it ought not at all to be doubted that Jacob was graffed with the Angels into the body of Christ, that he might be partaker of the same life. Jacob therefore is choyen, when Esau is rejected: and by the predestination of God is made different from him from whom he differed not in any deferuings. If you ask a cause, the Apostle rendreth this, because it is said to Moses, I will haue mercy vpon whom I will haue mercy, and I will vouchsafe to grant mercy to whom I seeuer I will vouchsafe to graunt mercy. And what I beseech you meane this? Verily, the Lord himselfe most plainly pronounceth that men haue in themselves no cause why he should do good to them, but he fetcheth the caufe from his owne mercy onely: and therefore that the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluation in himselfe alone, why wilt thou de- scend to thy selue? When he appointeth to thee his mercie alone, why wilt thou run to thine owne deferuings? When he holdeith thy thought wholy in his mercifullnesse alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine owne works? Therefore we must needs come to that theftre people, which Paul in another place said to have been foreknowen to God: not in such fort as thefe men imagin, to foreknow out of an idle watchtoure the things that he worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft read. For truly when Peter faith in Luke, that Christ was by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God appointed to death: he doth nothing God as a looke on but the author of our saluation. So the same Peter also, where he faith that the faithfull to whom he wrote were chosen according to the foreknowledge of God, properly expressthat secret predestinatio wherby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And the word Purposie, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expresseth all one thing, for as much as it doth every where signifi a fixed determination as they commonly call it, undoubtedly teacheth that God when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he faith in the same Chapter that Christ was the lamb foreknowen before the creation of the world. For what is more fond or trifling, than to say that God from on high did stand looking whencesoever saluation should come to mankind? Therefore in Paul the foreknown people is as much as a small portion mingled with the multitude which falsely pretendenthe the name of God. In another place also Paul to beat down their boastling which being but covered with a vifor, do take vpon themselves the chiefe preeminence among the godly before the world, faith that God knoweth who he is. Finally by that saying Paul pointeth vs to two sortes of people: the one, of the whole kindred of Abraham: the other, feterally chosen out of it, and which being laid vp vnder the eies of God, is hidden from the fight of men. And it is no doubt that he tooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth that God will be merciful to whom he will (although he there spake of the elect people, whose estate in outward seeming was equall) as if he should haue faid, that in the common adoptio is included with him a speciall grace toward som, as it were a more holy treasure:

treasure: and that the common covenant withstandeth not but that the same small number may be exempt in degree: and he willing to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely demeth that he will be merciful to one rather than to another, for any other reason, but for that it is pleasing him: because when mercy commeth to him that seeketh it, though he in deed suffer not a denial, yet he either prudence or partly getteh to himselfe the favour whereof God claimeth to himselfe the prayer.

7 Now let the souereign Judge and master pronounce of the whole matter. When he saw such hardnes in his hearers, that he did in manner waft his words without fruit among the multitude: to remedy this offence, he cryeth out, Whatsoever my Father giueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoever my Father hath giueth me, I shall not lose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gift, that we may be delivered into the faithfull keeving and defence of Christ. Here some man peraduenture will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they only are accounted in the proper posseffion of the Father, whose yeelding hath beene voluntary by faith. But Christ standeth onely upon that point, that although the fallings away of great multitudes do shake the whole world, yet the counsell of God shall be stedfast and stand faster than the heavens themselves, for his election may never faile. They are said to have beene the elect of the Father, before that he gave to them his only begotten Sonne. They ask whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were strangers: he made his owne by drawing them to him. There is a greater clearness in the words of Christ than can by slitting be couered with any darkenesse. No man (faith he) can come to me, unless my Father drave him. But who so hath heard and learned of my Father, he commeth to me. If all generally without difference should bow their knee before Christ, then the election were common: but now in the sense of the believers appeareth a manifest diversitie. Therefore after that Christ had affirmed that the disciples which were giueth him, were the peculiar posseffion of God the Father: within a little after he added, I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast giueth me, because they are thine. Whereby is proved that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, sauing that grace deliuereth a few from the wrath of God, and from eternal death, which otherwise should have perished: but the world itselfe is left in his owne discretion to which it was appointed. In the mean time although Christ put himselfe meaner betwixt, yet he claimeth to himselfe the power of choosing in common with the Father. I speake not (faith he) of all: I know whom I have choosen. If any man ask from whence he hath chosen them, he answereth in another place, Out of the world, which he excludeth out of his prayers who he commendeth his disciples to his Father. This is to be holde, that when he affirmeth that he knoweth whom he hath chosen, there is signified some especiall fort in the general kindes of men: then, that the same especiall fort is made to differ not by the quality of their owne vertues, but by the heavenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excell by their owne force or diligence, when Christ maketh himselfe the author of election. For when in another place he reckoneth Judas among the elect, whereas he was a deluil, this is referred only to the office of Apostlethip which although it be a cleere mirour of the fauour of God (as Paul so oftentimes acknowledgeth in his owne person,) yet it commeth not in itselfe the hope of eternal salvation. Judas therefore, when he did unfaithfully bare the office of an Apostle, might be worse than the deluil: but of those whom Christ hath once grafted into his body, he will suffer none to perish: because in preserving their salvation he will performe that which he hath promised, that is, he will stretch forth the power of God which is greater then all. For whereas he sayth in in another place, Father, of those whom thou hast giueth me, I have lost none but the forme of perdition: although it be an abuifue.
abusive speech by figure, yet it hath no doubtfull meaning. The summe is that God maketh them his children by free adoption whom he will have to be his children: and that the inward cause thereof is in himselfe: because he is content with his own secret good pleasure.

8 But Ambrose, Orygine, and Hierome thought that GOD distributeth his grace among men, as he foreseeth that every man will vse it well: Yea and Augustine was once in the same opinion. But when he had better profided in knowledge of the Scripture, he not only reuoked it as cidently false, but also strongly confuted it: yea and after his reuoking of it, in reproouing the Pelagians for that they continued in the same error, faith: who cannot mainteyn that the Apostle knew not this most subtle fene? For when he had set out a thing to be wondered at of these brethren, while they were not yet borne, and afterward objected a question against himselfe, saying: what then? Is there vnjustic with God? Here was fit place for him to answere, that God foresew the merites of them both: yet he faith not this, but fieth to the judgementes and mercy of God. And in another place, when he had taken away all merites before election, Here (faith he) is confuted their vaine reasoning which defend the foreknowledge of God against the grace of God, and therefore say that we are choisen before the making of the world because God foreknew that we would be good, not that he himselfe would make vs good. He faith not this, which faith, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. For if he had therefore chosen vs, because he foreknew that we would be good: he should therewithall also have foreknown that we would choose him: & so forth as followeth to that effect. Let the testimonie of Augustine be of force among them that willingly rest in the authoritie of the Fathers. Howbeit Augustine suijeth not himselfe to be seuered from the rest: but by cleere testimonies sheweth that this disagreement is false with the malice whereof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the six. Chapter of his booke of the predestination of Saints, he alleageth out of Ambrose, Chrift calleth whom he hath mercie on. Againe, if he had willed, of the yndeuen he might have made devout. But God calleth whom he vouchfaeth, and whom he will he maketh religious. If I lifted to knit together a whole volume out of Augustine, I could readily shew to the readers that I neede no other words but his: But I will not load them with tediousnes. But go to, let vs imagine that they speake nor at all: but let vs give heed to the matter it selfe. A hard question was moued, whether God did righteously in this that he vouchsaed to grant his grace but to some: Of which question Paul might have vncombed himselfe with one word if he had alladged the respect of worikes. Why therefore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a discouer which abideth in the fame hardnesse? Why, but because he ought not? For the Holy Ghost which spake by his mouth, had not the diuine of forgetfulness. Therefore without any circumstances he answereth, that God therefore fauoureth his elect, because he will therefore haue mercy, because he will. For this Oracle of God, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie, is as much in effect as if it had beene said, that God is moued to mercy by no other reason but because he will haue mercy. Therefore this laying of Augustine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fit to be chosen, but maketh them.

9 Neither doe we any thing passe vpon the suttletie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of decreings, is not in deede the cause of Predestination on the behalfe of the act of him that doth predestinate: but on our behalfe it may after a certaine manner be fo called, that is, according to the particular weyng of Predestination: as when it is said that God predestinateth glory to man by decreuings, because he hath decreed to give to him grace by which he may deferue glory. For is the Lord will in election haue vs to looke vnto nothing but his meere goodnesse, if any man shall count here to see any more, it shall be a wrongfull greedinesse. If we lifted to admire in suttile, we want not wherewith to beate backe this silly suttile of Thomas. He affirmeth that to the elect glory is after a certaine manner predestinate by destinings, because the Lord doth after a certaine manner predestinate to them the grace, by which they may deserve glory. What if I answer on the contrarie side and say that predestination vnto grace, and elect election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting made after it? that grace is predestinate to them, to whom the possession of gracie hath beene long agoe appointed: because it pleaseth the Lord to bring his children from election into justification? For thereupon it shall follow that the predestination of grace was rather the cause of the predestination of grace, than contrarivious. But away with these trimings as things superfluous for such as shall think that there is wifedome enough for them in the word of God. For this was in old time truly written of an Ecclenasticall writer, that they which assigne the election of God to merits are more wise than they ought to be.

10. Some doe obiect that God should be contrarie to himselfe if he shoule universally call all men to him, and receiue but a few elect. So by their opinion the universal suffrage of the promise taketh away the difference of special grace. And thus certaine sober men speake, not so much to oppresse the truth, as to debarre crabbéd questions, and to bridle the curious of many. Their will is proue woorthie, but their counsel is not to be allowed: because dallying by thriues is never excusable. But their objection of it which doe more ralingly and quickness against it, is verily too sonde a cautillation, or too thamesfull an error. How the Scripture maketh these two to agree together, that by outward preaching all men are called to repentance and faith, and yet not to all men is given the Spirit of repentance and faith, I have in another place already declared, and by and by somewhat of it must be repeated againe. Now that which they require I deme to them, sith it is two waies falleth for, he that threateneth that while it rainth vpon one citie, there shall be drought vpon another: Hee that pronounceth that there shal in another place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not him-selxe with a certaine lawe to call all men egallie. And he which forbidding Paul to speake in Asia, and turning him from Bithynia draweth him into Macedonia, wisth that it is in his owne powere to distribute this treasoure to whosoever it shall please him.
Yet more plainly he wisth by F5ay how he peculiarly directeth to the elect the pronodes of salvation: for he hath of them only, and not of al mankind indifferently, that they shall be his Disciples. Wherely it is certaine that the doctrine of saluation is wrongfully set open in common to all men to profite effectually, which is faide to be seuerally laide vp onely for the children of the Church. Let this sufficie at this present, that although the voice of the Gospell speake generally to all, yet the gift of faith is rare. F5ay assigneth the cause, for that the arme of the Lorde is not open to all men. If he have faide that the Gospell is maliciously andawardedly defeued, becaus many do stubbornely refuse to heare the aduenture this colour touching uni-versall calling should prouaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminith the fault of men, when hee teacheth that the fountaine of blindnesse is, that God would not open his arme to them: onely hee giveth warning, that because faith is a singular gift, the cares are beaten in vaine with outwards doctrine. But I would faie knawe of these potters, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainly when it is faide in the first Chapter of John, Whofoeuer beleueth in the onely begotten Sonne of God, are them which also made the children of God; there is not in that place a confused heapemmed vp together: but a speciall order is given to the faithfull, which are born of blood, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (saide they) there is a mutual content of faith with the worde, namely whereouer is faith. But itts no newe thing that felsefull among thornes or in ffrone places: not onely because the greater part appeareth indeed obstrueth against God, but also because not al men have cies & cares.
Cap. 22. Of the maner how to receiue

eares. How then shall it agree that God calleth to him them whom hee knoweth will not come? Let Augustine answere for me. Wilt thou dispute with me? Maruise with me, and erie out, O depth, Let vs both agree in feare, lest we perishe in error. Moreover if election (as Paul in his epistle be the mother of faith,) I turne backe the argument upon their own head, that faith is therefore not general, because election is special. For by the orderly hanging together of causes and effectes, it is easily gathered that where Paul faith, that we are full of all spirituall blessing, as God had chosen us before the creation of the world: therefore these riches are not common to all, because God hath chosen onely whom he woulde. This is the reason why in another place hee commendeth the faith of the elect, lest it should be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himselfe: but that this glorie may remaine with God, that they are freely enlightened of him, whom hee had chosen before. For Bernard faith rightly, Friends do feuerally heare, to whom also faith, Feare not thou final flocks: for to you it is giuen to know the mysterie of the kingdom of heauen. Who be these? even they whom he hath foreknown and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great and secret counsell is made known. The Lorde knewe who be his: but that which was knowne to God is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a mysterie, but those selfe same men whom he hath foreknown, and predestinate to bee his. A little after hee concludes: The mercy of God is from eternitie euen to eternitie upon them that feare him: from eternitie, by reason of predestination: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, the other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernard for witnesse, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none do see but they which are of God? By which words he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of God, do dizzell at the brightness of his countenance. And to election faith indeed is finely ioyned, so that it keepeth the second degree. Which order the words of Christ do cleereely expresse in another place: This is the will of my Father, that Iloofe not that which he hath giuen. For this is his will, that whocouer beleueth in the Sonne, shall not perish. If he would have all saue, he would appoint ouer him his Sonne to bee his keeper, and would graffe them all into his body with the holy bond of faith. Now it is certain that faith is a singular pledge of his fatherly love, laid vp for his children whom he hath adopted. Therefore Christ in another place faith that the shepe followe the shepheard, because they knowe his voice: but they follow not a stranger, because they know not the voice of strangers. Whence commeth this difference, but because their eares are bored by God? For no man maketh himselfe a shepe: but hee is made one by the heavenly grace. For which cause also the Lorde teacheth that our sascerie shall alwaies be certaine and free from danger, because it is kept by the immuncle power of God. Wherefore he concludes that the vnbelleuere are not of his shepe: namely because they are not of the number of them, whom God hath promised by Esaie that they shall bee his disciples. Now because in the testimonies which I have allready expressed perfections, they do therewithall testifie the vmmouuable fixedfastenes of election.

Now let vs speake of the reprobate, whom the apostle ioyneth there togethther. For as Jacob, haung yet with good workes defended nothing, is taken into grace: so Esaie, being yet defiled with no wicked doing, is hated. If we turne our eyes to works, we do wrong to the Apostle, as though he fawe not the same thing which we cleereely see. It is prooued that he fawe it not: forasmuch as he expressly enforcing this point, that when they had not yet done any good or evil, the one was chosen, and the other refused, to prooue that the foundation of the predestination of God is not in works. Againe when he moued the objection, whether God be vnrightheous, hee allegeth not that which had been the most certaine and plaine defence of his rightouenesse, namely that God reduced to Esaie according to his eniulnesse: but he was content.

content with another solution; that the reprobate are suffered up to this end, that the glory of God may be set forth by them. Last of all he adjourneth a concluding sentence, that God hath mercy upon whom he will, and hardeneth whom he will. See you not how he imputeth both to the onely will of God? Therefore if we cannot declare a reason why he vouchsaith to grant mercy to them that be his, but because it so pleaseth him: neither also shall we have any other cause in rejefting of other, than his owne will. For when it is said that God hardeneth, or theweth mercy to whom he will, men are thereby warned to seek no cause elsewhere than in his will.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A Consutation of the flanders wherewith this doctrine hath alway been wrong fully burdened.

But when the wit of man heareth these things, the frowardneffe thereof cannot be restrained, but that by and by as at the bloudie blast of an trumpet sounding to battell, it dierfully and exceedingly turmooleth. And many in decease, as though they would drive away the malice from God, doe so grant election, that they deny that any man is reprobate: but they doe too ignorantly and childishly: for as much as election it felie could not: And the vntilfe it were set contrarie to reprobation: God is fied to fuffer them whom he adopteth into his salvation: It should be more than foolish-lly faid that other do either by chance or by their owne endeavor obtaine that which only election giueth to a few. Therefore whom God passeth over he rejecteth: and for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predeterminate to his children. Neither is the waywardneffe of mentolerable, if it suffer not it felle to be bridled with the word of God, where the incomprehensible conceit of God is intendt of, which the Angels themselves doe worship. But we have already heard, that hardening is no lesse in the hande and will of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men do that I haue spoken of) busily labour to excute God with a lying defence: but only he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarrel with him that formed it. Now who do not admit that any are rejected of God, how will they vncompass themselfes from that saying of Christ, Every tree which my father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the roote? They plainly heare that all they are adjudged and awowed to destruction, whom the heavently Father hath not vouchsafed to plant as holy trees in his ground. If they deny this to be a finge of reprobation, then is there nothing so cleere that it may be proved to them. But if they cease not to wrangle, let the fobrenesse of faith be conten ted with this admonition of Paul, that there is no cause to quarrel with God, if he willing on the one fide to new his wrath and to make his power knowne do with dum sufferance, and lenitie beare with the vefells of wrath prepared to destruction: and on the other fide he make known the riches of his gracie toward the vefells of mercy which he hath prepared to gracie. Let the Readers marke, how Paul to cut off occaflon from whisperings and backbitings, giueth the chief rule to the wrath and power of God:
because it is vnfit that those deep judgement which dwell vpon all our fenkes, should be made subject to our determination. Our aduersaries anfwer is very unfitting, that God doth not vitally reject them whom he suffereth in lenitie, but abideth with a mind bringing in suffence toward them, if peradventure they may repent. As though Paul giueth to God a patience, to looke for their turning, whom he faith to be made to destruction. For Augustine faith rightly where he expoundeth this place, where power is vovned to suffere, God doth not suffer, but governeth with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing saide that the vefells of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, that God hath prepared the vefells of mercy: because, by
by this meaneth he ascribeth and challengeth the praise of salvation to God, but the blame of destruction he casteth upon them which by their owne will doe bring it upon themselves. But although I grant to them that Paul by the divers manner of speaking did often the roughness of the first part of the sentence, yet is it not mee to assigne the preparing into destruction to any other thing than to the secret counsell of God: which also is affirmed a little before in the rest of the text. That God hid the secret counsel of God is the cause of hardening. This at the least I get which Augustine faith, that when God of his own free will doth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardnesse may be tamed: and therefore God for his cause doth not convert the obstinate, because he doth not shew forth in them the mightier grace, which he wavereth not if he would shew it foorth.

2 These sayings in deed should be sufficient for the godly and sober, and them which remember themselves to be men. But for as much as these venemous doegs cast vp not onely one sort of venome against God, we will as the matter shall serue, answer to every one particularly. Foolish men doe divers wares quarrell with God, as though they had him subiect to their accusations. But therefore they ask, by what right the Lord is angry with his creatures, of whom he hath not been first provoked by any offence: for to condemn to destruction whom he will, agrceth rather with the wilfulnesse of a tyrant, than the lawfull sentence of a judge. Therefore they say that there is cause why men should charge God, if by his bare will, without their owne dersuring, they be predestinate to eternall death. If such thoughts doe at any time come into the minde of the godly, to breake their violent assaults they shall be sufficiently armed with this, although they had no more, if they consider how great wickednesse it is, even so much as to inquire of the causes of the will of God: of all things that are, it is the cause, and worthily so ought to be. For if it have any cause, thensomwhat must go before it, whereunto it must be as it were bound: which it is lawfull once to imagine. For, the will of God is so the highest rule of Righteousnesse, that whatsoever he willeth, even for this that he willith it, ought to be taken for righteous. When therefore it is asked, why the Lord did it: it is to be answered, because he willed it. But if thou go further in asking why he willed it, thou askest some greater & higher thing than the will of God: which cannot be found. Let therefore the reason of man restraine it selfe, and not fecke that which is not, least peraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridge (I say) he shall be well withholden whomsoever he be that will dispute of the secrets of God with reverence. As for the boldnesse of the wicked, which dread not openly to speake cuill of God: against it the Lord with his owne righteousnesse, without any our defence shall sufficiently defend himselfe, when he shall take all shifting from their conferences, and hold them fast convinced, & condemn them. Neither doe we yet bruise in the fained designe of absolute power, which as it is prophane, so worthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faine not God lawlesse, who is a law to himselfe: because (as Plato faith) men stand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull lustes: but the will of God is not onely pure from all faultes, but also is the highest rule of perfection, yea and the lawe of all lawes. But we deny that he is subiect to yeeld account. Wee deny also that we are meete judges, which would pronounce of this cause after our owne fense. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawfully may, let that threatening of the Psalm be in feare, that God shall overcomy so oft as he is judged of any mortall man.

3 So can God in keeping silence, put his enemies to silence. But, that we may not suffer them freely to scorn his holy name, he delivereth vs out of his word weapons against them. Wherefore if any man assueth vs with such words: why God hath from the beginning predestinate some to death, which when they were not, could not yet deserve the judgement of death: we in stead of answeres may againe on our side fide ask of them, what they think that God oweth to man, if hee will judge him by his owne nature. In such sort as we be all corrupted with sin, we cannot but be hatefull to God: and that not by tyrannous crueltie, but by most vphight reason of justice. If all they whom the Lord doth predestinate to death, are by the estate of nature subject to the judgement of death: of what vnjustice against themselues, I beseech you, may they complain? Let all the sonnes of Adam come: Let them strive and dilute with their creator, for that by his eternall prudence they were before their generation condemned to everlasting miserie. What shall they be able once to mutter against this defence, when God on the other side shall call them to reknowledging of themselues? If they be all taken out of a corrupt masse, it is no marvel if they bee subject to damnation. Let them not therefore accuse God of vnjustice, if by his eternall judgement they be appointed to death, to which they themselues do feel whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appeareth how wrongfull is the desire of their murmuring, because they doe of let purpose hide the cause of damnation which they are compelled to acknowledge in themselves, that the laying of the blame upon God may accite them. But though I doe a hundred times confeffe, as it is most true that God is the author of it, yet they do not by and by wipe away the guiltines which being engraven in their conffences from time with off recourfe, presenteth it selfe to their eies.

4 Againe they except and lay: were they not before predestinate by the ordinance of God to the same corruption which is now alleaged for the cause of damnation? When therefore they perih in their corruption, they doe nothing but suffer the punishment of that miserie into which by his predestination Adam fell and drew his posteritie headlong with him. Is not he therefore vnmiift, which doth so cruelly mock his creatures? I grant indeed that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miserie of state wherein they be nowe bound: and this is it that I faide at the beginning, that at length we must alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cause whereof is hidden in himselfe. But it followeth not by and by that God is subject to this slander. For we will with Paul anfwere them in this manner, Rom.2.10.

O man, what art thou that contendest with God? doth the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed me so? Hath not the potter power to make of the same lumpe one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour? They will say that the righteousnesse of God is so not truly defended, but that we seake a shift, such as they are wont to have that want a suit excuse. For what else seemeth here to be said, than that God hath a power which cannot be hindered from doing any thing whatsoever be he as he will himselfe? But it is faire otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought then when we are commandned to thinke what one God is? For how should he commit any vnmiift, which is judge of the world? If it properly pertaine to the nature of God to doe judgement, then he naturally loueth righteousnesse, and abhorreth vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though hee were overtaken, looke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousnesse of God is higher than that either it is to be measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the slander capacity of the woor of man. The Apostle indeed confesseth that there is such depth in the judgements of God, wherewith the minde of men should be swallowed, if they endeavoured to peere into it. But he teacheth also how harmless wrong it is, to binde the worke of God to such a law, that so soone as we understand not the reason of them, we may be bolde to disallow them. It is a known saying of Salomon (which yet few do rightly understand) The great creator of all rendeth reward to the woor, and reward to transgressors. For he crieth out concerning the greatness of God: in whose will it is to punish foolish and transgressors, although he doth not vouchsafe to let them have his spirit. And monstrous is the madnesse of men, when they so count to make that which is vnmeasurable,.
Cap. 23.

rable, subjeft to the small measure of their reason. The Angels which stood still in their uprightnes, Paul calleth elect. If their electuiines was grounded upon the good pleasure of God, the falling away of the other profueth that they were forskallen: Of which thing there can no other caufe be alleged than reproue, which is hidden in the secret counsell of God.

5. Go to: let there now be present some Mancicer, or Celsine, a falnderer of the providence of God: I fly with Paul that there ought no reason to bee rendred thereof: because with the greatnes of it, it farre surmounteth our understanding.
What maruile? or what abfurdiie is it? Would he haue the power of God so limited, that it might be able to work noe more, than his mind is able to conceiue? I fly with Augustine, that they are created of the Lord, whom he without doubting fore-knowed that they should go into destruction: and that it was so done because he fo willed, but why he willeth, it is not our part to ask a reason of it, who cannot comprehend it: neither is it meet that the will of God should come down into controversy among vs, of which so oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named the highest rule of rightcousnes. Why therefore is any question moued of vrightcousnes where right-cousnes clearly appeareth? Neither let vs be aflamed, after the example of Paul, to stop the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time to off, as they shall be bold to barke against it, to repeate this, Who bo Wyominge men, that lay an accusation to Gods charge and doe therefore lay it to his charge, becaufe he doth not temper the greatnes of his worke to your dunfell? As though they were therefore wrong-full, because they are hidden from flesh. The unmeasurablenes of the judgements of God is by eleere experiences knowne vnto you. Ye know that they are called the deepe bottomlesse depth. Now ask of the narrow capacities of your wittes, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himselfe. What good doeth it you therefore with mad searching to plunge your selues into the bottomlesse depth, which reason itselfte teacheth you that it shall be to your destruction? Why are ye not at the least restrained with some fear of the which both that bystorie of Job and the booke of the Prophets do report of the incomprehensible wisedome, and terrible power of God? If thy minde be enquiesed, let it not greeue thee to embrace the counsell of Augustine. Thou being a man lookest for an aunivere at my hande:
and I also am a man. Therefore let vs both heare him that saith: O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than rash knowledge. Seeke meries: thou shalt finde nothing but paine. O depth, Peter denieth: The Thee feeleth. O depth: Seekst thou a reason? I will tremble at the depth. Reason thou, I will wonder, dispute thou, I will beleue: I see depth, but I reach not the bottome. Paul resteth, because he found wonderinge. He calleth the judgements of God unsearchable: and art thou come to search them? Hee fayth that his waires are impossible to be traced out: and does hee trace them? with proceeding further we shall nothing profit: For neuer we shall fatisfie their way wanton curiosiues, neither doth the Lord neede any other defence, than which he hath vsed by his spirit, which spoke by the mouth of Paul; and we forget to speake well, when we ceafe to speake with God.

6. Their other objection also ariseth out of vngodlinesse, which yet tendeth not do directly to the accusing of God as to the accusing of the sinner. Howbeit the sinner which is condemned of God cannot be inuicted without dinuon of the judge.
Thus therefore prophane toonges do barke against God, saying: why should God impute those things for sinne to men, whereof he hath by his predestination hyde needlesse vpon men? For, what should they do? Should they waffle with his decrees? But lo should they do it in vaine, fith they cannot do it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully punished for those things, whereof the chief caufe is in Gods predestination. Herefore I will abstaine from that defence, whereunto the Ecclesiastical writers do commonly doe, namely that the foreknowledge of God withstandeth not but that man may be accounted the sinner: because God foreseeeth the evils of man, not his owne. For so the caullion would not stay here, but will rather preifie vs further with saying that God might if he had would, have prouided remeie for those evils which he foresaw: & that liue he hath now done, he hath of determined purpose created men to that end that he should so behavie himselfe in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man was created to this condition, that he should doe all those things that he doth: then he is not to be blamed for that which he cannot auid, and which he enterprized by the will of God. Therefore let vs see how this knot ought to be well loosed. First of all this ought to bee holden certaine among all men which Salomon faith, that God hath created all things for himselfe, and the wicked man to an euill day. Behold, when the disposing of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of saue and death: he so ordereth them by his couencil and becke, that among men there are borne some aduised even from their mothers wombe to death, which with their destruction may glorifie his name. If any man anfwere, that there is no necessitie laid vpon them by the prouidence of God, but rather that he created them in such estate, because he foresaw their peruer-nes to come: he neither faith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deed sometimes to vse this solution: but as it were doubtingly. But the Schoole men rest vpon it, as though nothing could be objected against it. In deed I will-lyingly graunt, that foreknowledge alone bringeth no necessitie to creatures, although all men do not so agree. for there be some that will have it also to be the cause of things. But it seemeth to me that Valla, a man otherwise not much practised in holy writings, sawe both more deeply and more wisely, which shewed that this conten- tion is superfluous: because both life and death are rather the dooings of Gods will than of his foreknowledge. If God did but foresee the successe of men, and did not also dispose and order them by his will, then this question should not without cause be mouted, whether his foreseeing any thing auailed to the necessitie of them. But shd he doth none otherwise foresee the things that shall come to paffe, than because he hath decreed that they should fo come to paffe: it is vaine to moue controversy about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that all things doe happen rather by ordi- nance and commandement.

7 They say that this is not written in expresse words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam should perish by his falling away. As though the same God, whom the Scripture reporteth to doe whatsoever he will, created the noblest of all his creatures to an unceraine condition: and they say he freewill, that he might shape to himselfe his owne fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his desiring. If so colde a decree be receiued, where shall be that almightiness of God, whereby he governeth all things according to his secret counsell, which hangeth vp on none other thing than it selfe? But Predestination, whether they will or no, sheweth himselfe in Adams potestitie. For it came not to passe naturally that all men should loose salvation by the fault of one Parent. What hindrest them to confess of one man, that which against their wills they confess of all mankind? For why should they loose their labor with dallying shutes? The Scripture crieth out that all men were in the person of one man made bound to eternall death. Sith this cannot be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceeded from the wondrous counsell of God. But it is too much absurditie that these good Patrones of the righteousnesse of God doe so stumble at a straw, and leape out great beames. Again that I ask: how came it to passe, that the fall of Adam did wrap vp in eternall death so many nations with their children being infants without remedie, but because it so pleased God? Here their songs which are otherwise so pratling, must of necessitie be dumbe. It is a ter-rible decree, I graunt: yet no man shall be able to deny, but that God foreknew what end man should haue, ere he created him, and therefore foreknew it because he had so ordained by his decree. If any man hereinaught against the foreknowledge of God, he hath and yndifferently stumbleth. For, what matter is there, I beseech you, why the heavenly judge should be accused for that he was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be any either just or colourable complaint, it toucheth predestination. Neither ought it to seem an absurdity which I say, that God foresaw not only the fall of the first man, and in him the ruin of his posterity, but also disposed it after his own will. For as it belongeth to his wisdom, to foreknow all things that shall be: so it belongeth to his power, to rule and govern all things with his hande. And this question Augustine verily well discusseth, as he doth other, saying. We must wholesomely confesse that which we most rightly believe, that the God and Lord of all things, which created all things very good, and foreknew that evil things should spring out of good, and knew that it more pertained to his almightie goodness even of evil things to do well, than not to suffer them to be evil: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shew what free will could do, and then what the benefit of his grace and judgement of justice could do.

8 Here they runne to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will have it granted that the wicked do perish, God only permitting, but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitted it, but because he so willeth? Howbeit it is not likely that man by himselfe, by the onely permission of man, without any his ordinance, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God appointed not, of what condition he would have the chief of his creatures to be. I therefore will not doubt to confesse simpliciter with Augustine, that the will of God is a necessitie of things, & that what he willeth, must of necessity come to passe: as those things shall truly come to passe which he hath foreseen. Now if for excuse of themselfes and of the ungodly, either the Pelagians, or Manichees, or Amanchistis, or Epicurius (for with these forefathers we have to do in this question) shall object against us necessity whereby they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing else but a dispensation of righteounesse of God, which is hidden indeed, but yet without fault: Forasmuch as it is certaine that they were not unworthy to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as ceraine that the destruction is most righteous which they enter into by predestination. Moreover their destruction so hangeth upon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is found in themselves. For the first man fell, because the Lord so judged it to be expedient: why he so judged, is unknowne to vs: yet it is certaine that he so judged for no other reason but because he knew that thereby the glorie of his name should be worthyly set forth. When thou hearest mention of the glorie of God, there think of his righteounesse: for it must be righteous that destruction praiseth. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordaining it: but he falleth by his own fault. The Lord had a little before pronounced, that all the things which he had made were very good. Whence therefofe commeth that pertinences to man, to fall away from his God. Least it should be thought to be of creation, the Lord with his commendation allowed that which came from himselfe. Therfore by his owne cunnes he corrupted the nature which he had received pure of the Lord, and by his fall he drew his whole posterity with him into destruction. Wherefore let vs rather behold an evident cause of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankind, which is nearer to vs, than earth for a hidden and utterly incomprehensible cause thereof in the predestination of God. Neither let it grieve vs so far to submit our witt to the unmeasurable wisdom of God, that it may yeeld in many secrets of his. For, of those things which it is neither granted nor lawful to know, the ignorance is well learned: the cometing of knowledge is a kind of madness.

9 Some man perhaps will say, that I have not yet brought ynothe to subdue that that wicked excuse. But I verily confefte that it can never be brought to passe, but that ungodliness will alwaye grudge and murmur againft it: yet I think that I have spoken so much as might suffice to take away not onely all reason but also all colour of gainsaying. Thereprobate would be thought excusable in sinning, because they cannot escape the necessitie of sinning; specially if such necessitie is cast upon them by the ordinance of God. But we deny that they are thereby well excused, because the ordinance of God, by which they complain that they are destined to destruction, hath his righteousnesse, unknown in deed to vs, but yet most certaine. Whereupon we conclude, that they bear no guilt which is not lade upon them by the most righteous judgement of God. Then, we teach that they doe outwrittly, which to secke out the beginning of their damnation, doe bend their eies to the secret closets of the counsell of God, and wink at the corruption of nature, from whence their damnation springeth. And thus withstandeth that they cannot impute it to God, for that he witnesseth of his owne creation. For although man is create by the eternal prudence of God to that calamitate, whereunto he is subject: yet the matter thereof he tooke of himselfe, not of God, forasmuch as he is by no other meane so lost, but because he went out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt and vnpure patrene.

10 Now the adueraries of Gods Predestination doe slander it also with a third absurdtie. For when we impute it to nothing else but to the choyce of the will of God, that they are made free from the vnuertall destruction, whom he maketh heirs of his kingdom, thereby they gather that there is with him accepting of persons, which the Scripture every where denieth: and therefore, that either the Scripture disagreeth with it selfe, or that in the election of God there is respect of defeathers. First, the Scripture in another sense denieth, that God is an accepter of persons, than as they judge it. For by the name of person, it signifieth not a man, but those things which being scene with eies in man are wont to procure either favour, grace, and dignitie, or hatred, contempt, and shame: as riches, wealth, power, nobilitie, office, countrey, excellence of beautie, and such other: on the other side, povertie, neede, base-nesse, vileneffe, contempt, and such other. So Peter and Paul doe teach that the Lord is not an accepter of persons, because he putteth no difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian, to refuse the one and embrace the other for onely respect of nation. So James with the same words when he minded to affirme, that God in his judgement nothing regardeth riches. But Paul in another place speaketh thus of God, that in judging he hath no consideration of freedom or bondage. Wherefore there shall be no contrarietie if we shall say that God according to the will of his good pleasure without any defeathering chooseth to his Sonnes whom he will, reiecting and refusing other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may be more fully satisfied. They ask how it commeth to passe, that of two betwene whom no defeathering putteth any difference, God in his electing paffeth over the one and taketh the other. I on the other side doe ask them, whether they think that in him that is taken there is any thing that may make the minde of God to encline toward him. If they confess (as they needes must) that there is nothing, it shall follow that God looketh not upon man, but from his owne goodnesse fetcheth a cause why to doe good to him. Whereas therefore God chooseth one man, refusing another, this commeth not of respect of man, but of his mercie alone, which ought to haue liberetie to shew forth and vter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in another place also shewed, that there were not from the beginning many called noble, or wise, or honorable, that God might humble the pride of Heli: so farre is it off, that his favour was bound to persons.

11 Wherefore many do falsely and wickedly accuse God of partiall vnrighteousnes, for that he doth not in his Predestination keep one selfe course toward all men.

If (say they) he finde all guiltie, let him equally punish all: if he finde them all guiltie, let him withhold the rigor of his judgement from all. But so they deal with him, as if either mercie were forbidden him, or when he would have mercie he be compelled altogether to give over his judgement. What is it that they require? If all be guilty, that all may together suffer all one paine. We graunt the guiltines to be common, but we say that the mercie of God helpeth some. Let it help all, say they. But we answer, that it is rightfull that hee should also in punifhing shew him selfe a rightfull judge. When they suffer not this: what do they else but either go about to spoile God of his power to have mercie, or at leaft to grant it him upon this condition, that he utterly give over his judgement. Wherefore these sayings of Augustine do very well agree together. Sith in the first man the whole masse of mankinde fell into condemnation, these vessels are made of it to honor, are not the vessels of their owne righteousness, but of the mercie of God: and whereas other are made to diuhsone, the fame is not to be imputed to vnrighteous but to judgement, &c. That to those whom he refuseth, God rendreth due paine: to those whom he calleth, he giueth undestept grace: that they are delivered from all accusation, after the manner of a creditor, in whose power it is, to forgive to the one, and aske of the other. Therefore the Lord also may giue grace to whom he will, because he is mercifull: and giue it not to all, because he is a just judge. He may by giuing to some that which they do not deserve, shew his free grace: and by not giuing to all, declare what all deserve. For whereas Paul writeth that God enclosed all under sinne, that he might have mercie vpon all, it is therewithal to be added that he is debtor to no man: because no man first gauet to him, that he may require like of him.

12 This also they often say, to overthrow predestination, that while it standeth, all carefullnesse and endeauour of well doing falleth away. For who (say they) shall heare that either life or death is cestainly appointed for him by the eternal decree of God, but that it will by and by come into his minde that it maketh no matter how he behaue him selfe, for the predestination of God can by his worke be nothing hindered or furthered? So shall all men disolutely throwe souerth themselves, and after a desperate maner runne headlong whether their lust shall carrie them. And verily they say not altogether falsely, for there be many sinne, which with filthie blasphemies defile the doctrine of predestination: and by this pretence also do mock out all admonishments and rebukings, sayings, God knoweth what he hath once determined to do with vs: if he have decreed our salvation, he will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he have predestination of our death, we should trauell in vain to the contrary. But the scripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reverence and religiouns we ought to think of so great a mysterie, both both instruct the godly to farrre other sinne, and well confute these mens outrage. For it doth not speake of predestination to this end, that we should be encouraged to boldnes, and with unlawful rashnesse attempt to search the vnattained secrets of God: but rather that being humbled and abased we should learne to tremble at his judgement, and reverendly to look vp to his mercie. To this mark the faithfull will euite themselves. As for that filthie groaning of swine, it is well confuted of Paul. They say that they go carelesly forward in vices: because if they be of the number of the elect, their vices shall nothing hinder them, but that they shall at length be brought to life. But Paul teleseth that wee be to this ende, that we should leade a holy and fauolofe life. If the mark that election is directed vnto be holines of life, it ought more to awake and farrre vs to cheerfulfully to practice that holinesse, than to sinne for a cloaking of sloathfulness. For howe greatly doe these things differ the one from the other? to cease from well doing, because election sufficeth to salvation: and that the appointed end of election is that we should apply our selves to the endeauour of good doings. Away therefore with such factileges which do wrongfullly misstate the whole order of election. Where they stretch

stretch their blasphemies further, when they lay that he which is reprobate of God, shall loose his labour if he go about to make himselfe allowable to him with innocence and honesty of life: therein they are taken with a most shamefull lie. For, whence could such endeavour come but of election? For whosoever be of the number of the reprobate, as they are vessels made to dishonour, so they cease not with continual wicked doings to provoke the wrath of God against themselves, and by evident tokens to confirm the judgement of God which is alreadie pronounced upon them; so fare be they from strives with him in vaine.

13. But other do maliciously and shamefully flander this doctrine, as though it did overthrow all exhortations to godly living. For which matter in old time Augustine was burdened with a great malice. Which hee wiped away with his booke of corruption and grace written to Valentine, the reading whereof will appease all godly and trustable men: yet I will touch a fewe things, which (as I trust) shall Satisfie them that be honest and not contentious. Wee haue alreadie seene how open and loud a preacher of the free election Paul was: was he therefore colde in admonishing and exhorting? Let these good zealous men compare their carnestnesse with this, and it shall be found in them in comparison of his incredible heat, And truely this principle taketh away all doubts, that we are not called to ye cleannesse, but that euerie man should postife his selfe in honor, &c. Again, that we are the handie worke of God created to good worke, which he hath prepared that we should walke in them. Summarie, they that are euen but meanly exercised in Paul, shall without long declaration easily perceive how fitly he maketh these things to agree, which they faine to disagree. Christ commandeth that men beleeue in hym: Yet is his definite sentence neither falsie nor contrarie to his commandement, where hee faith: No man can come to me, but he to whom it is given of my father. Let preaching therefore haue his course, which may bring men to faith, and with continuall profiting hold them fast in perseverance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predestination be hindered, that they which obey may not be proud as of their owne, but may glory in the Lord. Christ not for nothing faith: Who so hath cares of hearing, let him heare. Therefore when we exhort and preach, they that haue cares do willingly obey: but who so lacke cares, in them is fulfilled that which is written, That hearing they heare not. But why (faith Augustine) shoulde some haue, and other some not haue? Who hath known the minde of the Lorde? Must that therefore be denied which is open, because that can not be comprehended which is hidden? These sayings I haue faithfully reported out of Augustine: but because peraduenture his words shall have more authority than mine, go to, let vs bring foorth the very words that are read in himselfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dulnes and sluggishnes, and being inclined from labour to lust do go after their desires: ought that therefore to bee accomplished falsely which is spoken of the foreknowledge of God? If God have foreknown that they shalbe good, shal they not be good, in how great cunning souter they now liue? and if he haue foreknown that they will be euill, shal they not bee euill in how great goodnesse souter they bee nowe euene? shal therefoere those things which are truly spoken of the foreknowledge of God, be for such causes either to be denied or to be left vnspoken of? namely then when if they be not spoken of, men go into errors? The rule (faith he) to keepe truth vnspoken of, is one thing, and the necessity to speake truth is another. As for the cause of leaing truth vnspoken, it were long to search them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worse which understand it not, while we meane to make them more learned that understand it, who when we speake any such thing are indeed not made more learned, nor yet are made worse. But when a true thing is in such case, that when we speake it, he is made worse that cannot conceiue it: and when we speake it not, he is made worse that can conceiue it: what thinke we now to be done? Is not the truth rather to be spoken that that he may conceive it, that he may conceive it: than to kepe it unspoken, that not only neither of them may conceive it, but also he that more understandeth may be the worse, whereas if he did heare and conceive it, by him also many should learne. And we will not say that which, as the Scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might have spake. For we feare forsooth least when we speake he be offended that can not conceive it; but we feare not least while we hold our peace, he that can conceive truth be deceived with falsitie. Which sentence he at the last shortly knitting vp, more plainly also confirmeth. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the Church did both, namely both godlyly preach of the eternall election of God, and hold the faithfull in awe under the discipline of godly life: why do these our aduersaries being confuted with insincible violence of truth, thinke that they say well in saying that that which is spoken of predeftination is not to be preached to the people although it be true? Yea it must in any wise be preached, that he which hath ears to heare may heare. But who hath ears if he hath not received them from him that promiseth that he will give them? Truely let him that receiueth not, refuse it: so that yet he which receiueth it, do take and drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlines is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predeftination, that he which hath ears to heare of the grace of God, may glorie in God and not in himselfe.

14 And yet that holy man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the manner of teaching the truth, that offence be wisely avoided so faire as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those things which are truly said, may also be conveniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleue, the cause is for that ye are already predeftinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulness, but also maintain wickednes. If any man also stretch his saying to the time to come, and say that they which are shall be not beleue, because they are reprobate: this shalbe rather a cutting than a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not unworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as foolish teachers, and vnlocy and ill prophecyng Prophets. In an other place he truly affirmeth that it is to be houlden that a man then profitteth with rebuking, when he hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profite whom he will, even without rebuking. But why some thus and some other wise? God forbid that, that we should say that the power of judging belongeth rather to the clay than to the potter. Againe afterward. When men by rebuking either come or return into the waye of righteousness, who worketh saluation in their hearts, but he, which when any whatsoever he be planteth and watereth, giveth the increafe, whom when he will saue, no freewill of man refisteth? It is therefore not to be doubted that the wils of men cannot resist the will of God (which both in heauen and earth hath done whatsoever he would, and which hath also done those things that are to come) but that he may do what he will, forasmuch as euen of the veric wils of men he doeth what he will. Againe, when he will lead men to him, doeth he bind them with corporall bonds? He inwardly worketh, inwardly holdeth hearts, inwardly moueth hearts, and draweth them with their wifles which he himselfe hath made in them. But, that which he by and by addeth ought in no wise to be omitted: that because we know not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predeftinate, we ought so to be affectioned that we would all men to be saine. So shall it come to passe, that whomsoever we find, we shall trauell to make him partaker of peace. But our peace shall rest upon the children of peace. Therefore for our part, we must applie holiose and sharpe rebuking to all men like a medicine, that they perish not, nor destroy other, but it shalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to them whom he hath foreknown and predeftinate.
The xxiii. Chapter.

That election is established by the calling of God, but that the reprobate do bring upon themselves the just desolation whereunto they are appointed.

But that the matter may more plainly appear, we must intreat both of the calling of the elect, and of the blinding and hardening of the wicked. Of the first of these I have already spoken somewhat, when I confuted their errour, which think that the generalnesse of the promises extendeth equally to all mankind. But this election which otherwise God hath hidden with himselfe he doeth not without choice at length disclose by his calling, which a man may therefore call the testifying of it. For, whome he hath foreknown, them he hath also appointed to be fashio-ned like the image of his sonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath also called: whence he hath called, them he hath also justified, that in time to come he may glorifie them. When the Lord hath by electing already adopted his into the number of his children: yet we see how they enter not into possession of so great a benefit, but when they are called: on the other side, how being called they do now enjoy a certaine communicating of his election. For which reason Paul calleth the spirit Rom.8.15. which they receive, both the spirit of adoption, and the seale, and earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doth with the testimonie thereof stablifi & seale to their hearts the assurednes of the adoption to come. For though the preaching of the Gospel springing out of the fountain of election: yet because it is also common to the reprobate, therefore it could not by it selve be a fire proofe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as we have before al-leagd out of the words of Christ, Who saith of God, he and none other feeleth the Father. Again, I have shewed thy name to the men whom thou hast given me: Whereas he faith in another place, no man can come to me, unless I have drawn him. Which place Augustin wisely wrayeth, whole words are these: If (as Truth faith) every one that hath learned, commeth: whereby commeth not, certainly nei-ther hath he learned. It doth not therefore follow that he which can come, alio commeth, vnlesse he have both willed and done it. But every one that hath learned of the Father, not only can come, but alio commeth: where now there is present both the pro-mise of comming, and the affection of willing, and the effect of doing. Also in another place more plainly. What is this elie, Every one that hath heard of the father, & hath learned, cometh to me, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to me? For if every one which hath heard of the father and learned, commeth: truely every one that cometh not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he would come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the fleth, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a little after. This grace which is secretly gien to the hearts of men, is receiued of no hard heart: for it is therefore gien, that the hardnesse of the heart may first be taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the flonic heart, and gieneth a flenie heart. For so he maketh the children of promisfe and vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared to glory. Why therefore doth he not teach them, that they may come to Christ, but because all whom he teacheth, by mercie he teacheth: whom he doth not teach, by judgment he doth not teach? because he hath mercie upon whom he will, and hardneth whom he will. Therefore God afflicteth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whom he hath chosen. Now by calling he bringeth them into the household, and ven-teth himselfe to them, that they may be one together. But, when calling is joyned to election, in that manner the Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothing is to be be required but the mercie of God. For if we are ask, whom he calleth and for what reason: hee aunzwereth, whom he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the onely mercie of God appeareth on every side. And here that saying of Paul truly hath place: It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercie. Neither yet that same so as they commonly take it, which part is betwene the grace of God, and the willing and running of man. For they expounde it, that the desire and deaviour of man have in deed no force of themselves, vnlesse they be prospered by the grace of God: but when they are holpen by his blessing, then they affirm, that they haue also their partes in obtaining saluation.

Whose caulation I had rather confute with Augustines wordes than mine owne: If the Apostle meant nothing else but that it is not of him only that willeth or runneth, vnlesse the Lord be there present mercifull: we may contrariwise turne it against them and say that it is not of onely mercie, vnlesse there be present willing and running. But if this be openly wicked, let vs not doubt that the Apostle giueth all to the mercie of the Lord, and teacheth nothing to our wills or deavers. To this effect speaketh that holy man. And I let not a straw by that nice subtiltie, that they say that Paul would not have so said vnlesse there had beene some deavour and some will in vs. For he did not consider what was in man: but when he lawe that some did affigne part of saluation to the endeavour of men, he simply condemned their error in the first part of the sentence, and in the second he challenged the whole summe of saluation of the mercie of God. And what other things doe the Prophets trauell about but continually to preach the free calling of God?

2 Moreouer the very nature also and dispensation of calling doth clareely shew it, which consisteth not in the onely preaching of the worde, but also in the lightening of the Spirit. To whom God offereth his wordes, is shewed vs in the Prophet: I am found of them that sought me not: I haue openly appeared to them that did not ask for me. To a people which hath not called upon my name I haue said, Loe I am present. And least the Jews shoulde thinke that this kindnesse belonged onely to the Gentiles, he doth also put them in remembrance from whence he tooke their father Abraham, when he vouchsafed to ioyne him to himselfe, namely from meer Idolatry, in which he was drowned with all his. When he first thineth with the light of his wordes to men not deferuing it, he therewith sheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodnesse. Here therefore the unmeasurable goodnesse of God sheweth forth it selfe, but not vnto saluation to all: because for the reprobate there abideth a more greevous judgement, for that they refuse the testimonie of the will of God. And God also, to shew forth his glorie, withdraweth from them the effectual force of his Spirit. Therefore this inward calling is a pledge of saluation, which cannot deceu vs. For which purpose maketh the saying of John. Thereby wee knowe that we are his children, by the spirithe which he hath giuen vs. And least flesh shoulde glorie, that it did at the last answere to him when he calleth and of his owne will offered himselfe, hee affirmeth that it hath no cares to heare, no ties to se, but which he hath made: and that hee maketh them, not according to every mans thankfulness, but according to his owne election. Of which thing you have a notable example in Luke, where both Jews and Gentiles in common together heard the preaching of Paul and Barnabas. Whereas they were at that time all taught with one selfe fame word, it is faire that they beleued which were ordained to everlasting life. With what face may we deny that the calling is free, in which even to the very last part election reigneth alone?

3 But here we must beware of two errors, because many make man a worker together with God, that he by his consent may make the election to be of force: so by their opinion, the will of man is above the counsell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is onely giuen vs that we may beleue, and not rather faith it selfe.

SelE. Other some, although they do not so weaken the grace of the holy Ghost: yet being led by I wrought what reason, hang election upon faith as though it were doubtfull, yea and uneffectual until it be confirmed by faith. It is in deede certaine that it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we have already shewed that the secret counsell of God beginneth to shine out, which was before hidden: so that by this word you understand nothing else, than that it is approved which was unknowne, and is as it were sealed with a seale. But it is falsely said, that election is then and not till then effectuall, which we have embraced the gosppell, and that thereof it taketh lively strength. We must indeede from thence fetch the certaintie of it: Because if we attempt to reach vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomlesse depth will swallow vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, we must clunde vp higher, lest the effect should drowne the cause. For what greater absurdity or shamefull vniustice is there, than that when the Scripture teacheth that we are enlightened as God hath chozen vs, our eyes should be so dauned with this light, that they should refuse to looke vpon election? Yet in the meantime I deny not, that to the end we may be certaine of our salutation, we must begin at the word, and that our affiance ought therewith to be contented, that we may call vpon God by the name of Father. For some quie contrary to right order, that they may be certified of the counsell of God (which is neere vnto us, in our mouth and in our heart) do court to flie above the cloudes. Therefore that raffmity is to be restraine with sobrietie of faith, that it may suffice vs that God in his outward word is a witnessse of his hidden grace: so that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drink, do not hinder but that the springhead may have his due honour.

4 Therefore as they do wrongfully, which hang the strength of election vpon the faith of the gosppell, by which faith we seele that election pertaineth to vs: so we shall keepe the belt order, if in seeking the certaintie of our election, we flocke fast in these latter signes, which are sure wittnesse of it: Satan doth with no tentation either more greenously, or more dangerously astonish the faithfull, than when disquieting them with doubt of their election, he doth also move them with a peruerse desire to seek it out of the waie. I call it seeking out of the way, when a wretched man enterpriseth to break into the hidden secrets of the wisdome of God, and to pearce even to the highest eternity to understand what is determined of himselffe at the judgement seat of God. For then he throweth himselfe headlong to be swallowed vp into the depth of the vnmeasurable deouer ping pit: then he wrappeth himselfe with innumerablie snares and such as he cannot winde out of: then he overwhemeth himselfe with the bottomlesse depth of blinde darkencesse. For so is it rightfull that the foolishnesse of the wit of man be punisshed with so horrible ruine, when he attempteth of his owne force to rise vp to the height of the wisdom of God. And so more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which we are commonly all more bent. For there is most rarely any man to be found, whose mind is not sometime striken with this thought. Whence haft thou salutation, but of the election of God? And of Election what revelation haft thou? which thought, if it haue once taken place in any man, either perpetually vexeth the miserable man with terrible torments, or vitally dismayeth him. Truely I would have no surer argument than this experience to produce, how wrongfully such men imagine of predelitination. For the mind can be infected with no error more pestiferous than that which plucketh downe, and thrusteth the confidence from her peace and quietencesse toward God. Therefore if we feare shipwrecke, we must diligently beware of this rocke, which is never striken vpon without destruction. And though the disputing of predelitination be esteemed like a dangerous sea, yet in passing through it there is found a safe and quiet sea & pleasant sayling, vnlesse a man do wilfully course to be in daunger. For as they doe drowne themselfes in the deadly bottomlesse depth, which to be certified of their election

doe enquire of the secret Counsell of God without his word: so they which do rightly and orderly search it in such sort as it is contained in the word, receive thereof a singular fruit of comfort. Let this therefore be our way to search it, that we begin at the calling of God, and end in the same. Howbeit this withstandeth not, but that the Faithfull may think that the benefits which they daily receive at the hand of GOD, do descend from that secret adoption: as they say in Esaie, Thou haft done matuels, thy thoughts are olde, true, and faithful: forasmuch as by that adoption as by a token, the Lords will is to confirme so much as is lawful to be known of his counsell. But lest any man should think this a weake testimonie, let vs consider how much both clearenese and certainitie it bringeth vs. Of which thing Bernard speaketh fully. For after that he had spoken of the reprobrate, he faith: The pur-purpose of God standeth, the sentence of peace standeth upon them that fear him, both courting their euis, and rewarding their good things: so as to them after a maracu-los manner not only good things, but also euill doe worketh together unto good. Who shall accuse the elect of God? It sufficeth me to all righteousness, to haue him alone mercifull, to whom a lone I haue sinned. All that he hath decreed not to impute to me, is so as if it never had beene. And a little after: O place of true rest, & to which not worteuilly I may giue the name of a bed chamber, in which God is seene not as troubled with wrath, not as witholden with care: but his will is prooued in him good, and well pleasaung, and perfect. This figh doth not make afraide, but calmeth: doth not stirre vp vnquiet curiounesse, but appeaseth it: doth not weare the fentes, but qui-eteth them: Here is quiet truely taken, God being appeased, appeaseth all things:
and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet.

5 First, if we seeke a fatherly kindnesse and fauourable minde of God, we must turne our eies to Christ, in whom alone the soule of the father resteth. If we seeke saluatiou, life, and the immortalitie of the heavenly kingdome, we must then also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both the fountain of life, and Author of saluatiou, and heir of the kingdom of Heauen. Now whereunto seueralt election, but that being adopted of the heavenly Father into the degree of children, we may by his fauour obtraite saluatiou and immortalitie? Howfoever in seaeing thou toffe it and shakke it,yet thou shalt find that the vttmost marke of it extendeueth no further. Therefore whom God hath taken to his children, it is not said that he hath chosen them in themselues, but in his Christ: because he could not love them but in him, nor giue them the honor of the inheritance of his kingdome, unless they had first beene made partakers of him. If we be chosen in him, we shall not finde in our selves the certainty of our election: no, not yet in God the Father, if we imagine him naked without the Sonne. Christ therefore is the mirror, in whom we both mout, and without deceiue may behold our election. For is it he into whose body the Father hath appointed to graffe all them whom from eternitie he hath willed to be his, that he may take for his children so many as he reknowledged among his members: we have a winnes plain and sure enough, that we are written in the booke of life, if we communicate with Christ. And that sure communion of himselfe he gau e vs, when by the preaching of the Gospell he testified that he was giuen to vs of the Father, that he with all his good things shoule be ours. We are saide to put on him, and to growe together into him, that we may liue: because he liueth. So oft is this doctrine repeated, The Father spared not his onely begotten Sonne, that whosouer beleueth in him, may not perish: But he that beleueth in him, is saide to have passt from death into life.
In which sense he calleth himselfe the Bread of life, which whole eateth, he shal not die for euer. He (say) hath beene a witnesse to vs, that they shall be received of the heavenly Father in place of his children, of whom he hath beene recei-ued by Faith. If we couete any more than to be accompted among the children and heuues of God, then we may clime above Christ. If this be our vttmost marke: how much much be wee mad in seeking without him that which we have already obtained in him, and which may be found in him alone? Moreover if he is the eternall wife-dome, the unchangeable truth, and fait sted counsell of the father: it is not to be feared least that which he declareth to vs in his worde, should varie any thing be it never fo little from that will of the Father which we seek: but rather he faithfully openeth it vnto vs, such as it was from the beginning, and euer shall be. The pra-crifice of thi doctrine ought alio to be in vs in prayers. For though the faith of election doth incourage vs to call vpon God: yet when we make our prayers, it were vnordering done to thrust it into the presence of God, or to covenant with this condition.
Lord, if I be elected, heere me: for as much as he willeth vs to be content with his promises, and no where else to seeke whether he will be intreatable to vs or no. This wifedome shall deluer vs from many shares, if we can skill to apply that to a right vs which hath beene rightly written: but let vs not undiscreeetely draw hither and thither that which ought to have been restrained.

6 There is also for stabillishing of our affiance another stay of election, which we have faide to be ioyned with our calling. For, whom Christ taketh being enlighttened with the knowledge of his name into the bosom of his Church, then he is faide to receive into the faith and protection. And whome foder he receiuet, they are faide to be committed to him the Father, and delucered to his truft, that they may be keepe into eternall life. What meane we? Christ crieth out with a loud voice, that so many as the Father willeth to be sauced, he hath delievered them into his protection. Therefore if we lift to know whether God hath care of our safetie, let vs seek whether he hath committed vs to Christ, whom he hath made the onely Saviour of all his. Now if we doubt whether we be received of Christ into his faith and keeping, he preuenteth our doubting, when he voluntarily offereth himfelfe to be our shepheard, and pronounceth that we shall be in the number of his sheepe if we heare his voice.
Let vs therefore embrace Christ, being liberally let open for vs, and comming to meet vs, he shall number vs in his floke, and shallkeepe vs in clofed within his fold. But there entrench vs into a carefullnffe of our fitt to come. For as Paul teacheth that they are called, which were before chosen: so Christ teacheth that manie are called, but fewe are chosen. Yea and also Paul himselfe in another place dihortheth vs from carefulness: Let him that standeth (faith he) looke that he fall not. Again, Art thou grasseed into the people of God? Be not proud, but fear: for God is able to cut thee off againe that he may grace other. Finally we are sufficiently taught by experience it selfe, that calling and faith are of small value, vnlesse there be addioned continance which happeneth not all men. But Christ hath delieverd vs from this care: for verily these promises have respect to the time to come. All that my father giueth me that come to me: and him that shall come to me, I will not cast him out of dores. Again, this is the will of him that sent mee, the Father, that I looke nothing of all things that he hath giuen me, but may raise them vp againe in the last daie. Again, My sheepe heare my voice, and they follow mee: I knowe them, and I giue them eternall life, and they shall not perish for euer, neither shal any man take them out of my hande. The father which gave them to mee, is greater than all: and no man can take them out of the hand of my father. Nowe when he pronounceth, every tree which my father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the root: hee signifieth on the contrarie fide, that they can never be plucked from faliuation, which have roote in God. Wherewith agreeeth that saying of John, If they had beene of vs, they had not at all gone out from vs. Hereupon also commeth that noble glorying of Paul against life and death, present things and things to come: which glorying must needs be grounded upon the gift of continuance. Neither is it any doubt that he driueth this saying to all the faithful. In another plaice the same Paul faith, He that hath begun in you a good worke, shall end it eu'n vntill the daie of Christ.
Cap. 24. Of the manner how to receive

As also David, when his faith fainted, leaned upon this stay: Thou shalt not forsake the worke of thy hands. And now neither is this doubtfull, that Christ when he prayed for all the faithful, asketh the same thing for them which he asketh for Peter, that their faith may never faint. Whereby we gather, that they are out of danger of falling away, because the Sonne of God, asking his faith continue for their godlinesse, suffered no denial. What would Christ have vs to learne hereby, but that we should trust that we shall perpetually be safe, because we are once made his?

7 But it daily happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, doe againe revolt from him and fall. Yea and in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were given him of the Father, yet he excepteth the son of perdition. That is true indeed: but this is also as certain, that such did never cleave to Christ with that assurance of heart which they that the assurednesse of our election was stablished. They went out, for faith in their own vnlawful proceeding, but they were not of vs. For if they had beene of vs, they had still tarried with vs. Neither doe I deny that they have like signes of calling as the elect have: but I doe not grant that they have that sure stablishment of election which I bid the faithfull to fetch out of the word of the Gospell. Wherefore let not such examples move vs but that we quietly rest upon the promise of the Lord, where he pronouneth, that all they are given to him of the father, which receive him with true faith, of whom first he is their keeper and Pastor, none shall perish. Of Judas we shall speake hereafter. Paul doth not counsell Christians from assurednesse altogether, but from carelesse and loose assurednesse of the flesh, which draweth with it, pride, presumption, and disdain of other, and quencheth humility and the reverence of God, and bringeth forgetfulness of grace received. For he speake both to the Gentiles, whom he teacheth, that they ought not proudly and vntentiously to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes being dishonored, they were sitt in their stead. Fear also he requireth not whereby they should be defrauded and stagur, but with framing vs to the recieving of the grace of God, should abate nothing of the assurance thereof, as we have said in another place. Beside that he doth not there speake to every man particularly, but to the sects themselves generally. For when the Church was divided into two parts, and enmity bred dissension, Paul putteth the Gentiles in mind, that their being supplied into the place of the particular and holie people ought to beto them a cause of fear and modestie. And among them there were many puffed vp with glory, whose vaunt boasting it was profitable to beate downe. But we have in another place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come even beyond death, and that nothing is more contrarie to the nature of it, than to doubt what shall become of vs.

8 That saying of Christ, of many being called but few chosen, is verily ill taken after that manner. There shall be nothing doubtfull if we holde fast that which ought to be cleare by the things above spoken, that there are two sorts of calling. For there is an vniterfall calling whereby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altsgether to him, even them alfo to whom he setteth it forth vnto the fauour of death, and vnto matter of more grievous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling, which for the most part he vouchsafeth to give onely to the faithfull, when by the inward enlightening of his spirit he makest that the wordes preached is seted in their harts. Yet sometime he makest them also partakers of it whom he Enlighteneth but for a time, and afterward by the deserving of them vnderthankfulness for sake them, and striketh them with greater blindnes. Now when the Lord saw the Gospell to be published farre and wide, and to bee despised of many, but to bee had in due price of feue, he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a king, which preparing a solemn feast sendeth his messengers round about to bid a great multitude to be his guesstes, and yet can get but a fewe, because euerie one alleageth lees for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled upon their refussall, to call out of the high wares every one

one that he receiveth. Hitherto every man seeth that the parable must be understood of the outward calling. He addeth afterward that God doth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheer his guests. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, he will not suffer him with his uncleanness to dishonour the solemnity of the feast. This part of the parable, I grant, is to be understood of them which enter into the church by the profession of faith, but are not clothed with the sanctification of Christ. Such dishonors and as it were bitches of his Church, the Lord will not suffer for ever: but, as their filthiness deserveth he will cast them out. Therefore few are chosen out of a great number of them that are called, but yet not with that calling by which we say that the faithfull ought to judge their election. For, that generall calling is also common to the wicked: but this speciall calling bringeth with it the spirit of regeneration, which is the earnest and seal of the inheritance to come, wherewith our harts are sealed against the day of the Lord. In a summe fath hypocrites boast of godliness as well as the true worshippers of God. Christ pronounceth that at length they shall be call out of the place which they wrongfully possess: as it is said in the Psalm, Lord, whom shall I dwell in thy tabernacle? The innocent in hands, and a man of a pure hart. Againe, in another place. This is the generation of them that fecke God, of them that fecke the face of the God of Jacob. And looth the spirit exhort the faithfull to sufferance, that they take it not grciously that the Profitees bee mingled with them in the Church: for at length their villain shall be plucked from them and they shall be cast out without shame.

9. The faire reasone is of the exception even now alledged, where Christ faith that none perished but the fonne of perdition. It is in deed an unproper speech, but yet not daire. For he was not accounted among the sheepe of Christ, for that he was one in deed, but because he kept the place of one. And where in another place the Lord affirmteth that he was chosen with the Apostles, that is spoken only in respect of the minifterie. Twelue (faith he) have I chosen, and one of them is a Diuell: that is, he had chosen him to the office of an Apostle. But when he speake of choosing to salvation, he denemeth him farre away from the number of the chosent, saying: I speake not of all. I knowe whom I have chosen. If a man doe in both places confound the word of Choosing, he shall miserably entangle himselfe: if he make difference, nothing is more plaine. Therefore Gregorie teacheth very ill and pestilently, when he faith that we knowe only our calling, but are vnconvinced of our election: whereby he mouoth all men to fear and trembling: vsing also this reason, but because we knowe what we shall be to day, but what we shall be we knowe not. But in that place he suffidency declareth, how he stilled at this blocke. For, because he hanged election upon the merits of works, he had matter enough, and more to discouragethe minds of men: but he could not strengthen them, which did not removable them from themselves to the assiance of the goodnesse of God. Hereof the faithfull have some taste of that which we have determined at the beginning that predification if it be rightly thought upon, bringeth not a lacking of faith, but rather the best strengthening of it. And yet I deny not, that the holy Ghost framed his tale to the small stature of our sense. As when he faith, in the soffe of my people they shall not be, and in the route of my tenants they shall not be written. As though God did begin to write in the booke of life, them whom he recketh in the number of his: whereas yet we know, even by the witness of Christ, that the names of the children of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in these words is only expressed the casting away of them which seemed the chiefest among the elect: as it is said in the Psalm. Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, and let them not be written with the righteous.

10. But the elect are neither immediatly from the wombe, nor all at one time, by calling gathered together into the flocke of Christ; but as it pleaseth God to distribute...
Cap. 24. Of the maner how to receive

bute his grace to them. But ere they bee gathered together to that chiefe shepheard, they are scattered abroad and stray in the common delit, and differ nothing from other, suiting that they be defended by the singular mercie of God, from falling into the extreme headlong downe-fall of death. Therefore if you looke upon themselves, you shall see the offspring of Adam, which saucourer of the common corruption of the whole maffe, That they be not carried into extreme and despaird vngodliness, this comfort not to passe by any goodnesse naturally planted in them, but because the eie of God watcheth, and his hande is stretched out to their salvation. For they that dreame that from their very natuure there is planted in their harts, I wote not what seed of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway inclined to godliness and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to prooue it by the authoritie of Scripture, and also are confuted by experience it selfe. They doe in deed bring forth a few examples to prooue that the elect even before their enlightenung were not utterly strangers from religion: that Paul in his being a Phanifie luted unreproouable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and such other. Of Paul, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, we say that they are deceived. For it appeareth that hee was then already enlightened and regenerated, so that hee wanted nothing but the cleare revealing of the Gospell. But what will they wring out by these few examples? that all the elect are alway endued with the spirit of godliness? No more than if a man by shewing the vprightnesse of Aristides, Socrates, Zeno-rates, Scipio, Curio, Camillus, and other, shoulde thereof gather that all they that are left in blindnes of idolatrie, were deious followers of holines and honestie. Yea and the Scripture more places than one, openly crieth out against them. For, the state which Paul describeth of the Ephesians before their regeneration, sheweth not one graine of this seed. Yee were (faith he) dead with defaultes and sinnes, in which yee walked according to the time of this worlde, according to the prince of the aire, which now worketh in the obfinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuerfants in the luftes of our fleth, doing those things that liked our flesh and minde. And wee were by nature the children of wrath, as other also were. Again, remember that yee were sometime without hope, and lacked God in the world; for the state which Paul describeth of the Ephesians before their regeneration, sheweth not one graine of this seed. Yee were (faith he) dead with defaultes and sinnes, in which yee walked according to the time of this worlde, according to the prince of the aire, which now worketh in the obfinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuerfants in the luftes of our fleth, doing those things that liked our flesh and minde. The grace of Christ. Lib. 3. 265

bud of righteousness was there in Raphab the harlot, before faith? in Manasseh, when Hierusalem was dipped and in a manner drowned in the blood of the Prophets? in the Theeves, which among his last gaspings began to think of repentance? Awake therefore with these arguments, which sily curious men doe rashly deduce to themselves without the Scripture. But let that abide certain with vs, which the Scripture hath, that all have sinned like lost sheepe, euery one hath swarued into his own way, that is, perdition. Out of this gulf of perdition whom the Lorde hath determined once to plucke forth, them he dereerthe till his fit time: onely hee preferueth them, that they fall not vnto unpardonable blasphemie.

12 As the Lord by the effectuall of his calling towards the elect maketh perfect the saluation, whereunto he had by eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his judgements against the reprobate, whereby hee executeth his counsell of them. Whom therefore he hath created into the shame of life, and destruction of death, that they should bee instruments of his wrath, and examples of his seueritie: from them, that they may come to the end, sometime he taketh away the power to heare his word, and sometime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amasseth them. Of the first manner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs choose out one more cleere and notable than all the rest. There passe away aboute foure thousand years afore Christ, in which hee hid from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man answere that he therefore made them not to enjoy to great a benefite because he judged them vnwoorthie, they which come after shall not be prooued any more woorthie. Of which thing, beside the experience, Malachie is a substantiall witness, which reproouing insodile & mingled with grosse blasphemies, yet declareth that there shall come a Redeemer. Why therefore is hee rather givn to these than to those? He shall trouble himselfe in vaine, that shall heere search for a cause higher than the secret and unsearchable counsell of God. Neither is it to bee feared least any scholler of Porphyre, should freely gnaw at the righteoufnes of God while we answer nothing in defence of it. For when we say that none perith vndeferring, and that it is of the pure bountifulnes of God that some bee deliuered, there is largely enough said for the setting forth of his glorie, so that it needeth not our shifiting. The souersigne judge therefore maketh a way for his predestination, when who he hath once rejected, them being depruin of the communicating of his light heaueith in blindnes. Of the other maner there are both daily examples, and also many contained in the scripture. One felshame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twentie receive it with ready obedience of faith: the rest doe either forget nauyed by it, or scorn it, or hisse it out, or abhorre it. If any man answere that this diversitie procedeth of their malice and peruersitie, hee shall not yet satisfie vs: because the others wil also shoule bee poiffed with the same malice, vnlesse God did amende it with his goodnesse. Therefore we shall still bee encombrd, vnlesse wee call to minde that which Paul faith, Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he dignifieth that some excel other somr, not by their owne vertue, but by the onely grace of God.

13 Why therefore doth he in graunting grace to those passe over these? Of those Luke lieweth a cause, because they are ordained to life. Of these, what shall we think, but because they are the vesseles of wrath into dishonor? Wherefore let it not grieue vs to say with Augustine: God (faith hee) might turne the will of the cull into good, because he is almightie. He might indeed. Why therefore doth he not? because he would not. Why he would not, is in himselfe. For we ought to be no more wise than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to shifft with Chrysostome, and say that he draweth him that is willing, and reacheth his hand, that the difference may not seeme to stande in the judgement of God, but in the onelie will of men. True, like it so standeth not in proper motion of man, that even the godlie and they that fear God have need of a singular influence of the spirit. Lydia the purple sinner feared God, and yet it behoved that her heart should be opened, that she might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profit in it. This is not spoken of one woman alone, but that we should know that the profiting of curious man in godliness is the secret worke of the spirit. This verily cannot be brought in question, that the Lord sendeth his word to many, whole blindness he will have to be more enforced. For, to what purpose doth he bid to many commandements to be carried to Pharai? was it because he hoped that much often repeated messenges he would be appeased?

No, but: before he began, he forknew and foretold the end. Goe (and he to Moses) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that he obey not. So when he stirreth vp Ezekiel, he warneth him beforehand that he sendeth him to a rebellious and stubborne people: to the ende that he should not be afraid if he perceive himselfe to sing to deafe men. So he foretelleth to Jeremiah, that his doctrine should become a fire, to destroy and waste the people like stubble. But the prophesie of Esaias yet more enforcing: For he is thus sent of the Lord: Goe and say to the children of Israel: With hearing heare ye, and understand not: With seeing see ye, and knowe not. Make obstinate the heart of this people, and make haue their eares, and overplatter their eyes: leafe perditione they may see with their eyes, and hear with their eares, and understand with their heart, that being turned they may be healed. Behold he directeth his voice to them, but that they waxe more deafe: hee lighteth a light, but that they may be made more blinde: he leaveth forth doctrine, but that they may be made more dull: he layeth to them a remedy, but not that they may be healed. And John allaging this prophesie, affirmeth that the Jews could not beleue the doctrine of Christ, because this curse of God lay upon them. Neither can this alfo be in controversy, that whom God will to be enlighened, to them he delivereth his doctrine wrapped vp in darke speeches, that they may nothing profite thereby but to be thrust into greater dulness. Christ also teares vth, that he doth therefore expound onely to the Apostles the parables in which he had spoken to the multitude, because to them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, but to the common people not so. What meaneth the Lord (wilt thou say) in teaching them, of whom he prooideth that he may not be understood? Consider whence is the fault, and thou wilt cease to ask. For in the word how great darkness followeth there be, yet there is alway light enough to convince the confidence of the wicked.

The unchangeable
decree of God concerning the destruction of the wicked in the ground of their unwarrantable disposition to the means whereby men are saved.

Rom. 9:17.

14. Now remaineth for vs to see, why the Lord doeth that which it is plaine that he doth. If it be answered that it is so done because men have so defrayd by their vngodlinesse, wickedness, and unthankfulness: the same shall in deed be well and unelye faide: But because there appeareth not yet the reason of this displea, whyle then some are bowed to obedience, othersome continue harden, in searching it we must needs goe to that which Paul hath noted out of Moses, namely that God hath raised them vp from the beginning, that he might shew his name in the whole earth. Whereas therefore the reprobate do not obey the word of God opened vnto them, that shall be well imputed to the malice and perversefesse of their heart, so that this be therewithall added, that they are therefore gien into this perversefesse, because the righteous but yet reaschable judgement of God they are called vp to retorue his glory with their damnation. Likewise when it is said of the sons of Italy, that they harkened not to holome warnings, because the Lord wilde to kill them: it is not denied that the stubbornefesse proceeded of their owne naughtinesse: but it therewithall touched why they were left in stubbornefesse, when the Lord might have softened their hartes, namely because his unchangeable decree had once appointed them to destruction. To the same purpose seuerall that saying of John, When he had done so great signs, no man beleued in him; that the word of Feary

might be fulfilled, Lord, who hast believed our saying? For though he do not excuse the false legend from blame, yet he is content with that reason, that the grace of God is vniuerse to men, till the holy Ghost bring saft. And Christ alleging the prophetic of Esaias: They shall all be taught of God, tendeth to no other ende but to prove that the Jews are reproued and strangers from the Church, because they are vnaught to learning: and he bringeth no other cause thereof but for that the promise of God doth not pertaine to them. Which thing this laying of Paul confirmeth, that Christ which to the Jews is an offence, and to the Gentiles foolishness, is to the called the strength and wisdom of God. For when he hath told what commonly happeneth so oft as the Gospel is preached, namely that some it maketh more obstinate, and of some it is despised, he faith that it is had in price of them onely which are called. He had indeed a little before named them beguilers, but he meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before Faith, but rather he addeth this second laying by way of Correction, that they which had embraced the Gospel should give the praise of their Faith to the calling of God: As also a little after he teacheth that they are chosen of God. When the vngodly heare these things, they erie out that God with inordinate power abuseth his poore creatures for a sport to his crueltie. But we which know that all men are so many waies endangerd to the judgement saete of God, that being asked of a thousand things they cannot satisfie in one, doe confesse that the reproued suffer nothing which agreeth not with the most just judgement of God. Whereas we do not clearly attaine the reason thereof, let vs not be discontent to be ignorant of somewhat, where the wisdom of God lieth vp it felleth into so great height.

15 But forasmuch as there are a few places of Scripture wont to be obieced, in which God seethem to deny that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked doe perish, but by this that, he crying out against it, they wilfully bring death upon themselves: let vs briefly declaring these places, show that they make nothing against the sentence above set. There is brought foorth a place of Ezekiel, that God will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may be turned and live. If they will extend this to all mankind: why doth he not mooie many to Repentance, whose nines are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his dayly allurements waxe harder and harder? With the Sodomites (as Christ witeneth) the preaching of the Gospel and Miracles would have brought foure more fruite than in Jericho. How commeth it to passe therefore, if God will all to be saved, that he openeth not the gate of Repentance to those miserable men that would have beene more resolute to receive grace? Hereby we see that the place is violently wrested, if the will of GOD, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be for against his eternal counsell, whereby he hath seuered the elect from the reprobate. Now if we feele for the true natural meaning of the Prophet: his purpose is to bring hope of pardon to the penitent. And this is the laude, that it is not to be doubted but that God is ready to forgive so soone as the sinner turneth. Therefore he willeth not his death, in so much as he willeth his repentance. But experience teacheth that he so willeth them to repent whom he generally calleth to him, that yet he toucheth not all their hearts. Yet is it therefore to be said that he dealeth deceitfully, because although the outward voice doe but make them vnexecuable which heare and do not obey it, yet it is stedfastly accounted the testimonie of the grace of God, by which testimonie he reconcileth men to himselfe. Therefore let vs hold this for the meaning of the Prophet, that the death of a sinner pleareth not God: that the godly may have affiance, that so soone as they shall be touched with Repentance, there is pardon ready for them with GOD and the wicked may feele that their fault is doubled; because they answered not to so great mercifull kindnesses and gentlenes of God. The mercie of God therefore will alway meeet Repentance, but to whom Repentance is given, both all the Prophets, and

Apollines, and Ezekiel, himselfe do plainly teach. Secondly there is alleged a place of Paul, where he faith that God willeth all men to be saved, which although it have a divers meaning from the other, yet in some thing, they agree together. I answer, first that by the rest of the text it is made plaine how he willeth. For Paul coupleth together, that he willeth them to be saved, and to come to the acknowledging of the truth. If they will have this to be determined, by the eternall counsel of God that they receive the doctrine of saluation, what meaneth that saying of Moses, What nation so noble, that God commeth near to it as hee doth to thee? Now came it to passe that God refrained from many peoples the light of the Gospel, which other enjoyed? Now came it to passe that the pure knowledge of godliness never came to some, and some scarcely tasted so much as any daire principles of it? Hereof it shall now be easie to gather, whereto Paul tendeth. He had commannded Timothy to make solemn prayers in the Church for kingly and princes. But when it seemeth somewhat an abfurditie, that prayers should be made to God for a kinde of men in a manner despaires (because they were not only strangers from the body of Christ, but also endeavoured with all their forces to oppresse his kingdom) hee added, that the same is acceptable to God which willeth all men to be saved. Whereby verie he signifieth nothing else but that he hath stopped vp the way to salvation to no degree of men: but rather that he hath so powred out his merie that he willeth no man to be vsed of it. The other sentences do not declare what God hath by his secret judgement determined of all men: but do shew that there is pardon ready for all sinners which do onely turne themselves to require it. For if they more stately stand upon this that it is said that he will have merie vpon all, I will on the contrary side assuere them with which that is written in another place. That our God is in heaven where he doth whatsoever he will. This worde therefore must to be expounded that it may agree with the other, I will have merie vpon whom I will have merie, and I will shew merie to whom I will shew merie. He that chooseth out them whom he will have merie on, doth not give it to all. But such it clearely appeareth that in that place is spoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we will make no longer disputing about it. Howbeit it is also to be noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alwaie and euerie where and in all men: but leaueth it to him at his libertie at length to make kings and magistrates partakers of the heavenly doctrine, although by reason of their blindness they do now race against it. They seeme to presse vs more strongly with objection of the place of Peter, that God willeth none to perish, but receiue all to repentance. But the envoing of this knot doth by and by offer it selfe in the second word, because the will to receiue cannot be vnunderstood to be any other than that which is euerie where taught. Truely the turning is in the hand of God: whether he wil turne all or no, let him selfe be asked, when he promiseth that he will giue to a certaine fewe men a fleshy heart, leaving to other-some a stonie heart. It is true indeed, that vnlesse he were readie to receiue them which call vpon his merie, this sayeing should be false, Turne to me, and I will turne to you. But I say that none of all mortall men doth come to God but he that is present of God: And if repentance were in the will of man, Paul would not say, If peraduenture he giue them repentance. Yea vnlesse the fame God which with word exhordeth all men to repentance, did with secret mouing of his spirite bring the chosenc to it: Jeremiah would not say, Turne me, Lord, and I shall be turned: for when thou haft turned me, I have repented.

16 But (thou wilt say) if it be so, there shall be small truth in the promises of the Gospel, when they referre of the will of God, affirme that he willeth that which is against his inviolable decree. Not so. For howsoever the promises of salvation be vniuerfall, yet they nothing disagree with the predicellion of the reprobate, so that we direct our minds to the effect of them. We know that then and not til then the
the promises are effectual to vs, when we receive them by Faith, on the other side when Faith is made voide, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these things disagree together: that it is saide that God hath from eternitie ordained whom he will embrace with love, and upon whom he will exercise wrath: and that hee promiseth salvation to all without difference. Truly I say that they agree very well. For in promising he meaneth nothing else than that his mercie is set open for all which doe couet and desire: which thing none doe but they whom he hath enlightened. And them he enlighteneth, whom he hath predestinate to salvation. They (I say) have the truth of the promises true and vnthankfull, so as it cannot be saide that there is any disagreement betwene the eternall election of God, and the testimonie of his grace which he offereth to the Faithfull. But why nameth he all verily that the confinences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they understand that there is no difference of sinners, so that Faith be preserv: and that the wicked may not caull for their excuse, that they want a fanctuarie wherunto they may withdraw themselves from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfullnes they refuse it being offered them. Therefore when the mercie of God is by the Gospell offered to both forts, it is Faith, that is to say the enlightning of God, which maketh difference betwene the godly and ungodly, so as the one forfeeth the effectuallitie of the Gospell, and the other fort obtaines no fruite thereof. The enlightning it selfe also hath the eternall election of God for the rule thereof. The complaint of Christ, which they alledge, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft have I willed to gather together thy chickens, but thou wouldst not maketh nothing for them. I grant that Christ there speaketh not only in the person of man, but also reprocheth them that in all ages they have refused his grace. But we must define what is the will of God which is entreated of. For neither is it unknownen, how diligently God endeavoured to keepe still that people, and with how great thinnes they euen from the first to the last being guinen to their wandering desires refused to be gathered together: but it followeth not thereof that the counsell of God was made void by the malice of men. They answere and say that nothing lesse agreeith with the nature of God than to have a double will in which. I grant to them, so that they falsly expound it. But why doe they not consider so many testimonies, where God putting upon him the afflictions of man descendeth beneath his owne majestie? He faith that he hath with stretched out armes called the rebellious people, that he hath early and late trauelled to bring them backe to him. If they will apply all these things to God, and not consider the figure, there shall arise many superfluous contentions, which this one solution bringeth to agreement, that the propertie of man is figuratively applied to God. How be it the solution which we have brought in another place largely insufficient, that although the will of God be, as to our senses manifest: yet he doth not in himselfe diversly will this & that, but according to this wisdome, which is diversely manifest (as Paul calleth it) he assortment our senses, till it shall be givn vs to know that hee maruellously willeth that which now saemeth to be against his will. They also mocke with caullings, that fith God is the Father of all, it is vrpriecteous that he should dissemble any that hath not before with his owne fault detest this punishment. As though the liberalitie of God stretcheth not even to hoggges and dogges. But if they speake onely of mankind, let them anfweere why God bound himselfe to one people, to be the Father thereof: and why also out of the same people he picked a small number as it were a flour. But their owne luft of cuill speaking hindereeth these railers that they consider not that God to bringeth forth his Sun to shine upon the good & cuill, that the inheritance is laid vp for a few to whom it shall one day be said, come ye blessed of my Father, posseste the kingdom, &c. They object also that God hath none of these things that he hath made. Which although I grant the, yet this remaineth safe which I teach, that the reprobate are hatefull to God, & that very rightfully, because they being destitute of his Spirit can bring forth nothing but curse of curse. They say further, that there is no difference of the Jews and the Gentiles and therefore that the grace of God is without difference set before all men: namely if they grant (as Paul determineth) that God calleth as well out of the Jews as out of the Gentiles, according to his good pleasure, so that he is bound to no man. After this manner also is that wiped away which they object in another place, that God hath enclosed all things under fin, that he may have mercy upon all: namely because he will that the salvation of all them that are saved be ascribed to his mercy, although this benefit be not common to all. Now when many things are alleged on both parts, let this be our conclusion, to tremble with Paul at so great depth, and if wanton tongues shall be busie, that we be not ashamed of this his crying out, O man, what art thou that striuest with God? For Away finite truly affirmeth that they do perniciously measure the righteousness of God by the measure of the righteousness of man.

The xxv. Chapter.

Of the last Resurrection.

Although Christ the sonne of righteousness, having overcome death, shining by the Gospel, giveth vs the light of life (as Paul witnesseth) whereby also it is saide that by believing we have passed from death into life, being nowe not foreiners & strangers, but citizens with the saints, &c. of the household of God, which hath made vs to fit with the only begotten sonne himselfe in heavenly places, that nothing may be wanting to perfect felicite; yet least it should be grievous vs to be exercised under this hard warfare, as though we had no fruit of the victory which Christ hath gotten, we must hold fast that which is in another place sought of the nature of hope. For, because we hope for those things which appear not, and (as it is said in another place) faith is a demonstration of things invisible: so long as we are inclosed in the prison of the flesh, we are way-faring from the Lord. For which reason the same Paul faith in another place that we are dead, and that our life is hidden with Christ in God, and that when he which is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. This therefore is our condition, that with liuing soberly and justly and godly in this world, we looke for the blessed hope, and the comming of the glorie of the great God, and of our Saviour Iesus Christ. Here we neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied & either turne backe our course or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoever hath been hither to set our concerning our salvation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that we may love Christ whom we have not seene, and believing in him may rejoice with unspeakable and glorious joyfullnesse till we receive the end of our faith, as Peter testeth vs. After which manner, Paul faith that the faith and charitie of the godly hath respect to the hope which is laide vp in heauen. When we thus with our eyes fasten'd upon Christ doe hang of heauen, and nothing withholdeth them in earth from carrying vs to the promised blessednesse: then is that truly fulfilled, Our heart is where our treasure is. Hereupon commeth that faith is so rare in the world, because nothing is more hard to our dullest than through innumerable stapes to climb vp above them with endeavouring forward to the price of our heavenly calling. To the great heap of miseries wherewith wee bee almost overwhelmed, are added the mockings of vn-godlie men, wherewith our simplicity is rayled at, when voluntarie forsaking the allusions of present good things, we seeme to followe the blessednesse hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing shadowe. Finally above and beneath vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations bereege vs, to the sustaining of the feare whereof our courages shoulde bee faine too weake, vnlesse being vncumbered of earthly earthly things they were fast bound to the heavenly life, which in seeming is far from vs. Wherefore only he hath soundly profited in the Gospel, which is enjoined to a continual meditation of the blessed resurrection.

2 Of the soueraigne end of good things, the Philosophers have in old time curiously disputed, and also affirmed among themselves: yet none except Plato acknowledged the soueraigne good of man to be his conoyming with God. But what manner of conoyming that was, he could not perceive so much as with any small taste, and no maruell, think he had never learned of the holy bonde thereof. To vs the onelie and perfect felicitie is known even in this earthly walking: but, such as dailie more and more enkindled our hearts with desire of it, till the full enjoying may satisfy vs. Therefore I faide that none receive fruites of the benefits of Christ, but they that lift vp their minds to the resurrection. For, Paul strecth vp this marke to the faithfull, toward which he faith that he endeavoureth, and forgetteth all things till he come to it. And so much the more cheerfully ought we to trauaile toward it, lest if this worlde withold vs, we suffer grievous punishment for our slothfulnesse.

Wherefore in another place he maketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conversation is in heaven, from whence also they looke for their Saluatiue. And that their courses should not faint in this race, hee joineth all creatures companions with them. For, because euerie where are scene deformed ruines, hee faith that all things in heaven and earth do endeuour to the renewing. For fith Adam by his fall dissolvd the perfect order of nature to the creatures, their bondage is painfull and gretious, wherunto they are subiect by reason of the sin of man, not for that they are indured with any feeling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect estate fro which they are fallen. Therefore Paul faith that they groane, & are in paine of childe bearing, that we to whom are given the first fruits of the Spirit, may be ashamed to pine away in our corruption, & not at the least to follow the dead elements, which beare paine of anothers sin And the more to prick vs forward, he calleth the last comming of Christ our redemption. It is true indeede that all the parts of our redemption are already fulfilled: But because Christ hath once beene offered for sinnes, hee shall bee scene againe without sin into saluation. With what miseries souete we be pressed, let this redemption sustaine vs even vntill the performance of it.

3 The very weight of the thing it selfe shall wbet our endeavoure. For neither doth Paul without cause affirm that the holy Gospel is voide and deceitfull, vnke the dead do rife againe: because our estate should be more miserable than the state of all men, namely fith we lying open to the hatreds and reproches of many, are euerie houre in danger, yea and are as sheepe appointed to the slaughter: and therefore the authoritie thereof should fall away not onely in one part, but also in the whole sum which both our adoption and the effect of our saluation conteine. And solet vs be heedfully bent to the most earnest thing of all, that no continuance of time may make vs weareie. For which purpose I have deferred to this place that which I had brefflie to entreate of it, that the Readers may learne, when they have received Christ the author of their saluation, to rise vp higher, and may knowe that he is clothed with heavenly immortallitie and glorie, that the whole body may be made like fashioned to the head, as also the holy Ghoft oftentimes setteth forth in his person an example of the resurrection. It is a thing hard to bee beleued, that bodies when they haue beene confumed with rottennesse, shall at their appointed time rife vp againe. Therefore where many of the Philosophers have affirmed soules to bee immortal, the resurrection of the flesh hath beene allowed of fewe: wherein although there was no excuse, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is too hard a thing to drawe mans senses to beleue it. That faith may overcome so great a stop, the scripture minstreth two helps: the one is in the likenessee of Christ, the other is the almightinesse of God. Now so forth as the resurrection is thought of, let the image of
of Christ come into our minde: which in the nature that he tooke of us so ranne out the race of mortall life, that now having obtained immortalitie, he is to vs a pledge of the resurrection to come. For in the miseries whenwith we are besieged, we carie about his mortifying in our flesh, that his life may be openly shewed in vs, and we may not suffer him from vs neither can we possioble, but that he must be borne in funder. Whereupon commeth that argument of Paul, If the dead do not rise againe, then neither is Christ risen againe, because verlie he taketh that principle for confessed, that Christ was not made subject to death, nor obtained victorie of death by rising againe, pruadile for himselfe: but that that was begun in the head which must needs be fulfilled in all the members, according to the degree and order of euerie one. For it were not right that they should in all points be made egall with him. It is saide in the Psalme. Thou shalt not suffer thy meeke one to see corruption: although a portion of this trust pertaine to vs according to the measure of gift, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Christ, which being free from all rottenness hath received againe his bodie whole. Now leaff the fellowship of blessed resurrection with Christ should be doubtfull to vs, that we may be contented with this pledge, Paul expresslie affirmeth that he therefore fitteth in heauen, and shall come at the last day a judge, that he may make our base and vile bodie like fashioned to the glorious bodie. In an other place also he teacheth, that God raised not vp his fonne from death to the intent to shew a token of his power: but to stretch out the same effectuall force of the spirit toward vs which are faithfull: whom he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, because he was givene to this end that he should make alue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a briefe abridgement those things which might both be more largelie handled, and are worthie to be more gorgiouslie set out: and yet I trust that the godlie reader shal in few words find matter enough which may suffice to edify their faith. Christ therefore is risen againe, that he might have vs companions of the life to come. He was raised vp of the father, in so much as he was the head of the Church, from which he doth in no wise suffer himselfe to be plucked away. He was raised vp by the power of the Spirtue, which is common to vs vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raised vp, that he should be resurrection and life. But as we haue saide that in this mirrour, there is to bee scene of vs a lively image of the resurrection, so let it be to vs a sure substance to stay our mind, so that we be not loothfull or weaerie of long tarrying: because it is not our part to measure the feasions of times by our will, but patiently to rest till God at his owne fit time repaire his kingdome. To which purpose semeth that exhortation of Paul: The first fruits of Christ: and then they that are Christes, euerie one in his order. But that no question should be moved of the resurrection of Christ, upon which the resurrection of vs all is founded, we see by how manie and how diverslie means he hath made it approued by witnesse to vs. Fine noted men will laugh at the historie which the Evangelists rehearse, as at a childifh mockery. For of what importance shall the message be which fearfull fally men bring, and afterward the discipiles confirme being in a manner astonished? Why did not Christ rather set vp the triumphing enigne of his victorie in the midst of the temple and the market place? Why came he not forth terrible into the fight of Pilate? Why doth he not also proue himselfe to the priests, and to whole Jerusalem that he is risen vp alio againe? As for the witnesse which he chose, profane men will scarcely grant them to be sufficient. I answere that although in these beginnings the weakenesse thereof was contemprible, yet all this was governed by the wonderfull providence of God: that partly the loue of Christ and zeal of godlinesse, and partly their owne hardnes of beleefe should carry them in haft to the sepulchre which had lately been defigmned for feare, that they might not only be seeing witnesse of the thing, but also shoule heare of the Angels that which they saw with their eyes. How shall we suspect their credite, who thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the women, till they were brought to the present sight of the thing itself. As for all the people and the Ruler himself, after that they had bin largely convinced, it is no marvel if as well the sight of Christ, as other signes, was not granted them. The sepulchre was sealed vp, the watchmen watched it, the third day the bodie was not found. The souls of the watchmen, corrupted with many scattered a rumor that his disciples had stolen him away. As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armour, or were practised men to enterprize any such feats. If the watchmen had not courage enough to drive them away, why did they not pursue them, that with the help of the people they might have taken some of them? Plate therefore with his ring truly sealed the resurrection of Christ: and the watchmen which were set at the sepulchre both in their holding their peace and in their lying, were made publishers of the same resurrection. In the mean tyme the voice of Angels founded, He is risen, he is not here. The heavenly glistering plainly showed that they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any doubting, Christ himselfe tooke it away. The disciples saw him ofter than once, and also felt his feete and his hands, and their hardnes of beleewing not a little profited to the strengthening of our faith. He disputed among them of the mysteries of the kingdom of God, and at the last in their sights beholding him, he ascended into heaven. And not only this sight was shewed to the xi. Apostles, but also he was scene at once of mee than five hundred brethren. Now when he sent the holy Ghoft, he shewed a sure proof of the life, but also of the souveraine power: as he had said before, It is profitable for you that I go: otherwise the holy Ghoft shall not come. But now Paul was overthrowen by the way, not by the strength of a dead man, but he felt him whom he persecuted to haue molt high power. To Stephen he appeared for another end, namely that with assurance of life he might overcome the feare of death. To discern so many authentique witnesses, is not only a part of distrustfullness, but also offowward and furious stubbornnesse.

4. This which we have faid, that in prouing the resurrection our senses must be directed to the infinite power of God, Paul briefly teacheth, that he may make (faith he) our vile bodie like fashioned to the body of his brightnesse, according to the working of his power, by which he may subdue all things to himselfe. Wherefore nothing is more vmnecet, than here to have respect what may naturally be done, where an insctible miracle is set before vs, which with the greateyne thereof swalloweth vp our senses. Yea, Paul by setting forth an example of nature, reproo- ueth their dullest which deny the resurrection. Thou foole (faith he) that which thou lowest is not quickened unlesse it first dye, &c. He faith that in seed is seene a forme of the resurrection, because out of rottenenesse growth corne. Neither were it so hard a thing to beleue, if we were as heedfull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout all the coasts of the world do offer themselves to our eyes. But let vs remember that none is truely persuaded of the resurrection to come, but he which being rationed in admiration, giueth to the power of God his glory. Ely lifte vp with this affeance, crieth out, Thy dead shall live, my carcase shall rife againe. Awake ye, and praise ye dwellers of the dust. In despaire we lifte vp the body of God the author of life, in whose hand are the ends of life, as it is laid in the Psalm. 1ob also being like to a carriion than to a man, trusting upon the power of God, sticketh not as though he were whole and found to lift vp himselfe to that day, saying, I know that my redeemer lieth: and in the last day he shall rife vp upon the dust (namely to shew forth his power therein) and I shall again be compleaded with my skinne, and in my flesh I shall see God, I shall see him, and none other. For albeit that some do stricely wrest these places, as though they ought not to be understand of the resurrection, yet they strenthen that which they couet to overthrow: because the holy men in their euils fecke comfort from nowhere else than from the benefit of
Cap. 25. Of the manner how to receive the resurrection. Which better appeareth by the place of Ezekiel: For when the Jews beleued not the promise of their returne, and objected that it was no more likely that a way should be made open for them, than that dead men should come out of their graves: there was a vision shewed to the Prophet, a field full of drie bones: those the Lord commanded to take againe flesh and knewes. Although under that figure he rafeth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping he gathereth of the resurrection: as it is to vs an exemplar of the deliverances which the faithfull doe feele in this world. So Christ when he had taught that the voice of the Gospell gueth life: because the Jews received not this, he by and by saide further: Marueil not at this, because the hower commeth in which all that are in the graves shall heare the voice of the fonne of God, and shall come forth. Therefore after this example of Paul, let vs already cheerefully triumph in the midst of battels, because he which hath promised life to come, is mightie to kepe that which is left with him: and so let vs glory that a crowne of righteousnesse is laide vp for vs, which the unfeene judge shall deliver vs. So shall it come to passe, that whatsoever greues us suffer, they shall be to vs a shewing of the life to come, because it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vnjustly afflicted, set at the appeareing of Christ with the Angels of his power, in a flamne of fire. But that is to be holde, which he addeth by and by afterward, that he shal come that he may be glorified in his Saints, and be made wonderfull in all them that haue beleued, because the Gospell hath bene beleued.

But although the multitude of men ought to have beene continually occupied in this studie: yet as though they would of set purpose destroy all remembrance of the resurrection, they haue called death the vitreomost bond of all things and the destruction of man. For verily Salomon speakeoth of the common and receiued opinion, when he saith that a liuing dog is better than a dead Lion. And in another place: Who knoweth whether the foule of a man goe vpward, and the foule of a beast downward? But in all ages this brutifche sencelesse eueor hath bene common in the world, yea and hath broken into the Church it selfe: for the Sadduces haue presumed to profess openly that there is no resurrection, yea and that foules are mortall. But that this grosse ignorance should not helpe to excuse any man, the infidels euen by very instinct of nature haue alway had an image of the resurrection before their eies. For to what purpose serued that holy and inutolable manner of burying, but to be an earnest of new life? Neither may it be anwered that this spring of error: because the religiousnesse of burial was alway in vs among the holy Fathers, and God wilde the same maner to remain among the Gentiles, that an image of the resurrection set before them might awake their drowsinesse. But although that ceremony wanted his vfe of profiting, yet it is profitable for us if we wisely marke the ende of it, because it is no flinder contumation of vnbeleeve, that altogether professed that which no man beleued. But Satan hath not onely astonished the senefes of men, so that they haue buried with the bodies the remembrance of the resurrection, but also hath praefcied to corrupt this parte of doctrine with durers faigned inuentions, that at length it might vitrely die. I passe over how in Pauls time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a little after there followed the Millenaries, which limited the raigne of Christ to a thousand yeeres. This error is childifh, that it needeth not or is not woorthie of any confutation. Neither doth the Revelation make on their side, by which it is certaine that they coloured their error: for as much as in the place where he mentioneth the number of a thousand, he entreateth nor of the eternall blessednesse of the Church, but onely of the durers troubles which were to come upon the Church while it yet travelled in earth. But the whole Scripture crieth out that there shall be no end of the blessednesse of the elect, nor of the punishment of the reprobate. Now of all things which both are hidden from our sight and doe faire passe the capacitie of our minde, either either we must fetch the credite out of the certaine oracles of God, or we must utterly cast it away. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeares to enjoy the inheritance of the life to come, do not make how great a dishonor they do both to Christ and his kingdom. For if they shall not be clothed with immortality: then neither is Christ himselfe, to whose glory they shall be newly fashioned, received into the immortal glorie. If their blessedness shall haue any end: then the kingdom of Christ, yea the blessednes whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally, either they are most unskilfull of all matter concerning God, or they go about with crooked malicims, to overthow the whole grace of God, and power of Christ, the fulfilling whereof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blot out and death swallowed vp, eternal life is fully restored. But very blind men may see how fondly they plate the foules: which feare that they should acribe to God too great cruelty if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lord forsooth shall do wrong, if he deny his kingdom to them which have by their unthankfulness made themselves vnworthy of it. But (say they) their sinnes endure but for a time. I grant: but the majestie, yea and the righteousness of God which they have offended by sinning, is eternall. Worthy therefore the remembrance of iniquitie dieth not: But so the paine exceedeth the measure of the fault. This is a blaphemous noto to be suffered, when the majestie of God is so little set by, when the defiling thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one foule. But let vs leave these trifles, least contrary to that which we have before said, we may seeme to judge their dosages worthy of confutataion.

6 Befide these, there have bin two other doing errors brought in by men perturably curious. The one fort thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they grant that the soules be immortall spirites, saie that they shalbe clothed with new bodies: whereby they deny the resurrection of the flesh. Of the first fort, because I have touched somewhat in speaking of the creation of man, it shalbe enough for me to warne the readers againe, how beastfully an error it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishing blast which doth nothing but quicke the body in this fraile life, and to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing. Finally, to speake that part of vs where-in diuinencesse chiefly thirth and marks of immortalitie appeare, to speake it (Ifay) of this gift: so that the estate of the body should be better and more excellent than the estate of the soule. The scripture teacheth far otherwize, which compareth the bodie to a cottage, out of which it fayeth that we remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that part which maketh vs differing from brute beasts. So Peter being nigh to death, sayeth that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent. And Paul speaking of the faithful, after that he had saied: That when our earthly house shall be dissolved, there is a building for vs in heaven, adoyning us that we are wayfaring from the Lord so long as we abide in the bodie, but do desire the presence of God in the absence of the bodie. If the soules doe not outclue the bodiies, what is it that hath God presented when it is feuered from the body? But the Apostle taketh away all doubting, when he teacheth that we are ioyned in fellowship to the spirites of the righteous.

Heb. 12, 23. By which wordes he sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holy fathers, which even being dead do keepe the same godlinesswes with vs, so that we cannot be the members of Christ vnselle we growe together with them. Vnlesse also the soules being vnclouded of the bodiies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receive blessed glorie, Christ would not haue saide to the sheepe: This day thou Luke 23, 43. shalt be with me in Paradise. Haung to cleare testimonies, let vs not doubt after the example of Christ when we are dying, to commend our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen to commit them to Christ to keepe, which not vnworthy is Acts 7, 56. called a faithfull shepheard and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meanes flute.
is neither lawfull nor expedient. Many doe much comber themselves with disputing what place they keepe, and whether they doe now enjoy the heavenly glory or no. But it is folly and rashness, to search deeper of unknown things, than God doth give vs leave to know. When the Scripture hath faide that Christ is present with them, and receiuen them into Paradise that they may enjoy comfort, on the other side that the soules of the reprobate doe suffer such pains as they have deffered: it goeth no further. What teacher or Master shall now open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the question is no leffe fonde and vaine: forasmuch as wee knowe that there is not the fame dimension of the Soule which is of the bodie. Whereas the blessed gathering together of holy Spirits is called the bottom of Abraham, it is enough for vs this warfaring to be receiued of the common ffather of the Faithfull, that hee may communicate with vs the fruite of his Faith. In the meane time fith the Scripture everie where biddeth vs to hang upon the expectation of Chrifts comming, and deferreth the crowne of glory till then: let vs be content with these bonds appointed vs of God: namely, that the Soules of the godly having ended the labor of their warfare doe goe into a blessed rest, where with happy joyfulness they looke for the enjoying of the promised glory: & that to all things are holfen in fufpence till Christ the redeemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no doubt that they have the fame estate which Iude assigneth to the diuels, to be bound whole with chains, till they be drawn to the punishment whereunto they are condemned.

7 No leffe monitrous is their error which imagine that Soules shall not receive againe the fame bodies wherewith they are now clothed, but shall have newe and other bodies. And the reafon of the Manichees was very trifling, that is, that it is not meere that fleshe which is vnclene ault should rife againe. As though there were no vncleanneffe of Soules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of everlafting life. It was therefore all one as if they should fay that that which is infected with the firit of finne cannot be cleane by God. For I now paffe over that dotage, that fleshe was naturally vnclean, because it was creafe of the Diuell: Onely I faw that what soever is now in vs vnworthie of heauen it hindereth not the resurreccion. And fith whereas Paul biddeth the Faithfull to cleanse themselves from all defiling of the fleshe and of the Spirites, thereupon followeth the judgement which he in another place pronounceth, that every man shall receive by h's body either good or euill. Wherewith agreeeth that which he writeth to the Corinthians, That the life of Iefus Chrift may be openly liueed in our mortall fleshe. For which reafon in an other place he doth no leffe pray that God prefere the bodies whole into the day of Chrift, then the Soules and Spirites. And no maruell, because it were a moft great abfurditie that the bodies which God hath dedicate to be temples to himselfe, should fall away into rottenneffe without hope of rifting againe. What fay we to this, that they are also the members of Chrift? that God commandeth all the parts of them to be fancified to himselfe? that he willeth his name to be praised with tongues, pure hands to be lifted vp to him, sacraments to be offered? What marvell is it therefore that that parte to which the heavenly judge hath vouchsafed to grant fo great honor, should be brought from a mortall man into dali without any hope of resting? Likewise when Paul exhorteth vs to suffer the Lord as well in body as in soule, because both belong to God, verily he fuffereth not that which he chalenge to God as holy, to be adjudged to eelliall rottenneffe. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the rifting againe of this fleshe which we beare. This corruptible (faith Paul) must put on vn corruption, and this mortall must put on immortalitie. If God did make newe bodies, where is this changing of quality? If it had been said that we must be reuned, the doubtfull speech peraduenture mought have giuen occasion to their cauillation. But now when pointing with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiseth to the vn corruption, he plainly enougli deneth any any new bodies to be made. Yea he coude not (faith Tertullian) speake more plainly, vnslese he had holden his owne skin in his hande. And they can by no caullation escape from this, that where in another place he faith that Christ shall be the judge of the world, he alledge this testimonie of Esaie, I liue (faith the Lord) every knee shall bow to me: for as much as he plainly pronounceth that they to whom he speaketh shall be subiect to yeeld an account of their life, which could not agree, if new bodies should be brought before the judgement seat. Now in the words of Daniel there is no doubtfullness: And many of them that sleepe in the earth of dust, shall awake, some to eternall life, and some to reproches and to everlasting contempt; sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elements to make men, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plaine reason teacheth. For if mortalitie which tooke beginning at the fall of man, be accidental: then the repairing which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same bodie which began to be mortal. And truly, whereas the Athenians laughed when Paul affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what manner of resurrection he preached: and that same laufhing not finally availleth to strengthen our faith. The laying of Christ also is wootthic to be noted. Fear them not which kill the bodie, and cannot kill the soule: but fear him which can throwe both the soule and the body into hell fire. For there is no cause to fear, vnlesse the body which we now beare be subiect to punishment. And no lesse plaine is another laying of the same Christ. The hower commeth, when all they that are in graues, shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and shall come forth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, into the resurrection of judgement. Shall we say that soules rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christ? and not rather that at his commandement the bodies shall returne into the lieuidineffe which they had lost? Moreover if we shall haue new bodies giuen vs, where is the like fashioning of the head and the members? Christ rose againe: was it with forging to himselfe a new body? No, but as he had said before, Destroy this temple, and in three daies I will build it vp: he tooke againe the same body which hee had before borne mortall. For he had not much profited vs, if a new body being put in place, the olde body had beene destoried which was offerd vp for a sacrifice of sauf-saftorie cleansing. We must alio hold fast that fellowship which the Apostle preacheth. That we rise againe, because Christ hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable than that our flesh in which we beare about the mortifying of Christ, should be deprived of the resurrection of Christ. Which verily appeareth by a notable example, when at the rising againe of Christ many bodies of the Saints came out of the graues. For it cannot be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which we hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth New poiflfeors of the resurrection: because they being in bodie and soule delivered from corruption, were receued into the keeping of God.

8 I am ashamed in so eleevre a matter to spend so many wordes: but the readers shall contently bear this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for Fowarde and bold wits to deceive the simple. The fleeting spirits with whom I nowe dispute, bring foorth a fained inuention of their owne braine that at the resurrection there shalle be a creation of new bodies. What reason moueth them to think so, but because it semeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with fo long rottennesse should returne into his anciuent state? Therefore onely vnbeliefe is the mother of this opinion. But vs on the other side the Spire of God each where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrection of the flesh. For this reason baptisme (as Paul winnefeth) is to vs a seal of the resurrection to come: and likewise the holy Supper allureth vs to the trust thereof, when we receive with our mouth the signes of spiritual grace. And truly the whole exhortation of Paul, that we give our members to be weapons into the obedience of righteousnesse, should be cold vnlesse that were joyned which he he addeth afterward. He that hath raised vp Christ from the dead, shall quicken also your mortal bodies. For, what should it profite to apostle our feet, hands, eies, and tongues, into the service of God, to pleasure, they were partakers of the stature and rewarde? Which thing Paul plainly confirmeth with his owne wordes, laying: 'the body not to fornication, but to the Lord: and the Lord to the body.' And he that hath raised vp Christ, shall also raise vs by vp his power. More plaine are those words which follow: that our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost and the members of Christ. In the meantime we see how he joyneth the resurrection with chastitie and holinesse, as a little after hee faith that the price of redemption pertineth also to the bodies. Nowe it were not reasonable that the body of Paul, in which hee hath borne the prints of Christ, & in which he honorably glorified Christ, should loose the rewarde of the crowne. Whereupon also came that glorifying. We looke for the redeemer from heaven, which shall make our vile body like fashioned to the body of his brightness.

And if this be true, that we must by many afflictions enter into the kingdom of God, no reason sufficeth to deprave the bodies from this entrie which God both exerciseth vnder the standard of the cross, and honoureth with the praise of victorie. Therefore of this matter there arose among the Saints no doubting, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remoueth in his owne person all the afflictions wherewith we are proued, to teach that they bring life. Yea and vnder the lawe he exercised the hole fathers in this faith with an outward ceremonial. For all that purpose serveth the vph of burying, as we have alreadie showed, that they should knowe that there is newe life prepared for the bodies that are laid vp? Hereunto also tended the spices and other signes of immortalitie, wherewith vnder the lawe the darkenesse of faith was holpen even as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that manner breede by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the spirite doth no lesse diligentie rehearse burials than the chief mysteries of faith.

And Christ commendeth that workes as a speciall workes, truly for none other reason but because it lifteth vp our eies from beholding of the grave which corrupteth and destroyeth all, to the light of the renewing. Moreover the so diligent obseruing of the ceremonial which is praised in the fathers, sufficiently prooueth that it was to them a rare and precious helpe of faith. For neither would Abraham have so carefully provided for the burying place of his wife, vnlesse there had beene for before his eies a religion and a profite byer than the world, namely that garnishing the dead body of his wife with the signes of the resurrection he might confirm both his owne faith and the faith of his souleholde. But a clearer prooue of this thing appeareth in the example of Jacob, which to restitue to his posteritie that the hope of the promised land was not euened by death fallen out of his minde, commanded his bones to be carried thither. I beseech you, if he was to be clothed with a newe body, should he not have giuen a fonde commandement concerning dust that should be brought to nothing? Wherefore if the authoritie of the Scripture be of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a more cleare or more certaine prooue. For this euin children vnderstand by the words of resurrection, and raising vp againe. For neither can we call it the resurrection of that which is now fust created, neither should that saying of Christ stand fast. Whatsoever the Father hath given me, it shall not perish, but I will raise it vp in the last day. To the same purpose saith the word of Sleeping, which pertaineth onely to the bodies. Whereupon also burying places were called Cemeteria, Sleeping places. Nowe it remaineth that I speake somewhat of the manner of the resurrection. I use this word, because Paul calling it a mysterie, exhorteth us to sobrietie, and brideth the libertie to dispute like Philosophers freely and strongly of it. First we must holde, as we have said, that we shall rise againe in the same flesh which we bore, as touching the substance, but the qualitie shall be other. As when the same flesh of Christ which had beene offered for sacrifice, was raised vp againe, yet it excelled in other qualities as if it had beene altogether another flesh. Which thing Paul declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one substance of the flesh of a man, and of a beast, but not all one qualitie: as all starres have like matter, but not like brightness: so he teacheth that though we shall keepe still the substance of our body, yet there shall be a change, that the state of it may be much more excellent. The body therefore, that we may be raised vp againe, shall not perish nor vanish away: but putting off corruption, it shall put on incorruption. But for as much as God hath all the elements ready at his becke, no hardinesse shall hinder him, but that he may command both the earth & waters & fire, to render that which seemeth to be consumed by them. Which also Esai teellfeth though not without a figure, when he faith, Behold, the Lord shall go forth of his place, that he may visit the iniquity of the earth: and the earth shall discouer her bloud, and shall no more hide her dead. But there is to be noted a difference between them that have beene dead long before, &those whom that day shall finde alive. For we shall not all sleepe (as Paul faith) but we shall all be changed: that is to say, it shall not be of necessity that there be a distance of time betweene death and the beginning of the second life: because in a moment of time, and in the twinkling of an eie the found of the trumpet shall pearse, to raise vp the dead incorruptible, and with a suddan change to fashion againe the living into the same glory. So in another place he comforteth the faithfull which must die: because they which shall then remaine alive shall not go before the dead, but rather they shall first rise againe which haue slept in Christ. If any object that laying of the Apostle, that it is appointed to all mortall men once to die, it is easie to answere it with saying that when the state of nature is changed, it is a kinde of death, and is fully so called. And therefore these things agree well together, that all shall be renewed by death when they shall put of their mortall body: and yet that it is not necessity that there be a feuer of the body and the soule where there shall be a sudden changing.

9 But here ariseth a harder question: by what right the resurrection which is the singular benefit of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accussed of God. We know that all were in Adam condemned to the death. Christ came the resurrection and life. Came he to give life to all mankinde vainerfully, without choice? But what is more against reason then that, that they should by their obstatute blindness obtaine that which the godly worshippes of God doe obtaine by onely faith? Yet this remaineth certaine, that there shall be one resurrection of judgement, and another resurrection of life, and that Christ shall come to cleeve the Lambes from the goates. I answere, that this ought not to seeme strange, the likeness whereof wee see in daily experience. We see that in Adam we were deprived of the inheritance of the whole world, and that we are by no little just reason debarred from common food, then from the eating of the tree of life. Whence then commeth it to passe, that God doth not only make his soune to rise vpon the good and euell, but also as touching the eyes of this present life, his infallible liberality continually floweth forth to them with large plentifulness. Hereby veyne we know that those things which properly belong to Christ and his members, doe also overflow to the wicked, not that it is their rightfull possession, but that they may be made the more inexucuable. So the wicked doe oftentimes find God beneficall, by more than meanes proues, yea such as sometime doe darken all the blessings of the godly, but yet doe turne to their greater damnation. If any man object, that the resurrection is not fully compared to nighting and earthly benefite: here also I answere that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountain of life, they defraud the death of the Duell, whereby they should be utterly destroyed. Yet by the marvellous comfell of God there was found a meane state that out of life they might live in death. No more absurdite ought it to seeme, if the resurrection happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their wills to the judgement seate of Christ, where they must answer for their matter and

and teacher. For it were a small paine to be conformed away with death, if they were not to suffer punishment for their obstinacie, brought before the judge, whose vengance they have without end and measure pronounced against themselves. But although we must hold that which we have faile, and which that notable confession of Paul before Felix containeth, that he looketh for the resurrection of the righteous and wicked: yet the Scripture oftentimes setteth forth election together with the heavenly glory to the onely children of God: Because Christ properly came not to the destruction, but to the salvation of the world. Therefore in the Creede there is make mention of the blessed life ouely.

10 But for as much as the prophecy of death swallowed vp by victorie, shall then and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicitie, the end of the resurrection: of the excellencie whereof, if all things were spoken which the toongs of men were able to speake, yet scarce the smalllest parcel thereof should be expressed. For howsoever we truly heare that the kingdom of God shall be fluffed full with brightnesse, joie, felicitie, and glorie: yet those things that are spoken of are most farre remooved from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speeches, untill that day come when he himselfe shall giue to vs his glorie to be scene face to face. We knowe (faith John) that we are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeard. But when we shall be like to him, then we shall see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophets, because they could by no wordes expresse the spiritual blednessesse in it selfe, did in a manner groffely portray it vnnder bodily things.
But for as much as the senternesse of desire must with some taste of that sweetenesse be kindled in vs, let vs chiefly continue in this thought, that if God do as a certaine fountaine which cannot be drawn dry, containe in him the fulnesse of al good things, nothing is beyond him to be coueted of them that tend toward the soueraigne good and the full perfection of felicitie: as we are taught in many places. Abraham, I am thy rewardre exceeding great. With which saying accordeth David. The Lorde is my portion, the midst very well fall to me. Againe in another place, I shall be satisfied with thy countenance. But Peter pronunceth that the faithfull are called to this end, that they may be made partakers of the nature of God. How so; because he shall be glorified in all his saints, and shall be made wnderfull in them that have beleived. If the Lord will enterparten his glorie, power, and rightouesness with his elect, yes and giue himselfe to them to be enjoyed, and (which is better) will affer a certaine manner grow into one with them: let vs remember that under this benefit is contained all kind of felicitie. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowledge that we yet stay beneath at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiving of our minde be compared with the highnesse of this mysterie. Wherefore in this behalfe we must keepe sobrie, lest with how much greater boldnesse we shall fiue vp on high being vnmindfull of our owne small measure, so much more the highnesse of the heavenly glorie overwhelme vs. We feele also how the vnmea-surable greedinesse to know more than is lawfull, tickleth vs: from whence both tribling and hardfull questions doe spring from time to time: tribling I call those of which there can no profite be gathered. But this second kinde is worse, because they which giue themselfes to them, doe entangle themselfes with pernicious speculations, and therefore I call them hardfull. That which the Scriptures doe teach, ought to be out of all doubt with vs: namely that as God diuerely distributing his gifts to the Saints in this worlde, doth unequally enlighten them, so the measure of glorie shall not be equal in heaven where God shall crowne his gifts. For neither doth this belong indifferently to all which Paul faith: Ye are my glory and crown in the day of Christ:
but also that saying of Christ to the Apostles: Ye shall sit judging the twelve tribes of Israel. But Paul (which knew that as God enricheth the holy ones with spirittuall giftes in earth, so hee beautifith them with glorie in heauen) doubteth not that there
there is a peculiar crown laid upon him according to the rate of his labours. And Christ to set forth to the Apostles the dignity of the office which they did bear, telleth them that the fruit thereof is laid upon them in heaven. So Daniel also faith, But the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they which instruct many, as Stars to the worlds end and for ever. And if a man heedfully consider the Scriptures, they do not only promise eternal life to the faithful, but also special reward to every one. Whereupon commeth that saying of Paul, The Lord render to him in that day. Which the promise of Christ confirmeth, Yee shall receive a hundred fold in the eternal life. Finally, as Christ beginneth in this world the glory of his body with manifold diversities of gift, and increaseth it by degrees: so he shall also make it perfect in heaven.

But as all the godly will receive this with one consent, because it is sufficiently testified by the word of God, so on the other side leaving crabbed questions, which they shall know to be a hinderance to them, they will not pose their appointed bounds. As for my part, I do not onely privately forbear superfluous searching of unprofitable things, but I also think that I ought to beware that I doe not with answerings nourish the lights to of other. Men hungry of vaine knowledge do aske how great shall be the distance betweene the Prophets and the Apostles, and againe betweene the Apostles and the Martyrs: how many degrees Virgins differ from married folks: Finally, they leave no corner of heaven unsearched. Then it commeth to their minde to what purpose serveth the repairing of the world, Sith the children of God shall neede nothing of all this so great and incomparable plenty: but shall be like to the Angels, whose not eating is a signe of the eternall blessednes. But I answer that in the very light there shall be so great pleasures, So great sweetnesse in the onely knowledge without any vse, that this felicitie shall faine passe all the helps where with we be now holpen. Let vs imagine our felues to bee set in the most wealthy coast of the world, and where wee shall want no pleasure: yet who is there whom his sickness doth not sometime hinder and not suffer to vs the benefices of God? who is there whose course his owne intemperance doth not oft brake in sufffer? Whereupon followeth that a cleare enjoying and pure from all fault, although there be no vse of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicitie. Some go further and aske whether droffe and other corruptions in metals, be not farre from restoring and are contraria to it. Which though in some respects I grant, yet I looke with Paul for the repairing of these faults which took them beginning at finne, toward which repairing they groane and are in travaile. Yet they proceed further, and aske what better estate is prepared for mans, Sith the blessing of issue shall then be at an end. This knot is also easie to be loosed. Whereas the Scripture is honorably setteth out that kind of blessing, that is referred to the encresases wherewith God continually draweth forward the order of nature her marke: but in the perfection it is known that there is another maner. But as the same are easie when that the maze draweth them in depler, & at length when every mans denies please himselfe there is no end of straining; therefore let this be a short way for vs to be contented with the glasse and darse speech, untill we shall see face to face. For we are a great multitude care which way they may go to heaven: but all do before their time court to know what is done there. All being commonly sluggish and slowe to enter into batailles, we already paint out to themselves imagined triumphs.

Now because no description can match the greciousnes of the vengeance of God upon the reprobate, their torments and paines are figured to vs by bodilie things, namely by darknesse, weeping, gnashing of teeth, insouenchantable fire, and a wrime endlesely gnawing the hart. For by such manners of speech it is certaine that the holy Ghost meant to trouble all our senses with horror: as when it is saide that there is prepared from eternity a deepe Hell, that the nourishment thereof are fire and much woode: that the blast of the Lord, as a stream of brimstone, doth set it on fire. As by such things we must be holpen after a certaine manner to conceiue the miserable state of the wicked, so we ought chiefly to fasten our thought vpon this how wretched a thing it is to be estranged from the fellowship of God: and not that one, but all to feel the majesty of God to bent against thee, that thou canst not escape but be fast straing off. For first his displeasure is like a most violent fire, with touching whereof all things are detoured and swallowed vp. Then, all creatures so serve him to execute his judgement, that they to whom the Lord shall so shew his wrath shall feel the heauen, earth, sea, and heatts, as it were with cruelle indignation enflamed against them and armed to their destruction. Wherefore it is no small thing that the Apostle pronounceth, when he faith that the unbelievings shall suffer eternall punishment by dying from the face of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power. And so oft as the Prophets do cast us in feare with bodly figures, although they speake nothing excessively for our dulnes, yet they adde forethowings of the judgement to come, in the Sunne and the Moone and the whole frame of the world. Wherefore the unhappie confences do finde no rest, from being vexed and tossed with a terrible whirldwe, from feeling themselves to be torn in pces by God being angrily bent against them, from being pierced and laucted with deadly stings, from trembling at the lightning of God, and being broosed with the weight of his hand: so that it is much more easie to enter into all bottemles depths and deadring pits, then to stand one moment in those terrors. What and how great then is this, to be presed with everlasting and never ceasing siege of him? Of which thing the 90. Psalm containeth a notable sentence: that although with onely light he scater abroad all mortall men and bring them to nought, yet his worshippers, how much more fearefull they are in the world, so much more he enforceth them and priceth them forward loaden with the croste, vntill he be all in all.

THE FOURTH BOOKE OF THE INSTITUTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION,
which intreateth of the outward meanses or helps, whereby God allu-reth versus into the fellowship of Christ, and holdeth versus therein.

The first Chapter.

Of the true Church with which we ought to kepe vnitie, because it is the mother of all the godly.

Hat by Faith of the Gospell Christ is come ours, and we be made partakers of the saluation brought by him and of eternall bleuedenes, is alreadie declared in the last booke. But because our rudenes and slothfulnes, yea and vnitie of wit, do neede outward helps whereby Faith in vs may both be engendred, and grow and increase in proceeding toward the marke whereunto it tendeth: God hath also added them thereby to prouide for our weaknesses. And that the Preaching of the Gospell might flouris, he hath left this treasture with the church. He hath appointed Pastors and teachers, by whose mouth he might teach them that be his: he hath furnished them with authoritie, finally he he hath left nothing undone that might avail to the holy consent of Faith, and right order. First of all he hath ordained Sacraments, which we feele by experience to be more than profitable helps to nourish and confirm Faith. For because being enclosed in the prison of our flesh, we do not yet attain the degree of Angels, God applying himself to our capacity according to his wonderfull providence, hath appointed a mean whereby we being farre distant from him might come into him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we entreat of the Church, and of the government, orders and power of it, and then of the Sacraments, and lastly of the ciuil order: and therewithall that we call away the godly readers from those corruptions whereof Satan in the Papacie hath depravd all things that God hath appointed for our salvation. I will begin at the Church, into whose bosome God will have his children to be gathered together, not only that they should by her helpe and ministerie be nourished while they are infants and young children, but also be ruled by her motherly care till they grow to riper age, and at length come to the marke of Faith. For it is not lawful that those things be seuered which God hath conioyned, that to whom he is a Father, the Church be also their mother: and that not only under the law, but also since the comming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth that we are the children of the new and heavenly Hierusalem.

2 In the Creede, where we professe that we beleue the Church, that is not spoken onely of the visible Church whereof we now intreat, but of all the elect of God, whose number they are also comprehended that are departed by death. And therefore this word Beleue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference be noted betweene the children of God and the vngodly, between his peculiar flocke and fouage beasts. For whereas many doe interface this word, In, that is without probable reason. I grant in deed that it is the more commonly vned, and alfo wanteth not the converning testimony of antiquite, forasmuch as even the Nen Creede, as it is reported in the Ecclesiasfical historie, addeth the preposition In. But there withall we may marke by the writings of the auncient Fathers, that it was receiued without controversy to say, that they beleued the Church and not in the Church. For

Augustine, & that auncient writer whatsoeuer he was, whose worke remaineth under the name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Creede, doe not only so speake themselues, but alfo doe expressly note that it should be an unproper manner of speaking if the preposition were adioyned, and they confirm their opinion with no tribling reason. For we therefore telesie that we beleue in God because vpon him as a true speaker our minde reposeh it selfe, and in him our confidence resteth, which could not so conveniently be spoken to say in the Church no more than it could be faide, I beleue in the forgiveneesse of sinnes, or in the resurrection of the flesh.

Therefore although I would not trie upon worde, yet I had rather follow the propriete of speaking that should be fitte to express the matter, than curiously to secke for formes of speache whereby the matter may without cause be darkened. But the ende is, that we should know that although the dull attempt all meanes to ouerthrow the grace of Christ, and though the enemies of God be caried with violent rage to the same intent: yet it cannot be extinguished, nor the blood of Christ be made barren, but that it will bring forth some fruit: And so is both the secret election of God and his inwarde calling to be considered: because he alone knoweth whoe he is, and holdeth them inclosed vnder a seale as Paul reameth it: Eph.1.15, saying that they beare his tokens whereby they may be seuerally knowne from the reprobate. But because a small and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, and a few graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onely is to be left the knowledge of his Church, the foundation whereof is his secret election. But it is not sufficient to conceive in thought and minde the multitude of the elect, vnlesse we thinke vpon such an unitie of the Church into which we are truly persuaded...
Cap. 1. Of the outward meanes

perswaded that we our selues be ingrafted. For vnlesse we be vnder our head Christ unied together with all the rest of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of the inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or vniuersall, because we cannot finde two or three Churches but that Christ must be core infunder, which cannot be done. But all the elect of God are so knit together in Christ, that as they hang vpone one head, so they may grow togethers as it were into one bodie, cleaung together with such a compacting of joints as the members of one selfe bodie : being truly made one, which with one hope, Faith, Charitie, with one selfe spirt of God do live together, being called not onely into one inheritance of eternall life, but also into one partaking of one God and Christ. Wherefore although the forrowfull defolation that on each side pertaineth it selfe in sight, crieth out that there is nothing left of the Church, yet let vs know that Christs death is fruitful, and that God maruelloufly as it were in secret corners preferueth his Church. As it was saide to Elias, I haue kept to my selfe seven thouland men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

The article of the Creed touching the Church, concerneth after a fort the invisible Church, whereunto the communion of Saints being added containeth foure speciall states of faith.

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doth in some respect belong to the outwarde Church, that euery one of vs should hold himselfe in brotherly consent with all the children of God, should yeeld e into the Church that authoritie which it deserveth, finally shoulde he behaue himselfe as a Sheece of the flocke. And therefore is adioyned the communion of Saints. Which parcell, although commonly the olde writers doe leaue it out, yet is it not to be neglected : because it verie well expresseth the qualitie of the Church: as if it had beene saide that the saints are gathered together into the fellowship of Christ with this condition, that whatsoeuer beneficieth God beyndowthe upon them, they should continually communicate them one to another. Whereby yet the durefittie of graces is not taken away. As we know that the gifts of the holy Ghost are diversely distributed: neither is the order of cnymall governement disturbed, by which it is lawfull for euery man privately to enjoy his owne possession, as it is necessarie, that for preuertution of peace among men, they shoule have among themselves peculiar and diuised properties of things. But there is a communite affirmed such as Luke descreibeth, that of the multitude of the beleeuers there was one hart & one foule: and Paul when he exhorteth the Ephesians to be one body, one spirit as they be called in one hope. For it is not possible, if they be truly persuaued that God is the common father, & the common head to them all, but that being coniodyned among themselves with brotherly love, they should continually communicate those things that they haue. Now it much behooveth vs to know what profit thereupon returneth vnto vs. For we beleue the Church to this ende, that we may be certeinnly pefuaded that we are the members orit. For by this meanes, our saluation refueth vpon sure founde statis, that it, although the whole frame of the world be shaken, cannot come to ruine and fall downe. But if it standeth with Gods election, neither can it vane or faile but together with his eternall Providence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioyned with the reddfestnes of Christ, which will now no more suffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his owne members to be rent and toome in peeces. Beside that, we are assured that truth shall alway abide with vs, so long as we are hidden in the bosome of the Church. Lastly of all that we beleue that these promises belongeth to vs, there shall be saluation in Syna, God shall for ever abide in Hierusalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the church do, that it holdeth vs in the fellowship of God. Also in the verie word Communion is much comforte: because while it remaineth certaine, that whatsoever the Lorde giueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good things confirmed. But in such sort to embrace the vertue of the Church, it is not needefull (as we have already saide) to see the Church it selfe with our eyes, or feele it with our hands: but rather by this that it consisteth in Faith, we are admonished that:

AG.4.31.
Ephes.4.4.
we ought no leaue to thinke it to be, when it perseth our understanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our Faith therefore the worse, because it conceiued it un known, forasmuch as we are not herein commanded to discerne the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God enely, and not ours) but to determine affered in our minds, that all they that by the mercifull kindeffe of God the father through the effectual working of the holy Ghoft, are come into the partaking of Chrifit, are feuered into the peculiar right and proper poftifion of Chrifit: and that, forasmuch as we be in the number of those, we are partakers of so great a grace.

4. But fith it is now our purpose to entertain of the visible Church, let vs learne even by this one title of Mother, how much the knowledge thereof is profitable, yea necessarie for vs: forasmuch as there is no other entrie into life, vnleffe the conceiue vs in his wombe, vnleffe the bring vs forth, vnleffe the fedde vs with hir breathes, and finally vnleffe the keepe vs vnder her custodie and gouernance, vntil fuch time as being unclad of mortall flech we shall be like vnleffe Angels: For our weakenes suffereth vs not to be dệmiffed from schoole, till we have bene schoollers throughout the whole course of our life. Beside that out of her bowme there is no fouerennes of finnes, and no vntilation to be hoped for, as vnleffe Efai and Joel, with whom agreeth Ezekiel when he declareth that they shall not be in the number of Gods people whom he put teth away from the heavenly life. As on the contrarie fide, they are laid to write their names among the Citizens of Heienaalem, that turne themselves to the following of ture godlinesse. A ficer which maner it is also faid in an other Psalme: Remember me, Lord, in the good will of thy people: viitle me in thy vntilation that I may fee the benefites of thy elect, that I may be merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may rejoyce with thy inheritance. In which words the fatherly favour of God, and the peculiar telemim of the Spirituall he is restrayned to his flocke, fo that the departing from the Church is alwaye damnable.

5. But let vs proceede to profecute that which properly belongeth to this place, Paul writeth that Chrifit, that he might fill all things, gaue some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangeliiftes, and some Paftors and Teache, to the reforing of the holy ones, into the worke of ministrie, vnto the edification of the bodie of Chrifit, vntil we all come into the vitie of Faith, and of the acknowledging of the Sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and to the measure of the full grown age of Chrifit. We fee how God which was able to make them to be his perfect in a moment, yet will not haue them growe into manly age but by the bringing vp of the Church. We fee the meane expressed, for that vnto the Paftors is enioyed the preaching of the heavenly doctrine. We fee how all, not one excepted, are brought into on rule, that they should with milder Spritite and willing to learne, yeeld theirfelles to the teachers ap pointed for that vfe. And by this marke Efaiie had long before feuerd out the kingdom d e of Chrifit, where he faith: My spritite which is in thee, and the words that I haue put in thy mouth shall never depart, neither out of thy mouth nor out of the mouth of thy fede and thy children children. Whereupon followeth that they are worthy to perish with famine and pining hunger, whosoeuer they be that refuse the Spirituall meate of the Soule reached vnto them of God by the hands of the Church. G O D doth breath Faith into vs, but by the instrument of his Gofpell, as Paul faith that faith is by hearing. As alfo with God remaineth his power to fate, but (as the fame Paul witnesseth) he vertureth and displayeth the fame in the preaching of the Gofpell. For this reafon in old time he willed that there should be made holy assemblies to the sanctuarie, that doctrine vtered by the mouth of the Priest should nourish the con fent of Faith. And to no other end those glorious titles haue respect, where the tem ple is called the rest of God, and the sanctuarie his house, where he is faid to sit be tweeene the Cherubines, but to bring estimation, loue, reverence and dignitie to the ministrie of the heavenly doctrine, which otherwife the fight of a mortall and

Cap. 1. Of the outward means defiled man would not a little diminish: Therefore that we should know, that out of earthen vessels is brought forth unto vs inestimable treasure, God himself commeth forth, and in as much as he is author of this degree, so he will have himselfe to be acknowledged present in his institution. Therefore after that he hath forbidden his to give them selves to judgement by flying of birds, to southings, magical artes, necromancie and other superstitions, he immediately addeth that he will give them that which ought to suffice in stead of all, that is to say, that they shall never be destitute of Prophets. But like as he sent not the olde people to Angels, but raised up teachers out of the earth, which might truly performe the office of Angels: so at this day also his will is to teach vs by men. And as in the olden time he was not content with the onely law, but added Priests for expostors, at whose lipps the people should enquire for the true meaning thereof: so at this day he not onely willeth vs to be heedfully bent to reading, but also appointeth masters over vs, by whose trauell we may see holpen: whereof commeth double profit. For on the one part by a very good triall it proue our obedience, where we heare his ministers speaking even as it were himselfe. On the other side it also prouideth for our weaknenesse, while after the manner of men he had rather speake vs by interpreters to assure vs unto him, than with thundring drone vs away from him. And truly how expedient this familiar manner of teaching is for vs, all the godly doe feele by the fear wherewith the majestie of God doth woorthily astonish them. But they that thinke that the authoritie of the doctrine is abased by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, do bewray their vnthankfulness, because among so many excellent gifts wherewith God hath garnished mankind, this is a singular prerogative, that he vouchfaneth to conferate the mouths and toonges of men to himselfe, that his owne voice should found in them. Wherefore on our behalfe let vs not be greued obediently to embrace the doctrine of salvation set forth by his commandement and by his owne mouth: because although the power of God is not bound to outarde means, yet he hath bound vs to the ordinacie manner of teaching: which while prentike men refuse to keepe, they wrap themselves in many deadly snares. Either pride, or disdainfulness, or enuie mouth many to perswade themselves that they can sufficiently profit by their owne private reading and study, and so to despise publick assemblies, and to account preaching superfluous. But fis they do as much as in them is loose or breake in under the holy bond of minitie, no man can escape the due punishment of this divorce, but he bewitcheth himselfe with pestilent errors and most wicked doings. Wherefore, that the pure simplicie of faith may flourish among vs, let vs not be greued toathe this exercise of godlines, which God by his institution hath shewed to be necessarie for vs and so carefullly commendeth. But there was never yet found any euin of the most wanton dogs which would say that we ought to stop our cares against God: But in all ages the Prophets and godly teachers have had a hard strife against the wicked, whose stubbornnes can never come under this yoke, to be taught by the mouth of the ministerie of men. Which is as much as to blot out the face of God which shineth vs vs in doctrine. For in olde time the faithfull were commanded to seeke the face of God in the Sanctuary, and the same is so oft repeated in the law for no other cause, but for that the doctrine of the law and the exhortations of the Prophets were to them a lively image of God: as Paul affirmeth that in his preaching shineth the glorie of God in the face of Christ. How much the more delectable are the Apostates, which greedily seeke to divide Churches, as though they did drive sheep from their folds & cast them into the mouths of wolves.
But we must hold that which he hath allcaged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwise builded but by outward preaching, and that the holy ones are holden togither with no other bonde but when with learning and profiting with one conuenient they keepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this ende principally, as I have said, the faithfull in old time vnder the lawe were commanded to retort to the sanctuarie. Because when Moses speakeheth of the dwelling place of God, he doth therewithall call it the place of name, where God hath set the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainly teacheth that without the doctrine of godlines there is no vfe thereof. And it is not doubtfull but that for the same reason David with great bitterness of Spiritie complaineath that hee is by the tyrannous crueltie of his enemies kept from entering into the Tabernacle. It seemeth commonly to many a childih lamentation, because it should be but a very small losse, and also no great pleasure should be forgone thereby, to want the entrie of the temple, so that there were enough of other delightfull things. But he bewaileth that with this one greefe, anguifh and sorrowe, he is fretted & vexed and in a maner wasteth. For nothing is of greater estimation with the faithfull, than this helpe whereby God by degrees lieth vp his on high. For this is also to be noted, that God in the mirror of his doctrine alway so shewed himselfe to the holy Fathers, that the knowledge was spiritual. Wherefore the temple is called not onely his face, but also (to take away all superstition) his Scotefclee. And this is that happy meeting into vnite of faith, while from the higheft even to the lowest all do aspire to the head. All the temples thatuer the Gentiles vpon any other purpose builded to God, were but a meere prophaning of his worships, whereunto though not with like grossenes, yet for what the Iews fell, Whereof Stevens out the mouth of Esay reprocheth them where he faith, that God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, &c. Because onely God doth his worde sanctifie to himselfe temples to the lawfull vfe. And if we rashly attempt any thing without his commandement, by and by to an euill beginning do cleaue new deuices by which the euill is spread abroad without measure. Yet Xerxes, when by the counsell of the Magitians he burned vp or plucked downe all the temples of Greece, vndiscreetely faide, that the Gods to whom all things ought to be freely open were enclosed within walles and tiles. As though it were not in the power of God, to the entent he might be necere vs, after a certaine maner to defende vnto vs, and yet neither to change place, nor to fasten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certaine chariots to carrie vs vp to his Heauenlie glorye, which with the immeasurable greatneffe thereof filleth all things, yea and in heighth surmounteth the heauens.

Now forasmuch as at this time there hath bin great strife about the effectuallnes of the ministrie, while some excesstuely amplifie the dignitie thereof: and some other affirme that that is properly belonging to the holy Ghost is wrongfullie gien away to mortall man, if we thinketh that ministers and teachers do pearce to the mindes and harts, to amend as well the blindnes of the mindes as the hardnesse of harts: it is meere that we gue a right determination of this controuersie. Al that they contend on both parts shall easely be accorded by expressly noting the places where God the author of preaching joyning his spirit with it promiseth fruite thereof: or againe, when slauing himselfe from outward helpe he chalengeth to himselfe alone as well the beginnings of faith as the whole course thereof. It was the office of the second Elias (as Malachi winneefeth) to enlighten the mindes and to turne the harts of Fathers to the children, and vnableeuers to the wisehead of the righteous. Christ prounceneth that he sendeth the Apostilles, that they shoulde bring fruite of their labour. But what that fruite is Peter shortly defineth, saying that we be regenerate with incorruptible seede. And therefore Paul glorifieth that hee by the Gospell begat the Corinthians, and that they were the feale of his Apostleship: yea that hee was not a literall Minifter: such as did one else beare the cares with founde of voyage, but that there were guen him an effectuallnes of Spiritie, that his doctrine shoulde not bee vnprouitable. In which meaning also in another place hee saith, that his Gospell was not in worde onelie, but in power. Hee affirmeth also that the Galathians by hearing receueth the Spirit of faith. Finally in many places hee maketh

maketh himselfe not onely a worker together with God, but also assigneth himselfe the office of giving salvation. Truely he neuer brought foorth all these things to this intent to giue vnto himselfe any thing were it neuer fo little fenerally from God: as in an other place he shortly declareth, saying, our labour was not vnprofitable in the Lord, according to his power mightily working in me. Againe in an other place, he that was mightie in Peter toward the circumficion, was also mightie in me toward the Gentiles. But how he leaueth nothing fenerally to the minifters, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but God that giueth the encrease. Againe: I haue laboured more than all: not I, but the grace of God that was with me. And truely we must hold fift those sayings, where God ascribing to himselfe the enlightening of the minde, and the renewing of the heart, teacheth that it is a robberede of God if man take vpon himselfe anie part of either of them. In the meanes time if any one offer himselfe to the minifters whom God ordeine, willing to leame, he shall knowe by the fruites, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleased God, and that this yoke of modulation was not in vaine laid vpon the faithfull.

7 But as for the Church visible and which is within the compaff of our knowledge, what judgement is meete to be giuen thereof, I thinke it already appeares evidently by that which we haue before faid. For we haue faid, that the holy Scripture speaketh of the Church after two forts. Sometime, when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is indeede before God, into which none are receuied but they that are both by grace of adoption the children of God, and by sanctification of the Spirit the true members of Christ. And then trulie it comprehendeth not onlie the holy ones that dwell in earth, but also all the elect that have bene since the beginning of the world. But of fometimes under the name of the Church it signifieth the vniuerfal multitude of men scattered abroad in the world, which professe that they worship one God and Christ, by Baptifme enter into his faith, by partaking of the supper testifye their vntrie in true doctrine and charitie, haue an agreement in the word of the Lord, and for the preaching thereof do keepe the minifterie ordaine by Christ. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Christ but the name and outward fower: there be manie ambitious, couteous, euil, speakers, some of vnclene life: which be suffered for a time, either because they cannot by lawfull order of judgement be comminc, or because there is not alway in vre that jeuerie of discipline that ought to be. Therefore as we must needs beleue that the Church which is insufficible to vs, is to bee fene with the eyes of God onelie: so are we commanued to regard this Church which is called a Church in respect of men, and to keepe the communION of it.

8 There fore so much as behoued vs to knowe it, the Lord hath set it out by certaine markes and as it were signes vnto vs. This is indeede the singuler prerogatuye of God himselfe, to knowe who is his, as we haue alreadye alladged out of Paul. And truely that the rashneffe of men should not crepe so farre, it is proued by the very successe of things daile putting vs in minde, how farre his secret judgements do surmount our understanding. For euen they that seemed most delicate, and accounted vterly past hope, are by his goodneffe called backe into the waie: and they that seemed to stand fift in comparision of other, doe oftimes fald. Therefore according to the secret predestination of God (as Augustine faie) there be manie sheepe without, and many wolves within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that knowe neither him nor themselves. But of those that openly beare his badge, his onelie cicies do see who be both holy without fanning, and who will continue euene to the end, which is the verie chiefe point of salvation. Yet on the other side, forasmuch as he foresawe it to be some deale expedient, that we should knowe who were to be accounted his children, he hath in this part applied himselfe to our capacitie.
capacitie. And because the certainie of faith was not necessarie, he hath put in place thereof a certain judgement of charitie: whereby wee should acknowledge for members of the Church those that both with confession of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of sacraments, doe profess the same God and Christ with vs. But as for the knowledges of the bodie thereof, how much more that he knewe it to be necessarie for our salvation, with so much the more certaine marks he hath set it out.

9. Loe hereupon groweth and ariseth vnto vs, a face of the Church visible to our eyes: For wheresoeuer we see the word of God to be purely preached and heard, and the sacraments to be ministrad according to the institution of Christ, there it is in nowise to be doubted that there is some Church of God: forsauing as his promise cannot deceive. Wherefoever two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that we may evidently understand the summe of this matter, we must procede by these as it were degrees: that is to say, that the unuerse Church is an multitude gathered together out of all nations whatsoever they be, which being sundered and feuerally scattered by distances of places, yet doth agree in one truth of godly doctrine, and is bound together with the bond of one selfe religion: And that so vnder this are comprehended all particular Churches, which are in all townes and streets according to the order of mens necessitie, so that every one of them may rightheallie have the name and authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profession of godlines are reckoned among such Churches, although they be in deede strangers frō the Church, yet do after a certaine manner belong vnto it, till by publike judgement they be banished out of it. Howbeit there is somewhat a divers manner in judging of private men and of Churches. For it may fall in experience, that such men as we that think not to be altogether worthy of the company of the godly, yet we must vs never brethren and account them among the faithfull, for the common consent of the Church, whereby they are suffered and borne withall in the body of Christ. We do not by our testimonie allow such to be members of the Church: but we finde them the place that they have among the people of God, till it be by orderly right of lawe taken away from them. But of the very multitude we must otherwisse think: which if it hath and honorost the minifterie of the word, and the administration of Sacraments, it deserveth without doubt to be esteemed and judged a Church: because it is certaine that those things are not without fruit. So we do also preferre to the vnuerse Church her vnitie, which diuerse spirits have alway travailed to cut in sunder: neither do we defraud of their authoritie those lawfull assemblies which are disposed according to the sinne of places.

10. We have set for signes to discern the Church by, the preaching of the word, and the observing of the Sacraments. For those can be no where but they must bring forth fruite, and be prospered with the blesting of God. I do not say, that wheresoeuer the word is preached, there by and by springeth vp fruite: but I say that no where it is received and hath a stayed state, but that it bringeth forth the effectual fruite thereof. Where the preaching of the Gospel is true and heard, and the Sacraments are not neglected, howsoeuer it be, there for that time appeareth not deceitfull and not doubtfull face of the Church, whereof no man may unpunished either despise the authoritie, or refuse the admonitions, or resist the counles, or moke at the corrections: much leFFE to depart from it, and to brake in sunder the vnitie of it. For the Lord doth highly esteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he counteth him for a traitorous runaway and foraker of Religion, whosoever shall stubbornly estrange himselfe from any Christian fellowship, so that it be such a one as hath the true minifterie of the Word and Sacraments. He so commendeth the Churches authority, that when it is violat, he judgeth his owne diminished. Neither is it of small importance, that the Church is called the pillar and strong stay of truth and

One way to know what Church is true, and another who be the true members of the Church. Matt.18.20.
Cap. I. Of the outward means and the house of God. By which wordes Paul signifieth, that to the end the truth of God should not decay in the world, the Church is a faithfull keeper thereof: because God will was to have the preaching of his word kept pure, and to shew himselfe vnto vs a father of householde by her ministerie and labour, while the feedeth vs with spirituall nourishments, and procureth all things that make for our salvation. It is also no slender praise, that it is laide that she is chosen and seuered by Christ to be his spouse, that should be without wrinkle and spot, the body and fulnesse of him. Whereupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God and of Christ. Therefore so much the more we must beware of so wicked disagreement. For while we go about, so much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of God's truth, we are worthise that he should send downe his lightning with the whole violent force of his wrath to destroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any fault more hainous, than with wicked breach of faith to defile the marraige that the only begotten sonne of God hath vouchsafed to contract with vs.

Wherefore let vs diligently keepe these markes imprinted in our minde, and let vs esteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeavoureth than to take away, and abolish the one of these, or both: sometyme that when these markes are rased and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall funcion of the Church: sometyme that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages past, the pure preaching of the worde hath vanished away: and now he doth with so great importancie travell to overthoue the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But now, how dangerous, yea how deadly a tentation it is when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation whereon are seene the signes and tokens by which the Lord thought his Church sufficiently described? We see how great heede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we should not be deceived under the title of the Church, every congregation that pretendeth the name of the Church must be examined by that manner of triall, as by a touchstone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lorde, it will not deceuie vs: let vs boldly yeeld vnto it the honour due to Churches. But contrariwise if it boast it selfe without the word and Sacraments, we must no leffe with more confidence beware of such deceits, than on the other side we must flee rashnesse and pride.

Wherefore let vs diligently keepe these markes imprinted in our minde, and let vs esteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeavoureth than to take away, and abolish the one of these, or both: sometyme that when these markes are rased and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall funcion of the Church: sometyme that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages past, the pure preaching of the worde hath vanished away: and now he doth with so great importancie travell to overthoue the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But now, how dangerous, yea how deadly a tentation it is when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation whereon are seene the signes and tokens by which the Lord thought his Church sufficiently described? We see how great heede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we should not be deceived under the title of the Church, every congregation that pretendeth the name of the Church must be examined by that manner of triall, as by a touchstone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lorde, it will not deceuie vs: let vs boldly yeeld vnto it the honour due to Churches. But contrariwise if it boast it selfe without the word and Sacraments, we must no leffe with more confidence beware of such deceits, than on the other side we must flee rashnesse and pride.

Whereas we say that the pure ministerie of the worde and the pure vsage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a sufficient pledge and earnest, so that we may safely embrace as the Church any fellowship wherein both these shall be: this extendeth so farre, that it is never to be call'd off, so long as it shall continue in those, although it swarme full of many other faultes. Yea and there may some faultie creep into it, in the administration either of doctrine, or of the Sacraments, which ought not to straungue vs from the Communion of it. For all the articles of true doctrine be not of one fort. Some be so necessary to be known, that they ought to be certaine and vndoubted to all men, as the proper principles of religion: of which sort are, That there is one God, That Christ is God, and the sonne of God: That our Saluation consisteth in the merite of God: and suchlike. There be other that being in controversie betweene Churches, yet doe not break the vnitie of faith. For those Churches that disagree about this one point, if without lust of contention, without stubbornesse of affirming, the one thinke that foules when they depart from the bodies doe flee vp into heaven, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainly holdeth that they liue to the Lorde: the wordes of the Apostle are: Let all vs that be perfect thinke all one thing; but if yee thinke any thing otherwise, this the Lorde shall also reveale vnto you. Doth he not sufficiently shewe that diversitie of opinions about these matters, that be not so necessarie, ought to be no ground of disagreement among Christians? It is in deede a principal point, that we agree in e all things. But for as much as there is no man that is not wrapped with some little cloud of ignorance, either we must leave no Church at all, or we must pardon a being deceived in such things as may be unknown without violating the summe of religion, and without least of salvation. But I mean not here to defend any errors be they never so little, so as I would thinke that they should be cherished with flattering and winking at them: but I say that we ought not rashly for every light difference forsake the Church, in which at least that Doctrine is retained safe and uncor-ruped, wherein standeth the saetie of godlines, and the vfe of Sacraments is kept as it was instituite by the Lord. In the meantime, if we endeavour to amend that which displayeth vs, we do therein according to our dutie. And herunto belongeth that saying of Paul: If any thing better be revealed to him that writeth, let the first hold his peace. Whereby it is evidente, that all the members of the Church are euerie one charged with endevour to publike edification, according to the measure of his grace, so that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that we neither do forsake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, do trouble the peace and well ordered discipline thereof.

13 But in bearing with the imperfection of life, our gentle tenderness ought to go much further. For herein is a very slipperie easiness to fall: and herein with no small deceit doth Satan lay way for vs. For there have been alway some, which filled with fally perdition of perfect holinesse as though they were already made certaine aerie spirits, despited the company of all men, in whom they saw remaining any thing of the nature of the creature. Such in old time were the Cathary, and they that were as mad as they, the Donatists. Such at this day are some of the Anabaptists, which would seem to have profited above the rest. Some there be that offend more by an undifcreet zeal of righteousness, than by that mad pride. For when they see among them to whome the Gospel is preached, the fruit of life not agreeably answering to the doctrine thereof, they by and by judge that there is no Church. It is indeed a moost just displeasure, and such a one whereunto in this moost miserable age of the world, we give too much occasion. Neither may we excuse our accursed slothfullnesse, which the Lord will not suffer unpunished: as euen already he beginmeth with grievous scourges to chastifie it. Wo therefore to vs, which with so disolute licentiousnesse of wicked doings, make that weake confessions be wounded by reason of vs.
But in this age, which they offend whom I have spoken of, because they cannot measure their being displeased. For where the Lord requireth clemencie, they leaving it, do give themselves wholly to immeasurable rigorousnes. For, because they think that there is no Church where there is no found purenesse and yprightnesse of life, for hated of sinnes they depart from the lawfull Church, where they thinke that they swarue from a company of wicked men. They allege that the Church of Christ is holy. But that they may also understand, that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them hear this parable out of the mouth of Christ, wherein it is compared to a net, in which fishe of all kindes are gathered together: and are not chosen out till they be raised abroade upon the shoare. Let them hear that it is like vnfo a cornfield, which being sowed with good graine, is by the enemies fraude scattered with tares, of which it is not cleansed vntil the crop be brought into the barne shoare. Finally, let them hear that it is like vnfo a fowre, wherein the wheat is so gathered together, that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till being cleansed with shane and fuse, it be at length laid vp in the grainer. If the Lord pronounce that the Church shall come to the day of judgement, to be troubled with this euill, to be burdened with mingling of euill men: they do in vaine seeke for a Church sprinkled with no spot.

14 For they cry out that it is an intolerable thing, that the pestilence of vices so rangeth

rangeth abroad. What if the saying of the Apostle doe here also answer them? Among the Corinthians not onely a few had gone out of the way, but the infection had in a manner possessed the whole bodie: There was not onely one kinde of sinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certaine horrible outragious doings: it was not onely corruption of manners, but also of doctrine. What in this case faith the holy Apostle, that is to say, the instrument of the holy Ghost, by whose testimonie the Church standeth and falleth? Doth he require a diuision from them? Doth he banish them out of the kindeome of Christ? Doth he strike them with the extremest thunderbolt of curse? He not onely doth none of all these things: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Christ and fellowship of Saints. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, feetes, and envious partakings doe broyle: where quarrels and brawlings be in vre, with a greediness of hauing, where that wicked dooing is openly allowed, which were abominable among the very Gentiles: where Paul's name is unnuflly railest at, whom they ought to have honoure as their Father: where some fcorne at the resurrection of the dead, with ruine whereof the whole Gospell falleth: where the gracious gifts of God faue to ambition and not to charity: where many things are vncomely vnorderly done; and if therefore the Church, and that the ministry of the word and of the Sacraments is there not refused, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that cannot be charged with the tenth part of these faults? They that with so great precisenes deale so cruelly against the Churches of this present time: what (I pray you) would they have done to the Galathians, which were almost vter forakers of the Gospell, among whom yet the same Apostle found Churches?

15 They object alio, how that Paul grievously rebuketh the Corinthians for suffering in their company a man that was a hainous sinner, and then he fetteh a generall sentence wherein he pronounceth, that it is vnlawfull even to eate bread with a man of reprochfull life. Here they cry out: If it be not lawfull to eate common bread, how may it be lawfull to eate with them the bread of the Lord? I confess in deede that it is a great dishonor, if hoggis and dogges have place among the children of God: it is also much more dishonor if the holy body of Christ be gien foorth to them. And truly if they be well ordered Churches, they will not suffer wicked men in their bosome, and will not without choice admit both worthy and vnworthy together, to that holy table. But forasmuch as the Pastors do not alway so diligently watch, yea and sometyme are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to be, or are hindered so that they cannot see that severite that they would: it commeth to passe that euery that are openly euil, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holy ones. This I grant to be a fault: neither will I diminuith it, Sith Paul doth so sharply rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church be slacke in her dutie, it shall not be therefore immediately in the power of every private man, to take upon himselfe the judgement to feeuer him. I doe in deede not denye that it is the dooing of a godly man, to withdraw himselfe from all private companie of euill men, to entangle himselfe in no willing familiaritie with them. But it is one thing to fle thee company of euill men, and another thing for hatred of them to forfake the communion of the Church. But whereas they thinke it sacrilege to be partakers of the Lords bread with them, they are therein much more rigorous than Paul is. For where he exhorteeth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine an other, or euery man the whole Church, but that they should eache proowe himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnworthy man, then truly Paul would bid vs to looke circumspectly whether there were any in the multitude, by whose vnchannes we might be defiled. Now when he requireth onely of euery man the proowe of themselves, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if any vnworthy doe thrust themselves in among vs. And nothing els is meant by this which he faith afterward. He that eateth vnwoorthily, eateth and drinketh judgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himselfe. And rightfully. For it ought not to stand in the choice of every particular man, whom to be received, and whom to be rejected. The knowledge hereof belongeth to the whole Church, which knowledge cannot be had without lawfull order, as hereafter shall bee faide more at large. Therefore it should be vnrightheuse, that any private man shoule be defiled with the vnwoorthinesse of another, whose he neither can nor ought to keepe backe from comming to it.

16 But although by this vndiscreete zeale of righteousnesse this tentation doth sometime alfo enter into good men: yet this we shall find that too much pretension groweth rather of pride, disdainfulnesse, and false opinion of holinesse, than of true holinesse and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are boldether than other, and as it were standard bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the most part doe it upon no other cause, but in despising of all men to boast themselves to be better than other. Therefore Augustine faith well and wisely: When godly order and manner of Ecclesiasiticall discipline ought principally to have regard unto the vnitie of Spirit in the bond of peace: which the Apostle commandes to be kept by bearing one with another: and which being not kept, the medicine of reuenge is prodused to be not onely superfluous, but also pernicious, and therefore now to be no medicine at all: those cuill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affectiou of their owne contentions, doe greedily labour either whole to draw or at least to diuide the weake common people intangled with the boasting of their name, swelling with pride, mad with stubbornes, traitorous with frauds, troublesome with seditions, least they should feeme to want the light of truth, doe pretend a shadow of rigorous severe: and those things that are in the holy Scriptures commanded to be done with a gentler kinde of healing, suing the sinceritie of loue, and keeping the vnitie of peace, to correct the faults of brethren, they abuse it to fascilege of schisme, and to occasion of cutting off. But to godly and quiet men hee giueth this counsell, that they mercifully correct that which they can, and that which they cannot, patiently beare, and grone and mourne with loue, vntil God either amend and correct them, or at the haruest roote vp the tares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly tranquile to fortiie themselves with these armours, least while they seeme to themselves strong and courageous reuengers of rightoufnesse, they depart from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of rightoufnesse. For fith it is gods will to have the communion of his Church to be kept in this outward fellowship: he that for hatred of cuill men doth break the token of that fellowship, entrench into a way whereby is a slipperie falling from the communion of Saints. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truly holy and innocent before the eyes of the Lord, whom they see not. Let them thinke that euem of them that be diseased there be many that do not please or flatter themselves in their faultes, but being now and then awaked with earnest care of God do aspire to a greater vprightnesse. Let them thinke that judgement ought not to be giuen of a man by one deede: for althought as the holiest do sometime fall away with a most grieuous fall. Let them thinke that to gather a Church there lieth more weight both in the miniftre of the word and in the partaking of the holy mysteries, than that all that forch should vanyth away by the fault of some wicked men. Let of all let them consider, that in judging the Church, the judgement of God is of greater value than the judgement of man.

17 Where also they pretend that the Church is not without cause called holy, it is meet to weigh what holiness it excelleth: least if we will admit no Church but such a one as is in all points perfect, we leave no Church at all: It is true indeede which Paul faith, that Christ gave himselfe for the Church to sanctifie it: that he cleansed it with the laver of water with the word of life, to make her unto himselfe a glorious Church in such fort holy that neither can be at any time altogether pure & faultlesse, nor being faultlesse, ceaseth thereby to be a Church.
Cap. 1. Of the outwärde meanes

Outs spouse hauing no spot, or wrinkle, &c. Yet this is also nothing leffe true, that the Lord daily worketh in smoothing her wrinkles and wiping away her spots. Where-upon followeth that her holines is not yet fully finished. Therefore the Church is so holy, that it daily professeth and is not yet perfect: daily proceedeth, & is not yet come to the mark of holines; as also in another place shall be more largely declared. Where-as therefore the Prophets propheticie that there shall bee a holy Hierusalem, through which strangers shall not passe: & a holy temple whereunto uncleeane men shall not enter; lest vs not so take it, as if there were no spot in the members of the Church, but for that with their whole endeavour they aspire to holines & found pureness, by the goodness of God cleanesses is ascribed to them, which have not yet fully obtained. And although oftentimes there be but rare tokens of such sanctification among men: yet we must determine that there hath beene no time since the creation of the world wherein the Lord hath not had his Church, and that there shall also be no time to the very end of the world, wherein he shall not have it. For albeit immediately from the beginning the whole kinde of men is corrupt and defiled by the sinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted maffe, God alway sanctified some vessels unto honor, that there should be no age without feeling of his mercy. Which he hath testified by certaine promises, as thefe: I haue ordained a testament to my elect: I haue sware to David my feruant, I will for cwer continue thy feed: I will build thy fiate in generation & generation. Again, the Lord hath chosen Sion, he hath chosen it for a dwelling to himselfe: This is my rest for cwer, &c. Again, these things faith the Lord, which gueth the Sunne for the light of the day, the Moone and stars for the light of the night. If these lawes shall faile before me, then the seed of Israel shall also faile.

18 Hereof Christ himselfe, the Apostles, and in manner all the Prophets have given vs example. Horrible are those descriptions wherein Esay, Hierimie, Joel, Abacuc, and the other do lament the sicknesses of the Church of Hierusalem. In the common people, in the magistratce, in the Priestes all things were so corrupt, that Esay doubteth notto match Hierusalem with Sodom and Gemorrah. Religion was partly despised, partly defiled: in their manners, are commonly reported theftes, extortions, breaches of faith, murders and like mithciefes. Yet therefore the prophets did neither erect to themselues new Churches, nor build vp new altars on which they might have feueral sacrifices, but of whatsoever maner men they were, yet because they considered that God had left his word with them, and ordained ceremonies whereby he was there worshipped, in the middest of the assembly of the wicked, they helde vp pure handes vnto him. Truely if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they would sooner haue died a hundred times than haue suffered themselves to be drawn thereunto. Therefore nothing withheld them from departing, but desire to the keeping of vnitie. But if the Prophets thought it against conscience, to estrange themselves from the church for many & great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in manner of the whole people: then we take too much vp one vs, if we dare by and by depart from the communion of that Church, where not all mens manners doe satisfe either our judgement, yea or the Christian profession.

19 Now what manner world was there in the time of Christ and the Apostles? And yet that desperate vngodlines of the Pharisees, and the dissolute licentiousnesse of living, which then each where reigned, could not hinder, but that they vsed the same ceremonies with the people, and assembled with the rest into one temple to the publike exercises of religion. Whereof came that, but because they knew that the fellowship of euill men did not defile them, which with a pure conscience did communicate at the same ceremonies? If any man be little moued with the Prophets and Apostles, let him yet obey the authority of Christ! Therefore Cyprian wele faith though there bee seene tares or uncleeane vesseles in the Church, yet there is no cause why we shoulde depart from the Church: we must onely labour that we may be whole:

we must use diligence and endeavor as much as we may that we may be a golden or siluer vessel. But to breake the earthen vessels, is the onely worke of the Lorde, to whom also is given an iron rod. And let no man challenge to himselfe that which is properly belonging to the Sonne onely, to be able alone to fannie the floorre, and cleanse the chaffe, and feuer all the tares by mans judgement. This is a proude obstinacie, and presumption ful of sacrilege, which a peruerse futor taketh to it selfe, &c. Therefore let both these things remaine certainly fixed: First that he hath no excuse, that of his owne will will faketh the owther communion of the Church. Where the worde of God is preached and the Sacraments ministred: then that the faultes of a fewe or of many are no hinderance, but that we may therein rightly professe our faith by the Ceremonies institute by God: because a godly contentence is not hurt by the vnworthinesse of any other either pastor or private man, and the mysteries are to a holy and vpright man neutronelle pure and holsome because they are altogether handled of vncleane men.

20 Their precifeneffe and disdainfulnesse proceedeth yet further: because they acknowledge no Church but such as is pure from all spotts be they neuer fo small: yet they are angry with good teachers, for that in exhorting the faithfull to go forward, they teach them all their life long to grate vnder the burden of vices, and to flee vnto pardon. For they prate that by this meanes men be led from perfection. I grant in deed, that in earnest calling upon perfection we ought not coldly or coldly to travel, much leffe to be idle, but to fill our minde with confidence therof while we be yet in our course. I say, it is a diuellish intendacion. Therefore in the Creede the forgiveneffe of finnes is aptly joyned next after the Church. For none doe attaine it, but onely they that are citizens and of the household of the Church as it is read in the Prophet. Therefore the building of the heauenly Hierusalem ought to goe before, wherein afterward this mercifulnesse of God may haue place, that whatsoever men vnto it, their iniquities may be taken away. I say that it ought first to bee bulched, not for that there can be any Church without the forgiveneffe of finnes, but because the Lorde hath not promised his mercie but in the communion of Saints. Therefore the first entrie for vs into the Church and kingdom of God, is the forgiveneffe of finnes, without which we haue no covenant or conioyning with God. For thus he faith by the Prophet, in that day will I strike you a covenant with the beast of the field, with the foule of the aire, and with the verminne of the earth. I will brake the sword of warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to sleepe without feare. I will esposte you vnto me for ever. I will esposte you (I say) in rightoulines, in iudgement, in mercie, and in compassions. We see how by his mercie the Lorde reconcileth vs to himselfe. And so in another place, when he foretelleth that the people shall be gathered together againe, whom he had scattered abroad in his wrath, hee faith, I will cleaneze them from all wickednesse wherewith they have sinned against me. Wherefore by the signe of washing we enter into the fellowship of the Church, whereby we may be taught that there is no entrie open for vs into the household of God, vnlesse our filthinesse be first wiped away with his goodnesse.

21 But by the forgiveneffe of finnes the Lord doth not onely receive and adopt vs once into the Church, but by the fame he also preferueneth and maintaineth vs still in it. For to what purpose were it to haue such a pardon granted vs, as should ferue for no vse? But euery one of the godly is a witnesse to himselfe that the mercie of God should be vaine and mockinge, if it should be granted onely but once: because there is none that is not in his owne conscience proue throughout his whole life of many weaknesse, which neede the mercie of God. And truly not in vaine doth God promiseth this grace peculiarly to them of his owne houshold, and not in vaine doth he commandeth the same message of reconciliation to be daily offered vnto them. Therefore as throughout all our life wee carrie about vs the remants of sinne, vnlesse wee be sustained Cap. 1. Of the outward means sustained with the continual grace of the Lord in forgiving our sins, we shall scarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternal salvation. Therefore they ought to thinke that there is pardon always ready for their sins. Wherefore we ought to holde affuredly, that by the liberaltie of God by meanes of Christs suffering through the sanctification of the Spirit, sins have beene and are daily pardoned to vs which be called and graffed into the body of the Church.

22. To deale this benefite vnto vs, the keys were given to the Church. For when Christ gave the Apostles commandement, and delivered them power to forgive sins, hee meant not this onely, that they should loose them from sins that were from vngodlinesse converted to the faith of Christ: but rather that they should continually execute this office among the faithful. Which thing Paul teacheth, when he writeth that the embassage of reconciliation was left with the ministers of the Church, whereby they should oftentimes in Christs name shew the people to reconcile themselves to God. Therefore in the communion of Saints, by the ministration of the Church herself, sins are continually forgiven vs, when the Priests or Bishops, to whom that office is committed, doe with the promises of the Gospell confirme godly confidences in hope of pardon and forgivenesse: and that as well publiquely as privately, according as necessitie requireth. For there be very many, which for their weaknesse doe need a singular atonement. And Paul reporteth that not onely in common preaching, but also in houfes he had testified the Faith in Christ, and generally admonished every one of the doctrine of salvation. Therefore we haue here three things to be noted. First that with how great holinesse fouer of the children of God doe excell, yet they be alway in this estate, lo long as they dwell in a mortal body, that without forgivenesse of sins they cannot stand before God. Secondly, that this benefite is so proper to the Church, that we cannot otherwise enjoy it, but if we abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is distributed vnto vs by the ministers and Pastors, either by preaching of the Gospell, or by ministring of the Sacraments: and that in this behalf principally appeareth the power of the keys, which the Lord hath giuen to the fellowship of the faithful. Wherefore let every one of vs thinke this to be his duty, no where else to seeke forgivenesse of sins, than where the Lord hath set it. Of publick reconciliation which belongeth to discipline we shall speake in place fit for it.

23. But for as much as those phrenetike spirites that I haue spoken of, doe go about to plucke away from the Church this onely anchor of salvation, confidences are the more strongly to be confirmed against a pestilent opinion. The Nouatians in olde time troubled the Church with this doctrine: but not much unlike to the Nouatians, our age also hath many of the Anabaphteis which fall to the same doctates. For they thinke that the people of God are in Baptisme regenerate into a pure and Angelike life, that is corrupted with no filthinesse of the flesh. But if any man offend after baptism, they leave to him nothing but the vnappeasable judgement of God. Briefely they grant no hope of pardon to a sinner fallen after grace receiued, because they acknowledge no other forgivenesse of sins, but that whereby we be first regenerate. But although there be no lie more cleerely confuted by the Scriptures: yet because these men finde some whom they may deceive (as also in olde time Nouatius had many followers) let vs shortly shewe how mad they bee to their owne and others destruction. First, whereas by the commandement of the Lord, the holie ones doe daily repeate this prayer, forgive vs our detts: truly they doe confesse themselves detters. Neither doe they craue it in vaine because the Lord hath alway appointed no other thing to be asked, than that which he himselfe would giue. Yea, whereas he hath testified that the whole prater shall be heard of his father, yet he hath also sealed this absolution with a peculiar promise. What will we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones all their life long a confession of sinnes, yea & that continual, and promiseth promiseth pardon. What boldnes is it, either to exempt them from sinne, or if they have stumbled, utterly to exclude them from grace? Now whom doth he will vs to forgive yeuentic times seuen times? not to our brethren? To what ende did he command it, but that we should follow his mercie? He forgiveth therefore, not once or twice: but as often as being striken downe with the acknowledging of sins they sigh vnto him.

24. But (that we may begin in a maner at the very swaddling clouts of the church) the Patriarches were circumcised, being allured into partaking of the covenante, having vndoubtedly of their fathers diligence beene taught righteousness and innocencie, when they conspired to murther their brother: this was a mischeauous acte, to be abhorred of the most desperate theues. At the last being meekned with the monitions of Iudas, they folde him: this was also an intolerable hainousnes. Simeon & Levi, with wicked revenge, and such as was also condemned by their owne fathers: judgement, vse cruelty against the Sichemites. Ruben with most vnclene luft defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when hee woulde give himselfe to fornication against the lawe of nature, went in to his sonnes wife. And yet so farre are they from being wiped out of the chosen people, that they be rather raised vp to be heads of. But what did David or when he was a governour of justice, with how great wickednes did hee by shedding of innocent bloud open the way to his blinde luft? Hee was alreadie regenerate and among the regenerate garnished with notable praiyes of the Lord: neuertheless hee committed that hainous offence, which is horrible euin among the Gentiles: and yet hee obtained pardon. And (that wee may not tarrie vpon single examples) howe many promisses there are in the lawe and the Prophets of God: mercie toward the Israelites, so oft it is proued that the Lorde beareth himselfe appeasable to the offences of his people. For what doth Moses promise to come to passe, when the people being fallen into Apostasy shall returne vnto the Lord: He shall bring thee backe out of captiuitie, and shall haue mercie on thee, and shall gather thee together out of the peoples to whom thou haft beene dispersed. If thou bee scattered euin to the borders of the heauen, I will from thence againe gather thee together.

25. But I will not begin a recitall that should never be ended. For the Prophetes are full of such promisses, which doe yet offer mercy to the people couered with infinite wicked doings. What offence is there more hainous than rebellion? for it is calledd a diuorce betweene God and the Church. But this is overcomed by the goodnes of God. What man is there (faith he by Jeremie) that if his wife giue forth her bodic in common to adulterers, can abide to returne into favor with her? but with thy fornication all the waies are polluted, O Juda, the earth hath beene filled with thy filthie loues. But returne vnto mee, and I will receive thee. Returme thou, turne away, I will not turne away my face from thee: because I am holy, and am not angry for euere. And truely he can bee no otherwise minded, which affirmeth that hee will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted & liue. Therefore when Salomon did dedicate the temple, he appointed it also to this vs, that the praiers made for obtaining pardonne of sinnes should be heard from thence. If (said he) thy fons shall sinne, (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou being angrily Shall deliuer them to their enimies, & they shall repent in their hart, and being turned shall entreat thee in their captiuitie, saying, we have sinned, we have done wickedly, & shall praise toward the land which thou haft giuen to thy fathers, and toward this holy temple: thou shall heare their prayers in heauen, and shalt be made mercifull to thy people that haue sinned against thee, and to all their wickednesse wherewith they have offended thee. And not vaine the Lord ordained in the law daily sacrifices for sins. For if the Lord had not forscenene that his people should be troubled with continuall diseases of sinnes, hee would never haue appointed these remedies for them.
Cap. 1. Of the outward meanes

26 Was this benefit taken away from the faithful, by the coming of Christ, wherein the fulnes of grace was shewed forth, so that they dare not now pray for pardon of sins? If that they offend the Lord they may not obtain any mercy? What shall this be else, but to say that Christ came to the destruction of them that be his, and not to their salvation, if that mercifulness of God in pardoning sins which in the old testament was continually readie for the holy ones, be now laid to bee vterly taken away? But if we beleue the Scriptures which expressly crie out, that in Christ only the grace and kindness of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifullnes of mercy was powred out, that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not doubt that there floweth vnto vs a more bountifull mercifullnes of the heauenly father, than that it is cut off or shortned. And hereof there want not examples. Peter which had heard that he should be denied before the Angels of God that confesled not the name of Christ before men, denied him thase in one night, and that not without exeruction: yet he was not put away from pardon. They that lived inordinately among the Thaelilions were so charifified, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Even Simon the Magician himselfe is not cast in dperation, but he is rather commanded to hope wel, when Peter counfelleth him to flee to prayer.

27 Ye most haimous finnes have sometime posifled whole Churches, out of which Paul rather gently unwrapped them, than pronounced them accursed. The falling away of the Galathians was no meane offence. The Corinthisans were so much lesse excusables than they, as they abounded in mo and those nothing lighter sins: yet neither of them are excluded from the mercie of God. Yea even they that had finned above the rest in uncleanesse, fornication and vnholylinke, are namely called to repentance. For the covenant of the Lord remaineth and shall remaine for ever immoveable, which he solemnly made with Christ the true Salomon and his members, in these words: If his sons shal forlike my law, and shall not walke in my judgments, if they shall defile my rightcounselle, and not kepe my commandements, I will visite their iniquities with a rod, and their finnes with stripes: But my mercie I will not take away from him. Finally by the vtere order of the Creede we be taught, that there remaineth in the Church of Christ continuall pardon of finnes: For that when the church is as it were publisshed yet forgunenes of finnes is adioyned.

28 Some that be somewhat wiser, when they fee the doctrine of Nouatnus to be confuted with so great plainnes of Scripture, make not every sin vpardonable, but wilful transgression of the law, into which a man wittingly & willingly falleth. Now they that say so, do vouchsafe to grant pardon to no sin, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lord in the law commandeth one for of Sacrifices to be offered for cleansing of the wilfull sins of the faithful, and other to redeem their ignorances: how great lyvde acte shal it be to grant no cleansing to wilfull sinne? I say that there is nothing plainer, than that the only sacrifice of Christ auaileth to forguine the wilfull sins of the holy ones: so much as the Lord hath testified the same by carnall Sacrifices as by signes. Againe who can excuse Davud by ignorance, whom it is evident to have beene so well instructed in the law? Did Davud not know how great was the fault of adultery and manslaughter, which daily punished the same in other? Did brother slaughters feene to the Patriaikes a lawfull thing? Had the Corinthians so ill profisfed that they thought that wantonnes, vncleanesse, whoredome, hatreds, and contentions pleased God? Did Peter being so diligently admonished not know how great a matter it was to forswear his master? Therefore let vs not with our owne enviousnes stop vp the way against the mercie of God that to gently vtereth it selfe.

29 Truely I am not ignorant that the olde writers expounded those finnes that are daily forgun to the faithful, to be the light offfences that creepe in by weaknesses of the flesh: and that they thought that the soleinne repentance which was then required required for hainous misdeedes might no more be iterate than Baptisme, Which saying is not so to be taken, as though they would either throw them downe headlong into desperation that after their first Repentance had fallen againe, or extenuate those other sinnes as though they were small in the sight of God. For they knew that the holy ones doe oftentimes stagger by infidelity, that tuperfluous othes do sometimes fall from them, that they now and then are chafed vnto anger, yea that they breake out even into manifest railingse, and beside these be troubled with other euniles which the Lord not slenderly abhorreth: but they so called them, to put a difference betweene them and publike crimes that with great offence came to the knowledge of the Church. But whereas they did so hardly pardon them that had committed any thing worthy of Ecclesiastical correction, they did not this therefore, because they thought that such should hardly have pardon with the Lord: but by this feueritie they meant to make other afraide that they should not rashly runne into wicked dooings, by the desiring whereof they might be estranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truly the word of the Lord which herein ought to be the onely rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of discipline is so far to be extended, that he that ought cheefly to be provided for be not swallowed vp with heauntes: as we haue before declared more at large.

The ij. Chapter.

A comparison of the false Church with the true Church.

Of how great value the ministerie of the word and Sacraments ought to be with vs, and how farre the recovery of it ought to proceede, that it be vnto vs a perpetuall token whereby to discerne the Church, it hath beene already declared. That is to say, wherefoever that ministerie abideth whole and vn corrupted, there the faults or defeaces of maners are no impediment but that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the very ministerie it selfe is by small errors not so corrupted, but that it may be esteemed lawfull. Moreover we haue shewed that the errors that ought so to be pardoned are those whereby the principall doctrine of religion is not hurt, whereby those chief points of religion that ought to be agreeably holde among the Faithfull are not destroyed, and in the Sacrament, those that doe not abolish nor impair the lawfull institution of him that ordained them. But so loone as lying is broken into the chiefe tower of religion, so loone as the summe of necessarie doctrine is perverted, and the vi of the Sacraments falleth: truly the destruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an end, when his throat is thrust through or his hart deadly wounded. And this is clearly prooved by the words of Paul, when he teacheth that the foundation of the Church is laide vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets, Christ himselfe being the head corner stone. If the foundation of the Church be the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, by which the Faithfull are commaund by to repose their saluation in onely Christ: then take away that doctrine, and how shall the building stand any longer? Therefore the Church must needs fall downe where that summe of religion falleth which is onely able to uphold it. Againe, if the true Church be the pillar and stye of the truth, it is certain, that there is no Church, where lying and falshood have visiped the dominion.

Sith it is in such case vnder the Papistie, we may understand how much of the Church is there remaining. In stead of the ministerie of the word, there reigneth a perverse government made of lies mingled together, which partly quencheth and partly choketh the pure light: Into the place of the Lordes Supper is entered a most filthie sacrilege: the forme of worshiping God is deformed with a manifold manifolde and intolerable heape of superstitions: the doctrine, without which Christianitie cannot stand, is altogether buried and driven out: the publick assemblies are the schooles of idolatrie and vngodlinesse. Therefore there is no perill least in departing from a damnable partaking of so many mischiefs, we be plucked from the Church of Christ. The communion of the Church was not ordained to this ende that it should be a bond whereby we should be intangled with idolatrie, vngodlinesse, ignorance of God, and other kindes of evils: but rather whereby we should be fast holden in the feare of God and obedience of truth. They do indeed gloriously set out their Church vnto vs, there that should seem to be no other. Church in the world: and afterward, as though the victorie were gotten, they decree that all bee Schiffmatakes that dare withdraw themselves out of the obedience of that Church that they paint out: and that all be heretikes that dare once mutter against the doctrine there of. But by what proues do they confirme that they have the true Church? They allege out of the ancient Chronicles, what in olde time was in Italie, in France, in Spaine. They say that they fetch their beginning from those holy men that with sound doctrine founded and raised vp Churches, and stablished the same doctrine and edifying of the Church with their blood. And that to the Church hath beene among them to consecrate both with spiritual gifts,and with the blood of Martyrs, and preserved with continual succession of Bishops, that it might not fall away. They rehearse how much Irenes, Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, and other esteemed this succession. But how trisling these things be, and how they be but vrie mockeries, I will make them verie easie to understand that will be content a little to weigh them with me. Truly I would also exhort themselves earnestly to take heed hereunto, if I did trust that I might anything prevaine with them by teaching. But for as much as they, leaving all regarde of truth, do bend themselves to this onely purpoe, by all the wadies that they can, to defende their owne cause, I will openly speake a few things whereby good men and those that love the truth, may winde them selves out of their futile calulations. First I ask them why they do not allege Apirikes, and Egypt, and all Asia? Even because in all those countries this holy succession of Bishops hath ceased, by meane whereof by they boast that they have preferred Churches. They come therefore to this point to say, that they therefore have a true Church, because since it first began to be, it hath not been defeinte of Bishops: for in perpetual course they have succeeded one another. But what if I cast Greece in their way? Therefore I ask againe of them, why they say that the Church is lost among the Grecians, among whom that succession of Bishops was never interrupted, in which their opinion is the only keeper and preserver of the Church. They make the Grecians Schifmartikes, but by what right? because in departing from the Apostolike sea, they have lost their privilege. What? Do not they much more desperate to loose it that depart from Christ himselfe? It followeth therefore, that the pretence of succession is but vaine, unless the posterity do keepe fast and abide in the truth of Christ, which they have receeued of their fathers from hand to hand.

Therefore the Romanistes at this day do allege nothing else but that which it appeareth that the Iewes in olde time alleged when they were by the Prophets of the Lord reprooued of blindnesse, vngodlinesse and idolatrie. For they gloriously boasted of the temple, Ceremonies and priesthooes, by which things, by great rea-son as they think they measured the Church. So in stead of the Church, they shew certaine outward visors, that often times are far from the Church, and without which the Church may very well stande. Therefore we doo neede to confute them with no other argument, than that wherewith Hieremie fought against the foolish presumptuousnes of the Iewes; that is, that they should not boast in lying words, saying: The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lorde, it is the temple of the Lord. For as much as the Lord doth no where acknowledge any thing for his, but where his word word is heard & reuerently obserued. So when the glory of God did fit betweene the Cherubins in the Sanctuarie, and he had promisde them that that should be his ned-fall estate: yet when the Priests once corrupted the worshipping of him with peruerse superstitions, he remoued else where, and left the place without any holinesse. If the same temple which seemed to be holily appointed to the perpetuall dwelling of God, might be forfaken of God and become vnholie; there is no cause why these men should faie to vs that God is so bound to persons or places, and so fast tied to outward obseruations, that he must needs abide with them that have onelie the title and shewe of the Church. And this is it about which Paul contended in the Epistle to the Romanes, from the 9. Chapter to the 12. For this did sore trouble weake confederates, that the Jews when they seemed to be the people of God, did not onely refute the doctrine of the Gospell, but also persected it. Therefore after that he hath set out the doctrine, he remoueth this doubt, and denieth that those Jews being enemies of the truth are the Church, howsoever they wanted nothing that otherwise might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, because they embrace not Christ. But somewhat more expresslie in the Epistle to the Galathians: wherein comparing Ifmael with Ifaac, he faith that many hold place in the Church, to whom the inheritance belongeth not, because they are not begotten of the free Mother. From whence alfo he descendeth to the comparison of two Hierusalems. Because as the Law was giuen in the mount Sina, but the Gospell came out of Hierusalem: So many being servilely borne and brought vp doe without doubting boast themselues to be the children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly despise the naturall children of God, when themselves be but bairnds. On the other side also, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heaven: Call out the bond woman and her sonne, let vs, standing vpon this immovable decree, boldly despise their vnsaiesie boastings. For if they be proud by reason of outward profession, Ifmael was also circumcised: if they contend by antiquitie, he was the first begotten, and yet we fee that he is put away. If the cause be demanded, Paul affirme don, for that none are accounted children, but they that are begotten of the pure lawfull seede of doctrine. According to this reason God denieth that he is bound to wicked Priests by this that he covenanteith with their Father Lew, that he should be his Angell or interpreter: yea, he turneth against themselues their false boastings, wherewith they were wont to rise vp against the Prophets, that the dignitie of Priesthood was to be had in singular estimation. This he willingly admeteth, and with the same condition he debateth with them, because he is ready to keepe his covenant, but when they do not mutually performe their parte to him; they defere to be rejected. Loe what succession auseith, vnlesse therewithall be also ioyned an imitation and euenly continuing course: even to this effect, that the successors, so soon as they be prooued to have swarued from their original, be depreied of all honor. Vnlesse perhaps because Caiphas succeeded many godly Bishops (yea there was euon from Aaron to him a continuall unbroken course of succession) therefore that same mischiefous assembly was worshipte the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euin in earthly dominions, that the tyrannie of Caligula, Nero, Helio- grabales and such other, should be called a true state of Common weale, for that they succeeded the Brutes, Scipions, and Camilles. But specially in the government of the Church there is nothing more fonde, than leaving the Doctrine to fet the succession in the Persons onely. But neither did the holy Doctors whom they falsely thrust in vnto vs, meane anything leffe, than to prooue that precisly as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there where Bishops are successively placed one after another. But where as it was then out of controversie, that from the very beginning to that age nothing was changed in Doctrine, they allledged that which might suffice to make an ende of all newe errors, that is, that by those was that doctrine oppugned,
Cap. 2. Of the outwarde meanes

oppugned, which had bene eeu from the Aposstes constantly and with one agreeing consent retaine. There is therefore no cause, why they should any longer goe forward to deuie by pretending a false colour under the name of the Church which we doe unuerstly esteeme as baccemeth vs: but when they come to the definition of it, not only water (as the common saying is) cleaueth vnto them, but they stricke first in their owne myre because they put a thinking harlot in place of the holy spouse of Christ. That this putting in of a changing should not deuie vs, beside other admonitions, let vs remember this also of Augustine. For speaking of the Church, hee saith: It is that is sometime darkned and covered with multitude of offences as with a cloud: sometime in calmes of time appeareth quiet and free: sometime is hidden and troubled with waues of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, that often times the strongest pillars either valiantly suffered banishment for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world.

4. In like manner the Romanistes do vse vs, and make afrayd the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Christ. Therefore although they pretend the temple, the priesthood and the other such outward shewes, this vaine glistering where with the eyes of the simple be dazzled ought nothing to mooue vs to graunt that there is a Church where the Word of God doth not appeare. For this is the perpetuall marke wherewith God hath marked them that be his. He that is of the truth (faith he) heareth my voice. Again I am that good shepheard, and I know my sheep, and am known of them. My sheep heare my voice, & I know them, and they follow me. And a little before he had saied, that the sheepe follow their shepheard, because they knew his voice: but they follow not a stranger, but run away from him because they knew not the voice of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfully mad in judging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoubted signe, which whereoeuer it is false cannot deceive, but that it certeinly sheweth the Church to be there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing that can give a true signification of the Church. For Paul rehearseth that the church was builded, not only upon the judgementes of men, not only upon their judgements, but upon the doctrine of the Aposstes and Prophets. But rather Hierusalem is to be feuerally known from Babylon, and the Church of Christ from the conspiracie of Satan, by that difference where with Christ hath made them different one from the other. He that is of God (faith he) heareth the words of God. Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a sum, forasmuch as the Church is the kingdom of Christ, and he reigneth not but by his word, can it be now doubtfull to any man, but that those be the words of lying, by which Chrisst’s kingdom is fained to be without his scepter, that is to say without his holy word?

5. But now whereas they accuse vs of Schism and heresie, because we both preach a contrarie doctrine to them, and obey not their lawes, and have our assemblies to prayer, to baptism, to the ministration of the Supper, and other holy doings, severally from them: it is indeed a very sore accusation, but such as needeth not a long or laborsome defence. They are called hereticks & schismaticks, which making a division, do break in sunder the communion of the Church. And this communion is holden together with true bondes, that is to saie, the agreement of true doctrine, and brotherly charity. Whereupon Augustine puttest this difference between hereticks and schismaticks, that hereticks indeed do with false doctrine corrupt the purenes of faith, but the schismaticks sometime even where there is like faith, do brake the bondes of fellowhippe. But this is also to be noted, that this consyning of charitie do hangeth upon the vnitie of faith, that faith ought to be the beginning thereof, the ende, and finally the only rule. Let vs therefore remember that so oft as the vnitie of the church is commended vnto vs, this is required, that while we minds agree in Christ, our wills also may be joined together with mutual well willing in Christ. Therefore Paul when he exhorteth exhorteth vs to that well willing, taketh for his foundation that there is one God, one Faith, and one Baptisme. Yea whereas he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, he by and by addeth in Christ, or according to Christ: meaning that it is a Phil. 2. 2 & 5. factious companie of the wicked, and not agreement of the faithfull which is without the word of the Lorde.

6 Cyprian also following Paul descriueth the whole fountaine of the agreement of the Church, from the onely Bishoprick of Christ. He afterward addeth the Church is but one, which spreadeth abroad more largely into a multitude with encreafe of fruitfulnes: like as there be many funne beams, but one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded upon a fift roote: And when many streames doe flowe from one fountaine, although the number seeme to bee scattered abroad by largenes of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnite abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the funne from the body, the vnite can suffice no diuation. Break a branch from the tree, the broken branch cannot spring. Cut off the stream from the spring head being cut off it drieth vp. So also the Church being ouerspreed with the light of the Lord, is extended over the whole world: yet there is but one light that is spred euerm where. Nothing could be said more fitly to expresse that undividable knitting togetherness, which all the members of Christ have one with another. We fee how he continually calleth vs backe to the verie head. Whereupon he pronounceth that herefies and schismes do arise hereof, that men do not returne to the originall of truth, nor do fecke that head, nor keepe the doctrine of the heavenly matter. Now let them go and cry that we be hereinke that have departed from their church: Sith these hath beene no cause of our estranging from them but this one, that they can in no wise abide the pure professing of the truth: but I tell not howe they haue driven vs out with curfings & cruel executions. Which very selfe doing doth abundantly enough acquit vs, unleffe they will also condemn the Apostles for schimistakes, with whom wee haue alone one cause. Christ (I speake) did foretay to his apostles, that the time should come when they should be cast out of the Synagogues for his name fake. And those Synagogues of which he speakest, were then accounted lawful Churches. Sith therefore it is cindent that we be cast out, and we be ready to shew that the same is done for the names fake of Christ, truly the cause ought first to bee inquired of, before that any thing be determined upon vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they will, I am content to discharge them of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behooved that we should depart from them, that we might come to Christ.

7 But it shall appeare yet more certainly in what estimation wee ought to haue all the Churches whom the tyranny of that Romish idol hath possetted, if it be compared with the old church of the Israelites, as it is described in the Prophets. There was then a true Church among the Jews and Israelites, when they continued in the laws of the covenant, for they obtained those things by the benefite of God, whereupon the Church consisteth. They had the truth of doctrine in the law: the minifterie thereof was among the Priestes and Prophetees: with the signe of circumcision they entred into religion: by other Sacraments they were exercized to the confirmation of Faith. It is no doubt thatthose ministers wherewith the Lord hath honoried his church, freely pertained to their fellowship. After that, for forsaking the law of the Lord they went out of kind to idolatry and superstition, they partly lost that prerogative. For who dare take away the name of the Church from them, with whom God hath left the preaching of his word and observation of his mysteries? Againe, who dare call that the Church without any exception, where the worde of the Lord is openly and freely troden under foote? where the minifterie thereof, the chiefe ministris, yea the very foule of the Church is destroyed?

8 What then? will some man say: was there therefore no parcell of a Church remaining among the Jewes after that they fell away to idolatry? The answer is eftinct.

First
Cap. 2. Of the outward means

First I say that in the very falling away there were certain degrees. For we will not say that there was all one fall of Judah, and Israel at such time as they both first swerved from the pure worshipping of God. When Iarobeam first made calues, against the open prohibition of God, and did dedicate an unlawful place for worshipping, he did utterly corrupt religion. The Jews did first defile themselves with wicked and superstitious manners before that they wrongfully changed the order in the outward form of religion. For although under Rechabem they had already gotten them many peruerse Ceremonies: yet because there tarried at Hierusalem both the Doctrine of the Law, and the Priesthood, and the ceremonious vjages in such sort as God had ordained them, the godly had there a tolerable state of Church. Among the Israelites vnto the reign of Ahab, there was no amendment of things, and from thence forth they fell from worse to worse. They that succeeded afterward, to the very destruction of the kingdom, partly were like vnto him, & partly (whe they minded to be somewhat better than he) they followed the example of Iarobeam: but they all euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were now and then dieuerse changes, while some kings peruered the worshipping of God with false and forged superstitions, some other restored religion that was decayed: yet still the vere priests themselves defiled the Temple of God with prophane and abominable vjages.

9 Now let the Papists if they can how much sooner they extenuate their owne faults, deny that among them the state of religion is as corrupt and defiled as it was in the kingdom of Israel vnder Iarobeam. But they have a greater idolatrie: and in doctrine they are not one drop purer: vnlesse peraduenture even in it also be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane judgement, that be witnesses with me, and the thing it selfe also declareth, how heretofore I tell nothing more than truth. Now when they will drive us to the communion of the Church, they require two things of vs: first, that we should communicate with all their prayers, sacraments, and Ceremonies: then that whatsoever honor, power and jurisdiction Christ giue unto his Church, we should give the same to their Church. As to the first point, I grant that all the Prophets that were at Hierusalem, when things were there very much corrupted, did neither seuerally sacrifice, nor had assissiptes to pray seuerall from other men. For they had a commandement of God, whereby they were commanded to come together into Salomon's temple: they knew that the Leuitical priests, how sooner they were vnworthy of that honouer, yet because they were ordained by the Lord ministers of the holy cerimonies, and were not as then deposed, did yet still rightfully possess that place. But (which is the cheefe point of this question) they were compelled to no superstitious worshipping, yea they tooke in hand to do nothing but that which was ordained by God. But among these men, I meane the Papists, what like thing is there? For we can scarceли have any meeting together with them, wherein we shall not defile our selves with open idolatrie. Truly the principall bond of their communions is in the Maffe, which we abhorre as the greatest sacrilege. And whether we do this rightfully or wrongfully, shall be seene in another place. At this present it is enough to shew that in this behalfe we are in other case than the Prophets were, which although they were present at the ceremonies of the wicked, were not compelled to behould or vse any ceremonies but such as were institute by God. And, if they will needes have an example altogether like, let vs take it out of the kingdom of Israel. After the ordainace of Iarobeam Circumcision remained, the sacrifices were offered, the Lawe was accounted holy, the same God was called vpon whom e they had received of their fathers: but for the forged and forbidden forms of worshipping, God disallowed and condemned all that was there done. Shew me one Prophet, or any one godly man that once worshipped or sacrificed in Bethell. For they knew they could not doe it, but that they should defile themselves with some sacrilege. We have then thus much, that the communion of of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it shoulde degenerate to prophane and filthie visages, they shoulde forthwith of necessity follow it.

10 But about the other point we contend yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whose judgement we ought to reuerence, whose au-thoritie to regard, whose monitions to obey, whose chastilities to be moued, whose communion in all things we ought religiously to observe: then we cannot grant them a Church, but that we must of necessity be bound to profanation and obedience unto it. Yet we will willingly grant them that which the Prophets graun-ted to the Iewes and Israelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or in better state. But we see how nowhere they cry out, that their assemblies are vnholy, to which it is no more lawfull to consent than it is to deny God. And truly if those were Churches, it followeth therefore that in Israel Hebias, Micheas and such other: In Iurie, Esay, Jeremy, Osee and other of that sort, whom the Prophets, priests and people of that time hated & detested worse than any vnchristian men, were strangers from the Church of God. If those were Churches then the Church was not the pilier of truth, but the stay of liying: not the tabernacle of the living God, but the receptacle of idols. Therefore it was needfull for them to depart from the content of those assemblies, which was nothing else but a wicked conspiracie against God. In like manner if anie man acknowledge the assemblies of these days being defiled with idolatrie, superstition and wicked doctrine, to be such as whole communion a Christian man ought to continue euen to the content of doctrine, he shall greatly erre. For if they be Churches, then they haue the power of the keyes.
But the keyes are vnseperably knit with the word, which is from thence quite driven away. Againe, if they be Churches then the promise of Christ is of force among them, whatsoeuer ye binde, &c. But they contrariwise do binde from their communion all such as doe profess themselves not fainely the servants of Christ. Therefore either the promise of Christ is vaine, or at least in this respect they are not Churches. Finally in stead of the ministery of the word they haue schooles of vngodli-nesse, and a skinke of all kinde of errours. Therefore either in this respect they are not Churches, or three shall remaine no token whereby the lawfull assemblies of the faithfull may be seuerely known from the meetings of Turkes.

11 But as in the olde time there yet remained among the Iewes certaine peculiar prerogaties of the Church, so at this day also we take not from the Papists such steps as it pleased the Lord to haue remaining among them after the disputation of the Church. The Lord had once made his covenant with the Iewes. That same rather being vp held by the sealed sealles of it selfe did continue with striving against their vngodliness, than was preferred by them. Therefore (such was the assurednesse and constancy of Gods goodnes) there remained the covenante of the Lord, neither could his faithfulenesse be blotted out by their vnsfaithfulnesse: neither could Circumcision be so prophaned with their vnchristian hands, but that it still was the signe and sacrament of that covenante. Whereupon the children that were borne of them, the Lord called his owne, which vnlesse it were by speciall blessing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his covenante in France, Italie, Germanie, Spaine, England:
since those provinces have bene oppressed with the tyranny of Antichrist, yet that his covenant might remaine inviolable, first he there preferred Baptisme, the testi-monie of his covenant, which being consecrate by his owne mouth remaineth her owne force notwithstanding the vngodliness of man: then, with his providence he hath wrought that there should remaine other remnantes, leaft the Church should be utterly destroyed. And as oftentimes buildings are so pulled downe, that the foundations and ruines remaine: so he hath not suffered his Church either to be ouerthrown by Antichrist from the very foundation, or to be laid even with the ground.
Cap. 3.  Of the outward meanes

Of the outward meanes

ground (howsoever to punish the unthankfulness of men that had despised his word, he suffereth horrible shaking and dissipation to chance) but even after the very wasting he willed that the building halfe pulled downe should yet remaine, 12 Whereas therefore we will not simply grant to the Papists the title of the Church, we do not therefore deny that there be Churches among them: but only we contend of the true and lawfull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the sacraments which are the signes of profession, but also specially of doctrine. Daniel and Paul foretold that Antichrist should be in the temple of God. With vs we account the Bishop of Rome the captain and standard bearer of that wicked and abominable kingdom. Whereas his seate is placed in the temple of God, thereby is meant that his kingdom shall be such as cannot abolish the name of Christ nor of his Church. Hereby therefore appeareth, that we doe not deny but that even under his tyranny remaine churches, but such as he hath profaned with vngodlineffe full of sacrilege, such as he hath afflicted with outrageous domination, such as he hath corrupted and in manner killed with eui and damnable doctrines, as with poisoned drinks: such wherein Christ lieth halfe buried, the Gospel overwhelmed, godlineffe banished, the worshipping of God in a manner abolished: such finally wherein all things are so troubled, that therein rather appeareth the face of Babylon than of the holy city of God. In a summe, I say that they be Churches, in respect that the Lord there maruellously preserveth the remnants of his people howsoever they were dispersed and scattered abroad, in respect that there remaine some tokens of the Church, especially these tokens, the effectual lineffe whereof neither the craft of the diuell, nor the maliciousneffe of man can destroy. But on the other side because these marks are blotted out, which in this discourse we ought principally to have respect vnto, I say that every one of their assemblies and the whole body wanteth the lawfull forme of a Church.

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the teachers and ministers of the Church, and of their election and office.

Now it is meete that we speake of the order, by which it was the Lords will to have this Church governed. For although in his Church he onely must rule and reigne, yea and beare preeminence or excell in it, and this governement be vfed or executed by his onely worde: yet because he dwelleth not among vs in visible presence, so that he can prefently with his owne mouth declare his will vnto vs, we have said that in this he vth the ministerie of men, and as it were the trauell of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth he might doe his owne worke, like as a workman to doe his worke vth his instrument. I am compelled to repeate againe those things that I have already declared. He might in deede doe it either by himselfe without any other helpe or instrument, or else by meane of Angels: but there are many causes why he had rather doe it by men. For by this meanes first he declareth his good will toward vs, when he taketh out of men them that shall doe his message in the world, that shall be the interpreters of his secret will, finally that shall represent his owne person. And so by experience he prooveth that it is not vaine that commonly he calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men, as out of his sanctuarie, he giueth answers to men. Secondly, this is the best and most profitable exercitie to humilitie, when he accustometh vs to obey his worde, howsoever it bee preached by men like vnto vs, yea sometime our inferiors in dignitie. If hee himselfe speake from heauen, it were no maruell if his holy Oracles were without delay receivably received with the cares and mindes of all men. For who would not drede his power being in presence?
presence? who would not be thrown downe at the first sight of so great majestie? who would not be confounded with that infinite brightnesse? But when some sullie man rifen out of the dust speakes in the name of God, here with very good testimonie we declare our godlinesse and reverent obedience toward God himselfe, if to his minister we yield our selues willing to leerne, which yet in nothing excelleth vs. Therefore for this cause also he hath hidden the treasure of his heavenly wisdom in bricke and earthen vesiels, that he might have the certainer proofe how much he is esteemed of vs. Moreover there was nothing fitter for the cherishing of mutuall charitie, than that men should be bound together one to another with this bond, whose one is made a pastor to reach the rest, and they that are commanded to be beholders receive all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euery man were able enough to serue himselfe, and needeth not the help of an other: such is the pride of mans naure, that euery one would deffe other, and should againe be despifed of them. Therefore the Lord hath bound his Church with that knot, which he foresaw to be the strongest knot to hold vnitie together, when he hath left with men the doctrine of salvation, and of eternal life, that by their hands he might communicate it to the rest. Hereunto Paul had respect when he wrote to the Ephesians, One body one spirit, as also ye be called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one Baptifme: One God, and Father: which is above all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is giuen according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he faith: When he was gone vp on high, he led captuittie captuie, he gave gifts to men. He that went downe is the selue same he, that went vp, that he might fullfill all things. And the same hath giuen some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and other some Pastors and teachers, vnto the restorit of the holy ones, to the worke of miniftration, to the edifying of the body of Christ, vntill we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the sonne of God, into a perfect man, into the measure of full grown age: that we be no more children that may be carried about with every winde of doctrine: but following trueth in charitie, let vs in all things growe into him that is the head, euyn Christ, in whom the whole body conioyned and compacted together by all the ioynt of subminiftration, according to the working in measure of eueryone part, maketh encreafe of the body, vnto the edifying of it selue by charitie.

2 By these words he sheweth, that that miniftrie of men, which God vseth in gouerning his Church is the cheefe finew, whereby the faithfull cleare together in one body: and also he sheweth that the Church can not other wise be preferred safe, but if it be vpholden by these stakies, in which it pleased the Lord to repose the salvation of it. Christ (faith he) is gone vp on high, that he might fullfill all things. This is the manner of fulfilling, that by his ministers, to whom he hath committed that office, and hath giuen the grace to execute that worke, he diueth and distribueth his gifts to the Church, yea and after a certaine manner giuen him selfe present, with extending the power of his spirit in this institution, that it should not be vaine or idle. So is the restorit of the holy ones performed: so is the body of Christ edified, so do we by all things growe into him that is the head, and do growe together among our selues: so are we all brought into the vnitie of Christ, if propheticie flourith among vs. Ephes. 4. 14. If we receiue the Apostles, if we refuse nor the doctrine miniftrd vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the dissipation, or rather the iue and destruction of the Church, whatsoever he be that either endeavoureth to abolith this order of whom we speake, and this kind of government, or miniftrh the effimation of it as a thing not so necessary, For neither the light and heare of the sunne, nor meate and drinke are so necessary to nourish and sustaine this present life, as the office of the Apostles and pastors is necessary to preserve the Church in earth.

3 Therefore I have aboue admonifh, that God hath oftentimes with such titles titles as he could, commended the dignity thereof unto vs, that we should have it in most high honor and price, as the most excellent thing of all. He testified that he giveth to men a singular beneite, in raising them vp teachers, where he commandeth the Prophet to criue out that faire are the fecte, and blessed is the comming of them that bring tidings of peace: and when he calleth the Apostles the light of the world, and salf of the earth. Neither could this office be more honourable advanced; than it was when he said: He that heareth you, heareth me. He that despiseth you, despiseth me. But there is no place more plaine, than in Paul in his second Epistle to the Corinthians, where he as it were of purpose entreated of this matter. He affirmeth therefore, that there is nothing in the Church more excellent or glorious than the ministry of the Gospell, forasmuch as it is the administration of the Spirit, and of righteousnes, and of eternall life. These and like sayings ferue to this purpose, that that order of governing and preferring the Church by ministers, which the Lorde hath established for ever, should not grow out of estimation among vs, and so at length by very contempt grow out of use. And how great is the necessity thereof, he hath declared not onely by words, but also by examples. When his will was to shine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his truth, he sent an Angel from heaven to send Peter vnfo him. When his will was to call Paul to the knowledge of himselfe, and to engraffe him into the Church, he spake not to him with his owne voice, but sent him to a man, of whom he should receive both the doctrine of salvation, and the sanctification of baptism. If it be not done without cause, that an Angel which is the interpreter of God, do him selfe abstaine from declaring the will of God, but commandeth that a man be sent for, to declare it: and not without cause that Christ the onely Schoolmaster of the Faithfull committeth Paul to the schooling of a man, yea euery that same Paul whom he had determined to take vp into the third heaven, and to vouchsafe to grant him miraculous revelation of things vnspeakable: who is there now that dare despise that ministrie, or passe it ouer as a thing superfuous, the vie whereof it hath pleased God to make approoved by such examples?

4. They that have rule of the government of the Church according to the institution of Christ, are named of Paul first Apostles, then Prophets, thirdly Evangelists, fourthly Pastors, last of all teachers. Of which, the two last alone have ordinary office in the Church: the other three the Lord raised vp at the beginning of his kingdom, and sometime yet also raiseth vp, as the necessity of times requireth. What is the Apostles office, appeareth by that Commandement: goe, preach the Gospell to euery creature. There are not certaine bounds appointed vnto them: but the whole world is assigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Christ: that in spreading the Gospell among all nations whereoeuer they shall be able, they may eche where rais vp his Kingdome. Therefore Paul, when he went about to proue his Apostleship, rehearsed that he hath gotten to Christ not some one Citie, but hath farre and wide spread abroad the Gospell: and that he hath not laid his hands to an others man foundation, but planted Churches where the name of the Lord had never beene heard of. Therefore the Apostles were sent to bring backe the world from falling away, vnto true obedience of God, and eche where to establish his kingdom by preaching of the Gospell: or (if you like that better) as the first builders of the Church, to lay the foundations thereof in all the world. Prophets he calleth, not all expoundors of Gods will whatsoever they be, but those that by singular revelation excelled, such as at this time either be none, or are lest notable. By Evangelists I understand those, which when in dignitie they were lesse than the Apostles, yet in office were next vnto them, yea and occupied their rooms. Such were Luke, Timothy, Titus, and other like: and peraduenture also the seuerie Disciples, whom Christ appointed in the second place after the Apostles. According to this exposition (which seemeth to me agreeable both with the words and meaning of Paul) those those three offices were not ordained in the Church to this ende that they should be perpetuall, but only to serve for that time where in Churches were to be erected, where were none before, or at least to be removed from Moses to Christ. Albeit I deny not, but that afterwarde also the Lord hath sometime raised vp Apostles, or at least in their places Evangelists, as it hath been done in our time. For it was needfull to have such, to bring backe the Church from the falling away of Antichrist. Yet the office it selfe I doe neverthelss call extraordinary, because it hath no place in the Churches already well set in order. Next after these are Pastors and Teachers, whose the Church may never lacke: betweene whome I thinke that there is this difference, that the teachers are not appointed to beare rule of discipline, nor for the ministration of Sacraments, nor admonishments or exhortations, but onely to expound the Scripture, that pure and sound doctrine may be kept among the faithful. But the office of Pastor containeth all these things within it.

5 Now we have, which were those ministers in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were those that were ordained to endure perpetually. If wee joyn the Evangelists with the Apostles, we shall have remaining two couples after a certaine manner answering the one to the other. For as our teachers are like to the old Prophets, in such sort are our Pastors like to the Apostles. The office of Prophets was more excellent, by reason of the singular gift that they had of revelation: but the office of teachers hath in a manner like order, and altogether the same ende. So those twelve whom the Lord did choose, that they should publish abroad to the world the newe preaching of the Gospell, in degree and dignitie went before the rest. For although by the meaning and propright of the worde, all the ministers of the Church may be rightly called Apostles, because they are sent of the Lord, and are his messengers: yet because it was much behoouefull, that there should be a certaine knowledge had of the sending of them that should bring a thing neve and unheard of, it was necessarie that those twelve (to whose number Paul was afterwarde added) should be garnished with some peculiar title above the rest. Paul himselfe in deed in one place giueth this name to Andronicus and Junia, whom he faith to have bin notable among the Apostles: but when he meane to speake properly hee referreth it to none other but to that principall degree. And this is the common vfe of the Scripture. Yet the Pastors (saing that each of them doe governe severall Churches appointed to them) have al one charge with the Apostles. Now what maner of thing this is, let vs yet heare it more plainly.

6 The Lord when he sent the Apostles, gave them commandement (as we saide cuen now) to preach the Gospell, and to baptize them that beleue unto Forgivenss of sins. Had he before done, that they should distribute the holy signes of his bodie and bloud, as he had done. Loc here is a holy, inviolable and perpetuall lawe laide upon them that succeede in the Apostles place, wherby they receive commandement to preach the Gospell, and minifter the Sacraments. Whereupon we gather, that they which neglect both these things, doe falsely say that they beare the person of the Apostles. But what of the Pastors? Paul speakeing not of himselfe onely, but of them all; when he faith: Let a man steate me vs as the ministers of Christ, and distributors of the mysteries of God. Againe in another place, a Bishop must bee a fast holder of that faithful worde, which is according to doctrine: that he may be able to exhort by sound doctrine, and to convince the gainsayers. Out of those and like places, which are ech where to be found, we may gather, that also in the office of the Apostles there be the two principal parts: to preach the Gospell, and to minifter the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it consisteth not onely in publike sermons, but belongeth also to private admonitions. So Paul calleth the Ephesians to witnes that he had not fled from doing of any of those things that were for their profite, but that hee preached and taught them both openlie and in every house, testifying testifying both to the Jews and Grecians, repentance and faith in Christ. Against little after: that he had not ceased with tears to admonish every one of them. Neither yet belonging to my purpose at this present to express all the qualities of a good Pastor, but only to point out what they professe that call themselves Pastors:

that is, that they are so made rulers of the Church, not that they should have an idle dignity, but that they should with the doctrine of Christ instruct the people to true goldnines, minister the holy mysteries, and preserve and exercise upright discipline.
For who soever be set to be watchmen in the Church, the Lord declareth unto them, that if any by their negligence perish through ignorance, he will require the bloud at their hands. That also pertaineth to them all, which Paul faith of himselfe: woe to me vnles: I preach the Gospel, forasmuch as the distributing thereof is committed to me. Finally, what the Apostles performed to the whole world, the same ought eu-ry Pastor to performe to his flocke, to which he is appointed.

7. Albeit when we assigne to every one their severall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bounde to one Church may helpe other Churches, if any troublesome thing do happen that requireth his presence, or if hee be asked counsell of any darke matter. But forasmuch as for the keeping of the peace of the Church, this policie is necessarie, that there be set forth to every man what he should do, least all be confusedly disordered, run about without calling, or rashly run altogether into one place, and least such as are more careful for their owne commoditie than for the edification of the Church, should at their owne will leave their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to be kept so neere as may bee, that every man contented with his owne boundes should not breake into another mans charge. And this is no invention of man, but the ordinance of God himselfe.
For wee reade that Paul and Barnabas created Priests in all the severall churches of Lystra, Antioche, Iconium: and Paul himselfe commandeth Titus that hee should appoint Priests in euerie towne. So in one place hee speaketh of the Bishops of Philippes, and in another place of Archippus Bishop of the Colossians.
And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Priests of the Church of Ephesus. Whosoever therefore shall take vpone him the gouernement and charge of the Church, let him knowe that hee is bounde to this lawe of Gods calling: not that as binded to the soyle (as the Lawyeres teareme it) that is, made bounde and fastened vnto it, hee may not once moue his foote from thence, if the common profite do so require, so that it be done wel and orderly; but he that is called into one place ought not himselfe to thinke of remouing, nor euen to be deliuered as he shal thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then if it be expedient that any be remoued to another place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne private advice, but to tary for publike authorities.

8. But whereas I haue without difference called them Bishops, and Priests, and Pastors, and Ministers, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vigne of the Scripture, which in differently vseth these words. For whosoever do execute the Ministerie of the word, to them he giueth the title of Bishops. So in Paul, where Titus is commanded to appoint Priests in euerie towne, it is immediately added. For a Bishop must be unpreuouable, &c. So in another place hee faulaceth many Bishops in one Church. And in the Acts it is receaued, that hee called together the Priestes of Ephesus, whom he himself in his owne sermon calleth Bishops. Here now it is to be noted, that hitherto we have recited none but those offices that stand in the Ministerie of the worde: neither doth Paul make mention of any other in that fourth Chapter which we have alleged. But in the Epistle to the Romanes, and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, hee reckoneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernement, caring for the poore. Of which I omitted those that endured but for a time, because it is to no profitable purpose to tary vpon them. But there are two that doe perpetually abide, that is to say, government and care of the poor. Govenours I thinke were the Elders chosen out of the people, that should together with the Bishops, have rule of the judgement of manners, and the ving of discipline. For a man cannot otherwise expound which he faith: let him that ruleth doe it with carefullnesse. Therefore at the beginning every Church had their Senate, gathered of godly, grave and holy men: which had that same jurisdiction in correcting of vices, whereof we shall speake hereafter. And that this was the order of more than one age, experience is felt to declareth. Therefore this office of government is also necessarie for all ages.

9 The care of the poore was committed to the Deacons. Howbeit to the Romans, there are set two kindes. Let him that giueth (as Paul in that place) doe it in simplicite: let him that hath mercie, doe it in carefullnesse. For as much as it is certaine that he speaketh of the publike offices of the Church, it must needes bee that there were two severall degrees. Unlesse my judgement deceiue me, in the first point he meaneth Deacons, that distributed the almes: in the other he speakeoth of them that had giuen themselves to looking to the poore and sick: of which sort were the widowes of whom he makeoth mention to Timothie. For women could execute no other publike office, but to giue themselves to the succour of the poore. If we graunte this, (as we must needes graunte it) then there shall be two sortes of Deacons: of which one sort shall serue in distributing the things of the poore, the other in looking to the poore of the Church themselves. But although the very worde Diaconia, Deaconerie extendeth further: yet the Scripture specially calleth them Deacons, to whom the Church hath giuen the charge to distribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were stewards of the common treasurie of the poore: whose beginning, institution and office, is described of Luke in the Acts. For when a murmuring was raised by the Grecians: for that in the ministrie of the poore their widowes were neglected, the Apostles executting themselves with saying that they could not serve both offices, both the preaching of the word and the ministring at tables, required of the multitude, that there might be chosen honest men, to whom they might commit that doing. Loe what manner of Deacons the Apostollike Church had, and what Deacons it were meete for vs to haue according to their example.

10 Now whereas in the holy assembly all things are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherein that ought to be more diligently obscurd, than in stablishing the order of government: because there is no where greater penel if any thing be done vnorderly. Therefore to the ende that vnquiet and troublesome men (which otherwise would happen) should rathly thrust in themselves to teach or to rule, it is expressly provided, that no man should without calling take upon him a publike office in the Church. Therefore that a man may be judged a true minister of the Church, first he must be orderly called, then he must answer his vocation, that is to say, take upon him and execute the dutyes enjoyned him. This wee may oftentimes make in Paul: which when he meaneoth to approoue his Apostlship, in a manner alwayes with his faithfullnesse in executing his office he alwaies his calling. If so great a minister of Christ dare not take upon himselfe the authoritie that he should be heard in the Church, but because he be both is appointed therto by the commandement of the Lord, and also faithfullie performeth that which is committed vnto him: how great thankfullnesse shall it be, if any man wanting both or either of these, shall challenge such honour to himselfe? But because we haue aboue touched the necessitie of executing the office, now let vs interrupt only of the calling.

11 The discourse thereof standeth in fower pointes: that we shoulde know, what manner of ministers, how, and by whome ministers ought to be instituted, and with what signe or what ceremonie they are to be admitted. I speake of the outward and
and solemn calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that secret calling, whereof every minister is privie in his owne conscience before God, and hath not the Church witnessse of it, I omit it. It is a good witnessse of our hart, that not by any ambition, nor couetousnisse, nor any other greedie desire, but with pure feare of God and zeale to edifie the Church, we receiue the office offered vnto vs. That in deede is (as I have saide) necessarie for every one of vs, if we will apprope our ministerialle allowable before God. Neuerthelesse he is rightly called in presence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euill conscience, so that his wickednesse be not open. They are woont alfo to say that euen private men are called to the minifterie, whom they see to be meeete and able to execute it: because verily learning ioned with godlineffe and with the other qualitie of a good Pastor, is a certaine preparation to the very office. For whom the Lorde hath appointed to doe a great office, he first furniseth them with those armours that are required to fulfill it, that they should not come emptie and unprepared vnto it. Whereupon Paul alfo to the Corinthians, when he meant to diuerte of the very offices, first rehearsed the gifts which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But because this is the first of those power points that I have propounded, let us now goe forward vnto it.

12 What manner of Bishops it is meeete to chooze, Paul doth largely declare in two places, but the suumte commeth to this effect, that none are to be chooven, but they that are of so found doctrine, and of holy life, and not notable in any vice, which might both take away credite from them, and procure flaunter to the minifterie. Of Deacons and Elders there is altogether like consideration. It is alway to be looked vnto, that they be not vnable or vnfit to bear the burden that is laid upon them, that is to say, that they may be furnished with those powers that are necessarie to the fulfilling of their office. So when Christ was about to send his Apostles, he garnished them with those weapons and instruments which they could not want. And Paul when he had painted out the image of a good and true Bishop, warneth Timothie, that he would not defile himselfe with chooinge any man that differeth from it. Ifereffe this word How, not to the Ceremonie of chooing, but to the reverent feare that is to be keept in the chooing. Hereupon come the fastings and prayers, which Luke reciteth that the faithfull vnd when they made Priests. For whereas they understood that they medled with a most earnest matter, they durst attempt nothing, but with great reverence and carefullnesse. But they chiefly applied themselves to prayers, whereby they might craue of God the spirtre of counsell and discretion.

13 The third thing that we haue set in our diuision was, by whom ministers are to be chooven. Of this thing no certaine rule can be gathered out of the institution of Apostles, which had some difference from the common calling of the rest. For because it was an extraordinary minifterie, that it might be made discernable by some more notable mark, it behoovede that they which should execute it, should be called and appointed by the Lords owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hand their doing, being furnished by no mans election, but by the only commandement of God and of Christ. Hereupon commeth that when the Apostles would put another in the place of Judas, they durst not certainly name any one man, but they brought forth two, that the Lord should declare by lot, whether of them he would haue to succeede. After this manner also it is meeete to take this, that Paul denieth that he was create Apostle of men or by man, but by Christ and God the father. That first point, that is to say of men, he had common with all the godly ministers of the worde. For no man coulded rightly take vpon him that execution, but hee that were called of God. But the other point was proper and singular to himselfe. Therefore when he glorifieth of this, he doth not onely boast that he hath that which belongeth to a true and lawfull Pastor, but also bringeth forth the signes of his Apostleship. For when there were some among the Galatians, which travelling to dimnifh his authoritie, made him some meane discipule, put in office vnder them by the principall Apollles: hee, to defend in safetie the dignitie of his preaching, which he knewe to be shot at by those little deniers, needed to shew him selfe in all points nothing inferior to the other Apollles. Therefore he affirmeth that he was chosen, not by the judgement of men, like some common Bishop, but by the mouth and manifest Oracle of the Lorde himselfe.

14 But no man that is sober will deny that it is according to the order of lawful calling, that Bishops shoulde be appointed by men: forasmuch as there are so manie testimonies of the Scripture for proofe thereof. Neither doth that laying of Paul make to the contrary, as it is faid, that he was not sent of men, nor by men: forasmuch as he speaketh not there of the ordinarie chosing of ministers, but chalengen to him selfe that which was speciall to the Apollles. Howbeit God also so appointed Paul by him selfe by singular prerogatiue, that in the meane time he vse the discipline of Ecclesiasticall calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apollles were fasting & praying, the Holy Ghost said: Separate vnto me Paul and Barnabas to the worke to which I have severely chosen them. To what purpose serveth that separation and putting on of hands, fith the holy Ghost hath refuld his owne election, but that the discipline of the church in appointing ministers by men, might bee preferred? Therefore the Lord could by no planer example approoue such order, than hee did when having first declared that he had ordained Paul Apollse for the Gentiles, yet he willeth him to be appointed by the Church. Which thing we may see in the chosing of Mathias.

For, because the office of Apollleship was of so great importance, that they durft not by their owne judgement choose any one man into that degree, they did set two men in the midst, uppon the one of whom the lot should fall: that so both the election might haue an open testimonie from heauen, and yet the policie of the Church should not be pasted over.

15 Now it is demanded whether the minister ought to be chosen of the whole Church, or onely of the other of the same office, and of the Elders that have the rule of discipline, or whether he may be made by the authority of one man. They that giue this authentic to one man, alllege that which Paul saith to Titus: Therefore I have left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest appoint in every towne Priests. Againe to Timothy: lay not hands quickly upon any man. But they are deceived if they thinke, that either Timothy at Ephesus, or Titus in Creta, vfed a kingly power, that either of them shoulde dispose all things at his owne will. For they were aboue the rest, onely to go before the people with good and holose counsels: not that they oncely, excluding all other, shoulde do what they listed. And that I may not seeme to faunc anie thing, I will make it plaine by a like example. For Luke rehearseth that Paul and Bar-

Priesst, that before their consecration they should be brought into the sight of the people. And no otherwise is Mathias added to the fellowship of the Apostles: and no otherwise the seven Deacons were created: but the people seeing and allowing it. These examples (faith Cyprian) doe shew, that the ordaining of a Priest ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people standing by: that the ordaining may be just and lawful, which hath beene examined by the witnesses of all. We therefore come thus far, that this is by the word of God a lawfull calling of a minister, when they that seeme meet are created by the consent and allowance of the people; and that other pastors ought to bear rule of the election, that nothing be done amisse of the multitude, either by lightnes, or by civil affections, or by disorder.

Now remembe the forme of ordaining, to which we assigned the last place in the calling. It is evident that the Apostles vied no other cerimonie when they admitted any man to the ministerie, but the laying on of hands. And I thinke that this vigne came from the manner of the Hebrews, which did as it were present unto God by laying on of hands that which they would have blessed and hallowed. So when Jacob was about to bless Ephraim and Manasse, he laid his hands upon their heads. Which thing our Lord followed, when he prayed over the infants. In the same meaning (as I thinke) the Levites by the ordinance of the law, laid hands upon the sacrifices. Wherefore the Apostles by laying on of hands did signifie that they offered him to God, whom they admitted into the ministerie. Albeit they vied it also upon them, to whom they applied the visible graces of the spirit. Howsoever it be, this was the solemn vigne, so oft as they called any man to the ministerie of the Church. So they consecrated Pastors and teachers, and also Deacons. But although there be no certaine commandement concerning the laying on of hands, yet because we see that it was continually vied among the Apostles, their so diligent obtaining of it ought to be to vs in stead of a commandement. And truely it is profitable, that by such a signe, both the dignity of the ministerie should be commended to the people, and also that he which is ordered should bee admonished, that he is not now at his owne libertie, but made bonde to God and the Church. Moreover it shall not be a vaine signe, if it be restored to the naturall beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordained nothing in the Church in vaine, we must thinke that this cerimonie, which proceeded from him, is not unprofitable, so that it be not turned into a superstitious abuse. Last of all this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did lay their hands vpon the ministers, but the Pastors only. Howbeit it is vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their hands or no. But it is evident that that was done in the Deacons, in Paul and Barnabas, and a few other. But Paul himself in another place reporteth, that he, and not many other, did lay his hands vpon Timothee. I admonish thee (faith he) that thou raise vp the grace which is in thee by laying on of my hands. For, as for that which in the other Epistle is spoken of the laying on of the hands of the degree of Priests, I do not so take it, as though Paul did speake of the company of the Elders, but I understand by that word the very ordinance it selfe: as if he had said: Make that the Grace, which thou hast receiued by laying on of hands when I did create thee a priest, may not be void.

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the State of the old Church, and of the manner of governing that was in use before the Papacie.

Hitherto we have intreated of the order of governing the Church, as it hath been delivered vs out of the pure worde of God, and of the ministeries, as they were instituted by Christ. Now that all these things may bee more clearly and familiarly opened, and also be better fastened in our mindes: it shall be profitable in in these things to consider the forme of the old Church, which shall represent to our eyes a certaine image of Gods institution. For although the Bishops of those times did set forth many Canons, wherin they seemed to express more than was expressed in the holy Scripture: yet they with such heedfulness framed all their order after the onely rule of Gods worde, that a man may easily see that in this behalfe they had in a manner nothing disagreeing from the worde of God. But although there might be somewhat wanting in their ordinances, yet because they with sincere zeale endeavoured to preferue Gods institution, and they swarued not much from it, it shall be very profitable here shortly to gather what maner of observation they had. As we have declared that there are three sorts of Ministers commended unto vs in the Scripture: so all the Ministers that the old Church had, did conclude into to three Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly chosen Pastors and teachers: the rest of them had the rule of the judgement and correction of manners. To the Deacons was committed the care of the poore, and the distributing of the almes. As for the Readers and Acoluthes, were not names of certaine offices: but tho' whom they called Clerkes, they trained from their youth upward in certaine exercises to serve the Church, that they might the better understand what purpose they were appointed, and might in time come the better prepared to their office: as I shall by and by shew more at large. Therefore Hierome, when he had appointed three orders of the Church, recketh vp Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Beleueters, and Cathecumeni, to the rest of the Cleargie and Monkes he giveth no proper place.

2 Therefore to whomke the office of teaching was inioyned, all them they named Priests. In every Citie they chose out of their owene number one man, to whom they specially gaine the title of Bishop: that diffentions should not grow of equalitie, as it is wont to come to passe. Yet the Bishop was not to above the rest in honor and dignitie, that he had a dominion over his fellows. But what office the Consul had in the Senate, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to see before the other with counsell, moniſhing and exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authority, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counſell; the same office had the Bishop in the assembly of the Priests. And the old writers themselves confesse, that the same was by mens consent brought in for the necessitie of the times. Therefore Hierome upon the Epistle to Titus faith. The same was a Priest which was a Bishop. And before that by the institution of the Decull, there were diffentions in religion, and it was laid among the people, I am of Paul, I am of Cephas: Churches were governed by common counſell of Elders. Afterward, that the feedes of diffentions might be plucked vp, all the care was committed to one man. As therefore the Priests doe know, that by custome of the Church they are subiect to him that is set over them: so let the Bishops know, that they are above the Priests, rather by custome, than by the truth of the Lords disposing, and that they ought to gouerne the Church in common together. But in another place he teacheth, how auncient an institution it was. For he faith that at Alexandria, from Mark the Evangelist even to Hieracles and Dionysius, the Priests did alwaye choose out one of themselues, and set him in a higher degree, whom they named a Bishop. Therefore every Citie had a company of Priests which were Pastors, & Teachers. For they all did acte among the people that office of teaching in the Church, in the body of that Church. Every company (as I haue before said) only for preferuation of policie and peace were under one Bishop: which was so above the rest in dignitie, that he was subiect to the assembly of his brethren. If the compass of ground that was under his Bishopricke were to great, that he could not suffice to serve all the offices of a Bishop in every place of it, in the country it selfe there were in certaine places appointed priests which in small matters should execute his authoritie. Then they called countrye bishops, because in the countrye they reprented the Bishop.

3 But so much as belongeth to the office, whereof we now speake, as well the bishops as the priests were bound to apply the distributing of the word and sacraments. For it was ordainde onely at Alexandria, (because Arris had there troubled the Church) that the priest should not preach to the people, as Socrates saith in the 9. book of the Tripartite historie. Which yet Hierome confesseth that he mistaketh not. Truly it should not be counted monstrous, if any man had given out himselfe for a Bishop, that had not also in very deed shewed himselfe a true Bishop. Therefore such was the seueritie of those times, that all ministrers were driven to the fulfilling of such office, as the Lord requireth of them. Neither do I rehearse the manner of one age alone. For even in Gregories time, when the Church was now almost decayed (certainly it was much degenerate from the ancient purenes) it had not been tolerable that any bishop should abstaine from preaching. The priest (sith he in one place) dieth if there be no sound heard of him because he asketh against himselfe the wrath of the secret judge, if he go without sound of preaching. And in another place: When Paul testifieth that he is cleane from the blood of all: in this laying we be conuince, we be bound, we be shewed to be guylt, which are called priests, which beside the eulds that we have of our owne, add also the deaths of other: because we kill so many as we being lukewarme and silent do daily see to go to death. He calleth himselfe and other silent, because they were lesse diligent in their worke then they ought to be. When he spareth not them, that did halfe performe their duite: what thinke you he would have done, if it a man had altogether sit idle? Therefore this was a great while holden in the church, that the chiefe duty of the Bishop was to feed Gods people with the word, or both publiquely and privately to edifie the Church with sound doctrine.

4 But whereas every province had among their Bishops one Archbishops also where in the Nicaene Synod there were ordained Patriarches, which should in degree and dignitie be above the Archbishops, that pertained to the prefering of discipline. Howbeit in this discourse, that which was most raredly vided may not be omitted. For this cause therefore chiefly these degrees were ordained, that if any thing happened in any church, that could not well be ended by a few, might be referred to a provincial Synod. If the greates or difficultie of the matter required a greater discissing, the Patriarches were also called to it with the Synods, from whom there might be no appeale but to a generall Councell. The government so ordered many called a Hierarchie, by a name (as I thinke) vnproper, and truly vnused in the scriptures. For the holy Ghost willed to provide, that no man should dreame of a principality or dominion when the government of the church is spoken of. But, if leaving the word we looke vpon the thing, we shall finde that the old Bishops meant to forge no forme of tuling the church, differing from that which the Lord appointed by his word.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other than it was vnder the Apotles. For they received the dayly offerings of the Faithfull, and the yereely revenues of the church, to bestow them vpon ye meane, that is to say, to distribute them to feede partly the ministrers, and partly the poore: but by the appointment of the Bishop, to whom also they yereely rendered accounts of their distribution. For whereas the Canons do every where make the Bishop distributer of all the goods of the Church, it is not so to be understood, as though he did by himselfe discharge that care: but because it was his part to appoint the Deacon, who should be receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whom it should be given, and how much to every one: because he had an ouerseeing whether the Deacon did faithfully execute that which belonged to his office. For thus it

The office of Bishops and priests to distribute the word and Sacraments.

Epi. 4. Euia.

For preferring of discipline, Archbishops and Patriarches ordained by them who never meanes to forge another such forms of ruling the Church, then God hath appointed in his word.

The office of Deacons is set down under the Apotles & in the primitive Church: the occasion of making Subdeacon and Archdeacon.
is reade in the Canons which they ascribe to the Apostles: We command that the Bishop haue the goods of the Church in his owne power. For if he be put in trust with the Soules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that he have charge of money: so that by his power all things may be distributed to the poore by the Elders and Deacons: that they may be all ministr’d with faire and carefulnes. And in the Councell of Antioche it is decreed, that the Bishops should be restrained that meddle with the goods of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point we neede to make no longer disputation, fith it is evident by many Epistles of Gregorie, that eu’n at that time, when otherwise the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this observation continued, that the Deacons shou’d vnder the Bishop be the stewards of the poore. As for Sub-deacons, it is likely that at the beginning they were toynd to the Deacons, that they should vs their seruice about the poore: but that difference was by little and little confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plentie of the goods, required a newe and more exact manner of disposing them: Albeit Hierome doth saie, that it was eu’n in his age. In their charge was the sum of their receuences, possesions, and store, and the collection of the dayly offerings. Wherupon Gregoire declareth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he should be holde guilte if any of the goods of the Church, perished either by his fraud or negligence. But whereas it was given to them to read the Gospell to the people, and to exhort them to prayer: & whereas they were admitted to deliver the Cup in the holy Supper, that was rather done to garnish their office, that they should execute it with more reverence, when by such fignes they were admonished that it was no provaine Bayliwike that they exercis’d, but a spiritual function and dedicate to God.

6. Hereby also we may judge what we there was, and what manner of distribution of the Church goods. Each where both in the decrees of Synodes, and among the olde writers it is to be found, that whatsoever the Church possesseth either in lands or in money, is the patrimony of the poore. Therefore oftentimes there this song is sung to the Bishops and Deacons, that they should remember, that they meddle not with their own goods, but the goods appointed to the necessitie of the poore: which if they vnsafely suppress or waft, they shall be guilty of blood. Whereby they are admonish’d, with great faire and reverence, as in the sight of God, without respect of persons, to distribute them to whom they be due. Hereupon also come those graine protestations in Chrysostome, Ambrose, Augustine, and other like Bishops, whereby they affirm their owne vprightnese to the poore. But fith it is equity, and eftablished by the Lawe of the Lord, that they which employ their seruice to the Church, should be fed with the common charges of the Church, and also many Priests in that age, conecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the distributing was such, that neither the Ministers wrou’d sustenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the meane time it was provided, that the Ministers themselves, which ought to give example of honest sparing to others, should not have so much, whereby they might abuse it to riotous excess or deliciousnes, but only wherewith to sustaine their owne needes. For those of the Cleargie (faith Hierome) which are able to live of the goods of their Parents, if they take that which is the poore’s, doe commit sacrilege, and by such abuse they eate and drinke to themselves damnation.

7. First the ministration was free and voluntarie, whereas the Bishops and Deacons were of their owne will Faithfull, and vprightnese of conscience and innocencie of life were to them in feede of the Lawes. Afterward when exuill examples grew of the greedines or peruerse affections of some, to correct those faultes, the Canons were made, which diuided the revenues of the Church into foure parts: of which they asigned one part to them of the Cleargie, the second to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildings; the fourth to the poor as well strangers as of their owne countryy. For whereas the other canons, give this last part to the bishop, that varieeth nothing from my abovely said division. For they meane not that that part should be his owne, that either he himselfe alone should devote it, or poure it out, vpon whom or what he left, but that it should suffice to maintaine the Hospitallie which Paul requireth of that order. And so do Gelius and Gregorie expound it. For Gelius bringeth no other reason why the Bishop should challenge any thing to himselfe, but that he might give it prisoners and strangers. And Gregorie speakeoth yet more plainly. It is the maner (faith he) of the Sea Apostolike, to giue commandement to the Bishop when he is ordered, that of all the revenue that anithere be made fourie portions: that is to say, the one to the Bishop and his Family for Hospitallie, and entertainment: the second to the Clergie: the third to the poor: the fourie to the repairing of Churches. Therefore it was lawfull for the Bishop to take nothing to his owne use, but so much as were enough for moderate and meane foode and cloathing. If any began to exceed either in riotous expense, or in ostentation and pompe, he was by and by repressed by his fellowes, and if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignitie.

As for that which they bestowed vpon garnishing of holy things, at the first it was verie little. Afterward when the Church became some what richer, yet in that behalfe they still kept a mane. And yet all the money that was bestowed thereupon, remained safe for the poore, if any greater necessitie happened. So when famine possest the province of Hierusalem, and the need could not otherwise be releued, Cyriillus sold the vessels and garments and spent them vpon sustenance of the poore. Likewise Acarius bishop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Persians, in a maner harried for hunger, called together the Clergie, and when he had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither diishes nor cuppes, because he neither eateth nor drinketh, he melt the vesseles, to make thereof both meat and ransom for men in miserie. Hierom also, when he inveighed against the too much gourmants of temples, doth with honour make mention of Exuperius Bishop of Tholosa in his time, which carried the Lords bodie in a wicker basket, and his blood in glasse, but suffered no poore man to bee hangrie. That which I even nowe faide of Acarius, Ambrose rehearsed of himselfe. For when the Arianus charged him, for that he had broken the holy vessels to ransom prisoners, he vnde this most godly excuse: Hee that sent the Apostles without gold, gathered Churches together without gold. The Church hath gold, not to keep it, but to bestow it, and to give reliefe in necessities. What need is to kepe that which helpeth not? Do we not know, how much gold and siluer the Assyrians tooke out of the temple of the Lord? Dost not the priest better to melt them for the sustenance of the poore, if other relieues do faile, than an enimie a robber of God to bear them away? Will not the Lord say: Why haft thou suffered so many needie to doe for hunger? and verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightest have ministered them sustenance. Why were so many lead away captive, and not ransom? why were so many flaine by the enimie? It had been better that thou shouldest save the vesseles of hungrie men, than of metallis. To these things thou shalt not bee able to answer. For what wouldst thou say? I feared least Gods temple should want garnishing. He would answer: Sacraments require not gold: neither do those things please with gold that are not bought with golde. The ransom of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacraments. In sum, we see that it is most true which the same man saith in another place, that whatsoever the Church then possest was the store of the needie. Againe: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poore.

These that we have rehearsed were the ministries of the old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiasticall wryters make mention, were rather certaine exercices and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might leave a store for the church after them, received into their charge, governance and discipline, young men which with the consent and authority of their parents, professed themselves louders of the spiritual warfare: and they so framed them from their tender age, that they should not come unskilfull and raw to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called clerks, I would indeed that from other proper name there had rather in given them. For this name grew in error, or of corrupt affection: forasmuch as Peter calleth the whole Church the Cleargie, that is to say, the Lord's inheritance. But the institution itself was very holy and profitable, that they which would consecrate themselves & their service to the Church, should be so brought under the keeping of the Bishop, that none should minister to the Church, but he that was well informed beforehand, and that had from his very youth both sicked holy doctrine, and by seuerue discipline put in a certaine continuing quality of spiritual and holy life, and were estranged from worldly cares, and were accustomed to spiritual cares and studies. But as young souls, are by certaine counterfeit skirmishes instructed to learne true and earnest fight; so there were also certaine rudiments, whereby they were exercised while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the verie offices. Therefore first they commited to the Clerkes the charge to open and shutte the Church, and they named them Officìtìn, doorkeepers. Afterward they called them Acoluthi, followers, which waited upon the Bishop in his household services, and did continuallie accompany him, first for honour sake, and then that no suspicione should arise of them. Moreover that by little and little they might become known to the people, and get to themselves commendation: also that they might learne to abide the sight of all men, and to speake before all men: that being made Priests, when they came forth to teach, they should not be abashed with shame: therefore place was appointed them to read in the pulpit. After this manner they were promoted by degrees, to these prooue currie one of their diligence in all their seuerall exercises, till they were made Subdeacons. This onely is my meaning, that those were rather grosse beginnings, than such offices as were accounted among the true ministers of the Church.

10 Whereas we said that the first and second point in the calling of ministers, are, what manner of men they ought to choose, and how great a religious carefulnes they ought to vse in that matter: wherein the old Church hath followed the prescribed order of Paul, and the examples of the Apostles. For they were wont to come together to chose the pastors with most great reverence and careful calling upon the name of God. Beside this they had a forme of examination, whereby they tried the life & doctrine of them that were to bee chosen by the rule of Paul. Only they somewhat offended herein with too great severity: because they would require more in a Bishop than Paul required, & especially in proceide of time they required unmarried life. But in the other points their obseruation was agreeing with Paul's description. But in this which we made the third point, that is to say, who ought to institute ministers, they kept not alway one order. In old time, none was received into the company of clerks, without the consent of all the people: insomuch that Cyprian laboured, even to the execution of this, hath appointed one Aurelius to be a Reader, without asking aduise of the Church, because that was done beside the custome, though not without reason. For this he saith before: In ordering of Clerkes, deere brethren, we are wont first to ask you aduise, and by common counsell to weigh the manneres and desuernings of every one. But because in these lesser exercises, there was not much peril: because they were choene to a long prooue, & not to a great office, therefore the consent of the people therein ceased to bee asked. Afterward in the other degrees also, except the Bishoprick, when the people commonly left the judgement and choice of them to the Bishop and the Priests, that they should examine who were meete and worthy:

faining peradventure when new priests were appointed for parishes: for then it behooved that the multitude of that place namely, should consent. Neither is it any marvel, that the people in this behalfe was little carefull in keeping their own right: For no man was made a Subdeacon, that had not shewed a long proofe of himselfe in his being a Clerke, under that severitie of discipline, which then was vfed. After that he had been tried in that degree, he was made a Deacon. From thence he came to the honor of priesthood if he had behaved himselfe faithfully. So no man was promoted, of whom there had not beene in deed a small had many yeares before the eyes of the people. And there were many canons to punish their faults: so that the Church could not be troubled with evill priests or Deacons, vnder which it neglected the remedies. Howbeit in the priests also there was always required the consent of them of the same citie: which the very first canon testifieth in the 67. distincion, which is fathered upon Anaceletus. Finally, all the admissions into orders were therefore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no man should prudely creep in without the consent of the faithfull, or should with too much easines be promoted without witnesse.

11 In choosing of Bishops the people had the libertie long preferred, that none should be thrust in that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the council at Antioch, that none should be thrust into them against their will. Which thing also Leo the first doth diligently confrune. Hereupon came these sayings: Let him be chosen, whom the Clergy, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule over all be chosen of all. For it must needs be, that he that is made a ruler being vnownen and not examined, is thrust in by violence. Again, Let him be chosen, that is both chosen by the Clerks, and desired by the people: and let him be confecrate by them of that Province, with the judgement of the Metropolitane. The holy Fathers tooke so great heed, that this libertie of the people should by no meane be diminished, that when the generall Synode gathered together at Constantinople did ordre Nefarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the Clergy and people, as they testifified by their epistle to the Synode of Rome. Therefore when any Bishop did appoint a succesor to himselfe, it was not other wise established vnder the whole people did confrune it. Whereof you have not onely an example, but also the very forme in Augustine in the naming of Exadus. And Theodotus, when he reheareseth that Peter was named by Athanasius to be his succesor, by and by addeth, that the order of Priests confirmed it, and the magistrat, and nobilitie, and the people approoved it with their allowing shewe.

12 I grant in deede that this also was by very good reason established in the Council of Laodicia, that the Election should not be left to multitudes. For it scarcely happeneth at any time, that so many heads shoule well order anything with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the uncertaine communallie is dividded into contrarie affections. But for this peril there was vfed a very good remedie. For first the Clerkes onely did choose: whom they had chosen they presented to the Magistrat, or to the Senate and cheefe men of the people. They, after consultation had, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did choose another, whom they did rather allow. Then the matter was moved to the multitude, which although they were not bound to those forejudgements, yet thereby they could the leffe be disordered. Or if they began at the multitude: that was done only to learne whome they did cheefely desire. When the desires of the people were heard, then they of the Clergy did choose him. So neither was it lawfull for the Clergy to appoint whom they list, neither were they bound to obey the foolish desires of the people. Leo appointeth this order in another place, when he saith: There are to be looked for, both the desires of the citizens, the peoples testimonies, the judgement of the honourable, and the election of the clearkes. Again, Let there be holden the testimonie monie of the honourable, the subscription of the clerks, the consent of the order and community. No reason (sayth he) suffreth it to be otherwise done. And nothing else meaneth that decree of the Synode at Laodicea, but that the Clergy and chief of the people, should not suffer themselves to be carried away by the vndifcreet multitude: but rather that with their wisedome and gravitie they should represent the peoples foolish affections, if at any time neede should so require.

13 This order of chosing was yet in force in the time of Gregory: and it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epistles of his, that give euent testimonie of this matter. For so oft as he hath done with the creating of any new Bishop, he vieth to write to the clergy, to the order, and to the people, and sometime also to the ruler, according as the government of the city is appointed. But if by reason of the disordered state of the church, he committeth to any Bishop adjoyning the charge of overseeing in the election, yet he alway requireth a solemn decree strengthened with the subscriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Constantius create Bishop at Milaine, and that many of the Milanes were by reason of the invasion of the barbarous nations fled to Gemma: he thought that the election could not otherwise be lawfull, unless they also were called together and gave their assent. Yea there are not yet fliue hundred yeares past, since Pope Nicholas decreed thus of the election of the bishop of Rome: that the cardinal bishops should beginne, then that they should joyn to them the rest of the clergy, last of all that the election should be confirmed by the consent of the people. And in the end he receiveth that decree of Leo, which I even now alledged, and commandeth it from thence foorth to be in force. But if the malice of wicked men shall so preuaine, that the clerks to make a true election be compelled to depart out of the city: yet he commandeth that some of the people be present with them. As for the Emperors consent, so faire as I can perceive, was required only in two churches, that is, Rome and Constantinople: because there were the two seats of the Empire. For whereas Ambrose was sent to Milaine with a power from Valentinian to gouerne the election of the new Bishop: that was extraordinarily done, by reason of gresious factions wherewith the citizens then boyled among them selves. But at Rome in old time the Emperours authority was of so great force in creating of the Bishop: that Gregory sayeth, that he was set by his commandement in the government of the Church: when yet by solemn vgage he was desir'd by the people. This was the manner, that when the clergy and the people had appointed any Bishop, the clergy should forthwith move it to the Emperour, that he should either by his allowance confirme the election, or by disallowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnant to this custome: wherein is nothing els said, but that it is in no wise to be suffered, that taking away the canonical election, a king should appoint a Bishop after his owne lust: and that the Metropolitane should consecrate none that were so promoted by violent powers. For it is one thing to spoile the Church of her right, that all should be transferred to the lust of one man: and another thing to grant this honour to a king or an Emperour, that by his authoritie he may confirme a lawfull election.

14 Now it followeth, that we entreat with what forme the minifters of the Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordination or Confirmation: the Greekes have called it Chierostonia, lifting vp of hands, and sometime also Chierothesia, lying on of hands. Howbeit Chierostonia is properly called that kind of election, where mens contentes are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth a decree of the Nicene councell, that the Metropolitane should meete together with all the Bishops of the province to order him which is chosen. But if some of them be hindered either by length of the way, or by sickness, or by any necessitie, that yet three at the leaft should meete: and that they that are absent should by letters testify their content, And this Canon, whiche with discontinuance

it grew out of vs, was afterward renewed with many Synodes. But all, or at least so many as had no excuse, were therefor commancted to be present, that they might have the greater triall of the learning and manners, of him that was to bee ordered: for the matter was not done without triall. And it appeareth by Cyprians wordes, that in the olde time they were woont not to be called after the election, but to be present at the election: and to this ende that they should be as it were governours, that nothing should be troublesomey done in the multitude. For where he faileth, that the people have power either to choose woorthie Priests, or to refuse vnoorthe within a little after he addeth: Wherefore according to the tradition of God and of the Apostles, it is to be diligently kept and holden (which is yet holden with vs also and in a manner throughout all proinces) that for the right celebration of orderings, all the Bishops adjoyning of the same proince shal come together to the people for which a governour is ordered, and that the Bishop be chosen in presence of the people. But when they were sometime slowly gathered together, and there was peril left some would abuse that day to occasions of ambitious fusing: it was thought that it should be enough if after the election made, they should meete and after allowance upon lawfull examination consecrate him.

When this was each where done without exception, by little and little a divers manner grew in vs, that they which were chosen should retort to the Metropolitan citie to fetch their ordering. Which came to passe rather by ambition, and by depravation of the first institution, than by any good reason. And not long after, when the authoritie of the Sea of Rome was now increased, there came in place yet a woorthie custome, that the Bishops almost of all Italy should fetch their consecration from thence. Which we may note out of the Epiftles of Gregorie. Onely a few cities, which did not so easily give place, had their ancient right prefered: as there is an example had of Milaine. Peradventure the only Metropolitan cities kept their privilege. For all the Bishops of the Province were woont to come together to the chief citie to consecrate the Archbishop. But the Ceremonie was laying on of hands. For I read of no other ceremonies vset: sauing that in the solemn assemblie the Bishops had a certaine apparell whereby they might be distinctly knowne from other Priests. They ordered also Priests and Deacons with onely laying on of hands. But every Bishop with the companie of priests ordered his owne Priest. But although they did all the same thing: yet because the Bishop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guiding, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the olde writers haue oft this sayeing: that a Priest differeth from a Bishop in no other thing, but because he hath not the power of ordering.

The v. Chapter.

That the olde forme of government is utterly overshrown by the tyrannie of the Papacie.

Now it is good to set before mens eies the order of governing the Church that the Sea of Rome and all the champions thereof doe kepe at this day, and the whole image of that Hierarchie which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the first and olde Church which we have described: that by the comparison it may appeare what maner of Church they haue, which vs this onely title to charge or rather to overwhome vs. But it is best to begin at Calling, that we see both who, and what manner of men, and what order they be called to this minifterie. And then afterwarde we shall consider how faithfully they execute their office. We will give the first place to Bishops: to whom I would to God this might be an honor, to haue the first place in this discourse. But the matter it selfe doth doth not suffer me, once to touch this thing be it never so lightly, without their great shame. And yet I will remember, in what kind of writing I am now occupied: and will not suffer my talk, which ought to be framed only to simple doctrine, to flow abroad beyond due bonds. But let some one of them that have not utterly lost all shame, answer me, what manner of Bishops are at this day commonly chosen. Truely it is now grown too much out of use, to have any examination had of their learning: but if there be had any respect of learning, they choose some lawyer that can rather brawl in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certain, that these hundred yeres there hath scarcely beene every hundreth man chosen that understood any thing of holy doctrine. I doe not therefore spare the former ages, for that they were much better, but because we have now only the present Church in question.

If judgment be had of their manners, we shall finde that there have been few or almost none, whom the olde Canons would not have judged vnworthie. He that was not a dronkard, was a whoremonger: he that was also cleane from this wickednesse, was either a dyer, or a hunter, or disolute in some part of his life. For there be lighter faults, which by the olde Canons doe exclude a man from being a Bishop. But this is a most great absurditie, that verie children scarcely tenne yeres old, are by the Popes grant made Bishops. They are grown to such shamelesnes and sensles dulness, that they feared not that extreme yea and monstrous wicked doing, which is vtherly abhorring from the verie fente of nature. Hereby appeareth how religious their elections were, where the negligence was so careless.

Now in election, all that right of the people is taken away. Their desirings, their affentings, their subscribing, and all such things are vanished: the whole power is transferred to the Canons onely. They bestow the Bishopricks upon whom they will, and afterward bring him foorth into the sight of the people, but to be worshippd, not to be examined. But Leo cryeth on the other side, that no reason sufficeth it, and he pronounceth that it is a violent imposition. Cyprian, when he testifieth that it proceedeth from the lawe of God, that it shou'd not be done but by the consent of the people, the which the contrarie maner is repugnant to the word of God. The decrees of many Synodes doe most severely forbid it to be otherwise done: and if it be done, they command it to be void. If these things be true, there now remaineth in the Papacie no Canonical election, neither by Gods law nor by the Ecclesiastical law. But although there were no other cuilll, yet how shall they be able to excuse this that they have spoiled the Church of her right? But (say they) the corruption of times so required, that because in appointing of bishops, hatreds and affections more prevailed with the people and the Magistrates, then right and sound judgement, therefore the rule thereof should be given to a few. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedie of a mischeife in desparked case. But fith the medicine itself hath appeared more hainous than the very disease, why is not this new cuill also remedied? But (say they) it is exactly prescribed to the Canons, what they ought to follow in the election. But do we doubt, but that the people in old time did understand that they were bound to most holy lawes, when they law that they had a rule fet them by the word of God, when they came together to choose a bishop? For that onely voice of God, whereby he describeth the true image of a bishop, ought worthlie to be of more value than infinite thousands of Canons. But understand the people were corrupted with a most cuilll affection, had now regard of the law or of equity. So as by this day though there be mere good lawes written, yet they remaine buried in papers. Yet for the most part it is vsed in mens manners, yea and allowed, as though it were done by good reason, that dronkards, whoremongers, dicers, are commonly promoted to this honor: (It is but little that I say) that Bishopricks are the rewards of adulteries and bawdries. For when they are given but to hunters and falconers, it is to be thought to be gaily well bestowed. Any way to excuse so hainous indignity.
Cap. 5. Of the outward meanes

indignitie, it is too much wicked. The people (say I) had in olde time a very good Canone to whom Gods word prescrip't, that a Bishop ought to be vnreprou'able, a teacher, no fighter, &c. Why therefore is the charge of choos'ng removed from the people to these men? Because forsooth the word of God was not heard among the tumults and ferdious partakings of the people. And why should it not at this day be remou'd againe from these men, which not onely doe breake all lawes, but calling away all shame, doe wantonly, couetously, ambitiously, mingle and confound Gods and mens matters together?

3. But they lie, when they say, that this was devised for a remedy. We often read that in old time Churches were in tumults at the choosing of Bishops; yet never any man durst thinke of taking away the auth'rity from the people. For they had other waies whereby they might either preuent these faultes, or amend them if they were already committed. But I will tell what it is. When the people began to be negligent in making the elections, and did cast that care upon the Priests as little belonging to them, they abused this occasion to viurpe a tyrann'y to themselfes, which afterward they stablish'd by new Canons set forth. As for their ordering, it is nothing else but a mere mockage. For the shew of examination that they there set out is so vaine and hungry, that it wanteth even all colour. Therefore whereas in some places Princes haue by couenant obtained of the Bishops of Rome, that they themselfes might name Bishops, therein the Church suffered no new losse: because the election was taken away, onely from the Canons, which had by no right violently taken it, or verily stolen it. Truely this is a moft foule example, that out of the Court are sent Bishops to poftell' Churches: and it should be the worke of Godly Princes to absteine from such corruption. For it is a wicked spoiling of the Church, when there is thrust vnto any people a Bishop, whom they have not desired, or at least with free voice allowed. But that vnorderly manner which hath long agoe beene in the Churches, gave occasion to Princes to take the presentation of Bishops into their owne hands. For they had rather that it should be their gift, than those mens, to whom it more belonged, and which did no leffe wrongfully abuse it.

4. Lo! here is a noble calling, by reason whereof the Bishops boast themselfes to be the successors of the Apostles. But they say that the authoritie to create Priests belonged to them onely. But in this they most lewdly corrupt the old institution: because they doe not by their ordering create Priests to rule and feede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewise when they consecrate Deacons, they do nothing of their true and proper office, but they ordaine them only to certaine Ceremonies about the chalice and the paten. But in the Synode at Chalcedon, it is conforme decreed, that the orderings should not be absolutely gien, that is to say, but that a place should be therewithall assigned to them that are ordered, where they shall exercise their office. This decree is for two causes very profitable. First, that the Church should not be burdened with superfluous charges, nor that that should be spent vpon idle men which should be gien to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, should thinke that they be not promoted to an honor, but that there is an office committed vnto the, to the execution whereof they are bound by solemn protestation. But the Romish masters (which thinke that there is nothing in religion to be cared for, but their belfe) first doe expound title to be the revenue that may suffic' to sustaine them, whether it be by their own liuelyhood or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Priest, without taking care where they ought to minifter, they give them the order; if they be rich enough to finde themselfes. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Councell requireth, should be the yearely revenue for their sustenance? But now because the later Canons condemned the Bishops with penaltie to finde them whom they had ordered without sufficient title, by this mean to restraine their too much easie admitting: there hath beene

been also a little devise to mock out this penality. For he that is ordered, naming any title whatsoever it be, promises that he will be content therewith: by this offer he is driven from his action for his finding I pass over a thousand frauds that are herein said: that when some doe falsely name vain titles of benefices, whereupon they cannot make true shillings by yeere: other some vnder secrete covenent doe borrow benefices, which they promise that they will by and by restore againe, but sometime they restore not at all. And such other mysteries.

5. But although these grofer abuses were taken away, is not this alway an absurditie, to appoint a Priest to whom you alligne no place? Also they order no man but to sacrifice. But the true ordinance of a Priest is, to be called to the government of the Church: and a Deacon to be called to the gathering of the alms: they doe in deed with many pomps shadow their doing, that in the very shew it may have a reverence among the simple. But among men that have their found wit, what can these disguisings availe, if there be no sound substance or truth vnderneath them? For they vse ceremonies about it, either fetched out of Iewishnesse, or fained of themselues: which it were better to forbear. But of true examination, (for I nothing passe vpon that shadow which they retaine) of the peoples content, and of other things necessarie, they make no mention. I call a shadow their foolish gesturings meete to bee laughed at, framed to a fond and cold counterfeit of antiquitie. The Bishops have their deputies which before the ordering may enquire of their learning. But what? whether they can reade their masses, whether they can decline a common nowne, that they shall light upon in reading, conjugate a verbe, or doe knowe the signification of one word, for it is not necessarie that they be cunning enough to construe a verbe. And yet they be not put backe from Priesthood which faile even in the childeh rudiments, so that they bring any mony or commendation of fauour. Of like sort it is, that when they are brought to the altar to be ordered, it is asked thience in a toong not understanded, whether they be worthie of that honor. One answereth which never saw them: (but because nothing should want of the forme, hee hath parte in the plaine) They are worthie. What may a man blame in the leuerend fathers, but that which mocking in fo open sacrileges, they do without shame laughe to scarce both God & men? But because they are in long psittacion thereof, they thinke that nowe it is lawfull for them. For who soeuer dare once open his mouth against these soe evident and so hainous wicked doings, he is forthwith hated by them to punishment of death, as though it were one that had in old time discloes abroad the holie mysteries of Cerer. Would they do this if they thought that there were any God?

6. Now how much do they behaue themselves better in bestowing of benefices? which thing was once joyned with the ordering, but nowe it is altogether separate? There is among them a diuerse maner. For the Bishops onely do not conferre benefices: and in those whereof they are safe to haue the conferring, they haue not the full right, but other haue the presentation, and they retaine onely the title of collation for honor fake. There are also nominations out of schooles, and resignations, either simple, or made for cause of exchange, commendatorie writings, preuents, and whatsoever is of that sort. But they also behaue themselves that none of them can reprooch another with any thing. So I affirm, that scarcely every hundreth benefice is bestowed at this day in the papacie without Simonie, as the old writers defined Simonie, I do not say, that they all buy them with readie monie: but thewe me one of Epi. 11. Lib. 3. twentieth that commeth to a benefice without some by commendation, some other kindred or alliance promoteth, and some the authorize of their parents: some by doing of pleururies do get themselves fauour. Finally benefices are giuen to this end, not to provide for the Churches, but for them that receiue them. Therefore they call them benefices, by which words they doe sufficiently declare, that they make no other account of them, but as the beneficiall gifts of princes, whereby they either either get the favour of their soldiers or reward their services. I omit howe these rewards are bestowed upon barbers, cooks, mole keepers, & such dreggiest men. And now judiciall courts do ring of no matters more, than about benefices: so that a man may say that they are nothing else but a pray cast afore dogs to hunt after. Is this tolerable even to be heard of, that they should be called pastors, which have broken into the possession of a Church as into a terme of their enemy? that have gotten it by brawling in the law? that have bought it for money? That have defereu'd it by filthie servises: which being children yet scanty able to speake, have receiued it, as by inheritance from their uncles and kinsmen, and some bastards from their fathers?

7 Would ever the licentiousnes of the people, though they had bin neuer so corrupt and lawleff, have gone so farre? But this is also more monstrous, that one man, (I will not say what manner of man, but truly such a one as cannot gouene himselfe) is set to gouern five or sixe churches. A man may see in these daies in Princes courts, young men that have three Abbetes,two Bishops,one Archbishops. But there be commonly Canons with five, five or sevene benefices, whereof they have no care at all, but in receiuing the revenues. I will not object, that it is ecch where cried out against by the word of God, which hath long ago ceased to be of any estimation at all among them. I will not object, that there have bin many most feuer penall ordinances in many Counsels made against this wickednes: for those also they boldlie despise as oft as they list. But I say that both are monstrous wicked dooings, which are utterly against God and nature and the government of the Church, that one robber shall oppresse many Churches at once, and that he should be called a Pastor, which cannot be present with his flocke though he would: and yet (such is their shamefulnes) they couer such abominable filthines with the name of the Church to deliver themselves from all blame. But also (and God will) in these lewdnesseis is contained that holy succession, by the merite whereof they boasht that it is wrought that the Church may not perish.

8 Now (which is the second marke in judging a lawfull Pastor) let vs see howe faithfully they exercise their office. Of the Priests that be there created, some bee Monkes, some bee (as they call them) Secular. The first of these two companies was unknouen to the old Church: and it is so against the profession of Monkes, to haue such a place in the Church, that in old time when they were chosen out of Monasteries into the clergie, they ceased to be Monkes. And Gregorie, whose time had much dregges, yet suffered not this confusion to be made. For he willed that they be put out of the clergie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly bee together both a Monk and a clareke: fish the one is a hinderance to the other. Nowe if I ask, howe he wel fullfilled his office, whom the Canons declare to be vnnecessary, what I pray you, will they answere? they will fortooth alleage vnto mee those vntimely borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby Monkes are for receiued into the honour & power of Priesthood, that they might still abide in their Monasteries. But what reason is this, that everie unlearned man, so soon as he hath once possed the see of Rome, may with one worde overthower all antiquitie? But of this matter we shall speake hereafter. Let this suffice for this time, that in the pure Church it was holden for a great absurditie, if a Monke did execute the office of Priesthood. For Hierome saith that hee doth not execute the office of a Priest, while hee is conuertant among Monkes: and makest himselfe one of the common people to be roued by the Priests. But, although we grant them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the mendicants some doe preach, all the other Monkes either sing or mumble vp massses in their dennis. As though each Priest willed, or the nature of the office inuereth Priests to bee made to this purpose. Whereas the Scripture plainly teareth, that it is the Priests office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne another way, yea utterly to change the holy institution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expressly forbidden to do the things that God commandeth all priests. For this song is sung to them: let a Monke content with his cloister, not presume to minifter the Sacraments, not to execute any thing belonging to publike office. Let them dene, if they can, that it is an open muckerie of God, that any priest should be made to this purpose, to abstaine from his true and natural office: and that which hath the name may not have the thing.

4 I come to the secular priests: which are partly beneficed men, (as they call them) that is to say, have benefices whereupon to live: and partly do let out their daily labour to hire, in massing, or singing, and live as it were of a stipend gathered thereupon. Benefices have either care of foules, as bishoppes and cure of paroiches: or they be the stipends of deiantie men, that get their living with singing, as prebends, Canonships, patronages, and dignities, chaplainships and such other. Howbeit, since things are now turned upside downe, Abbates and priories are given to very boies, by privilege, that is to say by common and vufall custome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their living from day to day, what should they doe otherwise than they doe? that is in servile and shamefull manner to give out them selves for gaine, specially sith there is so great a multitude as now the world swarmeth with. Therefore when they dare not be openly, or for as much as they thinke they should but little profite that way, they goe about like hungrie dogs, and with their importunacy, as with barking, they enforce out of men againist their wills what to thrust into their belly. Here if I would go about to express in wordes, how great a dishonour it is to the Church, that the honor and office of priestshipp is come to this point. I should have no ende. Therefore it is not meete that the readers should looke for at my hand such a long declaration as may be proportionall to so hainous indigne. Briefly I say, if it be the office of priestshipp, (as the word of God prescribeth, and the ancient canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the spirituall kingdom of Christ: all such sacrificers as haue none other workes or wages, but in making a market of masses, are not onlye idle in their office, but also haue no office at all to exercise. For there is no place assigned them to teache: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally there is nothing left to them, but the altar, whereupon to sacrifice Christ: which is not to offer to God, but to duels, as we shall fee in another place.

10 I doe not here touch the outwarde faultes, but onlye the inwarde cuill, which sticketh faste by the roote in their institution. I will adde a laying, which will founde them ill in their cares: but because it is true, I must speake it: that in the same degree are to be accounted Canons, Deanes, Chaplaines, Prouostes, and all they that are fed with idle benefices. For what seruice can they doe to the Church? For they haue put from them selves the preaching of the word, the care of discipline, and ministration of Sacraments, as much too troublesome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boaste them selves to be true priests? Singing forsooth, and a pompe of Ceremonies. But what is that to the purpose? If they allcage custome, if prescription of long time: I againe on the other side doe lay vnto them the definition of Christ, whereby he hath expresst vs both true priests, and what they ought to haue that will be accounted such. But if they cannot haue so hard a lawe, to submit themselves to Christes rule: at the least let them suffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitive Church. But their case shall be nearer the better, if their stare be judged by the olde Canons. They that have degenerate into Canons, should have beene priests, as they were in olde time, that shoulde rule the Church in common with the Bishop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Pastor. Those Chapter dignitieas as they call them, doe nothing at all belong to the governing of the Church: much leefe, chaplainships, and the other dregs of like names. What account then shall we make of them all? Truly both the word of Christ, and the the visage of the Church excluded them from the honor of priesthood. Yet they firmly hold that they be priests: but we must plucke off their vifour: so that we finde that their whole profession is most strange and farre remoued from that office of priests, both which the Apostles describe unto vs, and which was required in the primitive Church. Therefore all such orders, with what titles soever they be notified, lieth they be new, being verily neither upheld by the institution of God, nor by the ancient visage of the Church, ought to have no place in the description of the spiritual government, which the Church hath received consecrate with the Lords owne mouth. Or (if they will rather haue me to speake more simply and grossely) for as much as Chaplaines, Canons, Deacons, Prouostes, and other idle bellies of the same sort, doe not so much as with their little finger touch any small parcel of that office, which is necessarily required in priests, it is not to be suffered, that in wrongfully taking a false honor upon them selves, they should break the holy institution of Christ.

11 There remaine Bishops, and parsons of Paroches: who I would to God they did stiue to retaine their office. For we woulde willingly grant unto them, that they have a godlie and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accounted Pastors, while they forfake the Churches committed to them, and cast the care of them vpon other, they doe as it were the Pastors office to doe nothing. If an vilerer that never stirred his foote out of the citie, wouldde profess himselfe a plowman, or a keeper of a vineyarde: if a souldier that had bene continually in the battell and in the camp, and had neuer seene judiciauell court or bookes, woulde boaste himselfe for a lawyer, who couldne abide such finking follies? But these men doe somewhat more absurdly, that will seeme and be called lawfull Pastors of the Church, and yet will not be fo. For how many a one is there, that doth so much, as in thewe, exercise the government of his Church? Manie doe all their life long deuoure the reuenues of Churches, to which they never come so much as to looke vpon them. Some other doe once by yeere either come themselves, or sende their steward, that nothing should be lost in the letting to farme. When this corruption first crept in, they that would enjoy this kind of vacation, exempted themselves by privilege: now it is a rare example, to haue one resident in his owne Church. For they esteeme them none other wise than farmes over which they set their vicars as bellies or farmers. But this very natural reason receiveth, that he should be pastor of a flocke, that never have one sheepe thereof.

12 It appeareth that even in the time of Gregorie, there were certaine seeds to this mischief, that the rullers of Churches, began to be negligent in teaching: for he doth in one place gravely complain of it. The world (faith he) is full of priests, but yet in the harvest there are seldomne workmen found: because in deed we take vpon vs the office of priest, but we full not the worke of the office. Againe, because they haue not the bowels of charitie, they will seeme Lords: they acknowledge not themselves to be fathers. They change the place of humiliation into the adorning of lordlinesse. Againe, but what doe we, O pastours, which receive the rewarde, and are no workmen? We are fallen to outward businesse, and we take in hand one thing, and performe another. We leave the minifterie of preaching: and to our punishment, as I see, we are called Bishops, that keepe the name of honour and not of vertue. Sith he vseth so great sharpnesse of words against them, which were but leffe continuing and leffe diligent in their office: What I pray you, would he say, if he sawe of the Bishops almost none, or truly very fewe, and of the rest scarcely every hundredth man once in all his life to goe vp into a pulpit? For men be come to such madness, that it is commonly counted a thing too base for the dignitie of a Bishop, to make a sermon to the people. In the time of Bernard, things were somewhat more decaied: but we see also with how sharpe chidings he importeth against the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue bene then much purer than it is now.

theewth corne where in robbers do more licenciously range without lawe and measure. Truely all things are there so unlike the institution of Christ, yea so contrary to it, they are to degenerate from the ancient ordinances and manerets of the Church, they are so repugnant to nature and reason, that there can be no greater inutie done to Christ, then when they pretend his name to the defence of so disordered governement. We (say they) are the pillars of the Church, the chiefes Bishops of religion, the vicars of Christ, the heads of the faithfull: because the power of the Apostles is by succession come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of these follies, as though they talked vnto stockes. But so oft as they shall boast of this, I will ask of them againe, what they have common with the Apostles. For we speake not of any inherently defending honor that may be givenc to men even while they lie sleepeing: but of the office of preaching, which they so much flee from. Likewithe when we affirme that their kingdom is the tyrannie of Antichrist, by and by they answer, that it is that reverente Hierarchie, so oft prattled of notable and holy men. As though the holy fathers, when they commended the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchie or spirituall government, as it was delivered them from hande to hande from the Apostles, did dreame of this mischief and want disordered heape, where the Bishoppes are for the most part either rude asses, which know not the very first & common principles of faith, or swaine children yet newe come from the nurse: and if any be learned (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a Bishopprike to be nothing else but a title of gloriousnesse and magnificence: where the parsons of Churches thinke no more of feeding the flocke, than a shoemaker doth of plying: where all things are confounded with more than Babylonianall dispersing, that there remaineth no more any one step whole of that ordinarie of the fathers.

What if we defende to their maners? where shall be that light of the world, which Christ requireth? where is the sall of the earth? where is that holinesse, which may be as a perpetuall rule to judge by? There is no degree of men at this daye more ill spoken of for riot, wantonnesse, dementines, finally all kind of lustes. There are of no degree men either fitter, or cunninger masters of all deceit, fraud, treason, & breach of faith: there is no where so great cunning or boldnes to doe hurt. I passe over their disdainfulness, pride, extortion, crueltrie. I passe over the dissolute licenciousnesse in all the parts of their life. In suffering whereof the world is so weareied, that it is not to be feared, that I should seeme to enforce any thing too much. This one thing I say, which they themselves shall not be able to deny: that of Bishoppes there is almoist none, of the Parsons of parishes nor the hundredth man: but if judgement should be given of his maners according to the old Canons, he should be either to be excommunicate: or at least to bee put from his office. I seeme to say somewhat incredible: so faire is that auncient discipline growen out of vs, that commanded an exacter triall to be had of the maners of the clergie: but the truth is so. Nowe let them go, that fight vnder the standard and guiding of the Sea of Rome, and let them boast among themelues of the order of priesthood. As for the order that they have, truely it is evident, that it is neither of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the fathers, nor of the old Church.

Now let the Deacons come forth, and that most holy distributing that they have of the goods of the Church. Howbeit they do not nowe create their Deacons to that purpose, for they enioyne them nothing else but to ministe at the altar, to read and sing the Gospell, and do I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almes, nothing of the care of the poore,nothing of all that function which they in old time executed. I speake of the vete institution. For if we have respect what they do, indeede it is not to them an office, but onely a steppe toward priesthood. In one thing, they that that keep the Deacons place at the maffe, do represent a void image of antiquite. For they receive the offerings before the consecration. This was the ancient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did keepe another, and offer their almes at the altar: so first by a signe, & afterward by very liberalitie they shewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mans stower, received that which was given, to distribute it. Now of these almes, there commeth no more to the poore, than if they were thrown into the sea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truely therein they have nothing like, neithe to the institution of the Apostles, nor to the ancient visage. But the very distribution of the goods they have conueyed another way, and have so framed it, that nothing can be deuised more vnorderly. For as theues, when they have cut mens throtes, do divide the pray among them: so thefe, after the quenching of the light of God's worde, as though the Church were alaine, do thinke that whatsoever was dedicate to holy vses is layd for pray and spoile. Therefore making a division, every one hath_matched to himselfe as much as he could.

16 Here all these old orders, that we have declared, are not onely troubled, but utterly wiped out and rased. The bishops and priests of civitie, which being made rich by this pray, were turned into Canons, have made hauoke of the chieve part among them. But it appeareth that the parution was vnorderly, because to this day they strive about the bounds. Whatsoever it be, by this provision it is prouided, that not one halpe of the goods of the Church should come to the poore, whose had been the halfe part at eall. For the Canons doe giue them the fourth part by name, and the other four part they doe therefore appoint to the Bishops, that they should hauo it vpon hospitallie, & other duties of Charitie. I speake not what the clearke ought to do with their portion, & to what vse they ought to bestow it. For we have sufficiently declared, that the rest which is appointed for temples, buildings & other expences, ought to be open for the poore in necessitie. I pray you, if they had onelake of the hate of God in their heart would they abide this burden of conffience, that all that they eate, and wherewith they be clothed, of Commis of theft, yea of facrifice? But such they are little moven with the judgement of God, they shoul at least thinke, that those be men ended with wit and reason, to whom they would persuade, that they have so goodly and well framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boast. Let them anfwere me shortly, whether Deaconrie be a licence to deale and rob. If they define this, they shall also be compell'd to confesse, that they have no Deaconrie left: for as much as among them all the disposition of the goods of the Church is openly turned into a spoiling full of facrifice.

17 But here they vfe a very faire colour. For they say, that the dignitie of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomly uphelden. And they have of their left some so shamelesse, that they dare openly boast, that so onely are fulfilled those prophecies, whereby the old Prophets describe the gloriositie of the kingdom of Christ, when that kinlingly gorgeousnes is scene in the priestly order. Not in vaine (say they) God hath promised these things to his Church. Kings shall come, they shall worship in thy fight, they shall bring thee gifts. Arise, arise, cloth thee with the garments of thy glory, O Sion: cloth thee with the garments of thy glory. O Hierusalem: All shall come from Saba, bringing gold and incense, and speaking praise to the Lord. All the cattell of Cedar shall be gathered together to thee. If I should ray long upon confuting this lawdes, I fear I should seeme fond. Therefore I will not loose words in vaine. But I ask: if any Jew would abuse these testimonies, what solution would they give? Verily they would reprehend his dolithe, for that he transferred those things to the flesh and the world, that are spiritually spoken of the spiritual kingdom of Christ. For we know, that the Prophets, under the image of earthly things, did paint out unto vs the heavenly glorie of God, that ought to shine in the Church. For the Church
Church had never leffe abundance of these blessings, which their wordes expresse, than in the time of the Apostles: and yet all confess, that the force of the kingdome of Christ then cheefly flourished abroad. What then meane these sayings? Whatsoever is any where precious, high, excellent, it ought to be made subject to the Lord. Whereas it is namely spoken of kings, that they shall submit their scepters to Christ, that they shall throw downe their Crownes before his feete, that they shall dedicate their goods to the Church: when (will they say) was it better and more fully performed, than when Theodosius, casting away his purple robe, leaving the ornaments of the Empire, as some one of the common people: submitted himself before God and the Church, to solemn penance? then when he & other like Godly Princes bestowed their endowments and their cares to preferre pure doctrine in the Church, and to cherish and defend sound teachers? But how Priestes at that time exceeded not in superfluous riches, that only sentence of the Synode at Aquileia, where Ambrose was cheefe, sufficiently declareth: Glorious is pooretie in the Priestes of the Lord. Truely the Bishops had at that time some riches, wherewith they might have set out the Churches honor, if they had thought those to be the true ornaments of the Church. But when they knew that there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glibber and shew themselves proudly with deintiness of fare, with gorgioufneffe of garments, with great traine of Servants, with flately palaces, they followed and kept the humbleness and modestie, ye the very pooretie which Christ holily appointed among his Ministrates.

18 But that we may not be too long in this pointe, let vs againe gather into a short summe, how farre that dispensation or dissipation of the goods of the Church, that is now vfed, differeth from the true Deaconrie, which both the worde of God commendeth unto vs, and the ancient Church observed. As for that which is bestowed upon the garnishing of temples, I say it is ill bestowed, if that meane be not vfed, which both the very nature of holy things appointeth, that the Apostles and other holy Fathers have prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seen at this day in the Temples? whatsoever is framed, I will not say after that auncient sparing, but to any honest meane it is rejected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which sauour of riot and the corruption of times. In the mean time they are so farre from having due care of the lively Temples, that they would rather suffer thousands of the poore to perish for hunger, than they would breake the least chalice or crust, to reliefe their neede. And that I may not pronounce of my selfe any thing more gravely against then, this onely I would have the godly readers to thinken vpon: if it should happen that some Exuperius Bishop of T holofe, whom we often now rehearsed, or Acetius, or Ambrose, or any such to be raised from death, what they would say. Truely they would not allow that so great necessitie of the poore, riches in a manner superfluous should be turned another way. Admit I speake nothing how these vses vpon which they be bestowed, (although there were no poore) are many waies hurtfull, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leave to speake of men. These goods are dedicate to Christ: therefore they are to be disposed after his will. But they shall in vain say, that this part is bestowed vpon Christ, which they have wasted otherwise than he commanded. Howbeit, to confesse the truth, there is not much of the ordinarie reuence of the Church abated for these expenses. For there are no Bishops riches so welthy, no Abbayes so fatte, finally neither so many, nor so large benefices that may serue to fill the gluttony of Priestes. But while they seeke to spare themselves, they periwade the people by superstitio, to turne that which should be bestowed vpon the poore, to builde Temples, to set vp images, to buy Jewels, to get costly garments. So with this gulfse are the dayling almes consumed.

19 Of the reuence, that they receive of their lands and possessions, what else shall I say, but that which I haue already said, & which is before all mens eies? We see

The word of God and the ancient Canons against the pride of the Roman Clergie.
Cap. 6. Of the outward meanes with what faithfullnes they which are called bishops and Abbots do dispose the greatest part. What madness is it to seek here for an ecclesiastical order? Was it meete that they, whose life ought to have beene a singular example of frugallitie, modestie, continence, and humility, should contend with the royaltie of princes in number of goods, in gorgiousnes of houfes, in daintines of apparell and fare? And how much was this contrarie to their office, that they, whom the eternall and inviolable commandement of God forbiddeth to be desirous of falsifie gaine, and biddeth to be content with simple living, should not only lay hands upon townes and castles, but also violently enter upon the greatest lordships, finally posseffe forceably vertue empires? If they despise the word of God: what will they answer to those ancient decrees of the Synodes: whereby it is decreed that the bishop should have a small lodging not farre from the Church, meane fare and household stuffe? what will they say to that praise of the Synode at Aquileia: where pouerie is reported glorious in the Priestes of the Lord? For perhaps they will utterly refuse as too much rigorons, that which Hierem aduseth Nepotianus, that poore men and strangers: and among them Christ as a guest, may know his table. But that which he by and by addeth, they will be ashamed to denye that it is the glory of a Bishop to provide for the goods of the poore: that it is the shame of all priestes to studye for their owne riches. But they cannot receiue this, but they must all condemn themselves of shame. But it is not needfull in this place to speake more hardly against them, lest my meaning was nothing else, but to shew, that among them the lawfull order of deaconerie is long agoe taken away: that they may no more glorie of this tite to the commendation of their Church: which I thinke I haue already sufficiently shewne.

The vj. Chapter.
Of the Supremacie of the Sea of Rome.

Hitherto we haue rehearsed those orders of the church, which were in the government of the old Church: but afterward corrupted in times, and from thenceforth more and more abused, do now in the Popish Church remaine onely their name, and indeed are nothing else but vifours: that by comparison the godly reader might judge what manner of Church the Romanistes have, for whose sake they make vs schismatikes, because we haue departed from it. But as for the head and top of the whole order, that is to say, the supremaie of the sea of Rome, whereby they trauell to proue that they only haue the catholike Church, we haue not yet touched it: because it took beginning neither from the institution of Christ, nor from the vse of the old church, as those former parts did: which we haue shewne to haue so proceeded from antiquitie, that by wickednes of times they are vterly degenerate, and haue put on altogether a new forme. And yet they go about to perfwade the world, that this is the chiefe and in a maner onely bonde of the vnite of the church, if we cleaue to the sea of Rome, and continue in the obedience thereof. They reft (I say) principally vpone this stay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themselfes, for that they kepe the head, upon which the vnite of the Church hangeth, and without which the Church muft needs fall asunder and be broken in pecces. For thus they thinke that the Church is as it were a mainned and headless body, vnlesse it be subject to the Sea of Rome, as to her head. Therefore when they talk of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the bishop of Rome (as the vicar of Christ, which is the head of the Church) is in his seence President of the vnierfall Church: and that otherwise the Church is not well ordered, vnlesse that Sea do hold the Supremacie above all other. Therefore this also is to bee examined of what for it is: that we may omit nothing that pertaineth to a suft government of the Church.
Let this therefore be the principal point of the question: Whether it be necessary for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they call it) or Ecclesiastical order, that one Sea should be above the rest both in dignitie and in power, that it may be the head of the whole body. But we make the Church subjicet too many laws, if we lay this necessity upon it, without the word of God. Therefore if the adversaries will prove that which they require, they must first shewe that this disposition was ordained by Christ. For this purpose they alledge out of the law the high priesthood, also the high judgement, which God did institute at Hierusalem. But it is easie to give a solution, and that many waies, if one way do not satisfie them. First no reason compelleth to extende that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole world shall be farre different. Because the Jews were on each side compassed with idolaters: that they should not be diversly drawne with variety of religions, God appointed the place of worshipping him in the midst part of the land: there he ordained out them: one head Bishop, whom they should have all regard vnto, that they might be the better kept together in vnity. Now when religion is spread abroad into the whole world, who doth not see that it is altogether an aburditie, that the gouernement of the East and West be giuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man should affirm that the whole world ought to be governed by one Ruler, because one piece of land hath no more rulers but one. But there is yet another reason, why that ought not to be made an example to be followed. No man is ignorant that the high Bishop was a figure of Christ. Now, since the Priesthood is remoued, that right must also be remoued. But to whom is it remoued? Truely not to the Pope (as he himselfe is so boldely shamelessly to boast) when he draweth this title to himselfe: but to Christ, which as he alone susteine this office, without any Vicar or Successor, so he resigneth the honor to none other. For the Priesthood consisteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appealeing of God, which Christ hath fully wrought by his death, and in that intercession which he now vseth with his Father.

There is therefore no cause why they should binde vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which we have seene to be enduring but for a time. Out of the new Testament they have nothing to bring foorth for proofe of their opinion, but that it was said to one: Thou art Peter, and upon this stone I will builde my Church. Againe, Peter, Louest thou me? Feede my sheepe. But admitting that these be strong proofes, they must first shew, that he which is commanunded to feede the flocke of Christ, hath power committed to him over all Churches: and that to binde and to loose is nothing else but to rule over all the world. But as Peter had receiued the Commandement of the Lord, so he exhorteth all other Priestes to feede the Church. Hereby we may gather, that by this saying of Christ, there was either nothing giuen to Peter more than to the rest, or that Peter did equally communicate with other the power that he had receiued. But, that we stiuie not vainely, we have in another place a cleare expostion out of the mouth of Christ, what is to binde and to lose: that is to say, to retaine and to forgive sinnes: But the manner of binding and loosing, both the whole Scripture eache where sheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when he faith that the ministers of the Gospell, have commandement to reconcile men to God, and also haue power to punish them that refuse this benefite.

How shamefully they wret thes places, that make mention of binding and loosing, I both haue alreadie shortly touched, and a little after I shall haue occasion to declare more at large. Now it is good to see onely, what they gather of that famous answere of Christ to Peter. He promised him the keyes of the kingdome of heaven: he saide that whatsoever he bound in earth, should be bound in heauen. If we agree upon the word keyes, and the manner of binding, all contention shall by and by cease. For the Pope him selfe will gladly giue ouer the charge injoynd to the Apostles, which beeing full of trauell and griefe, should shake from him his pleasures, without gaine. For as much as the heauens are opened vs by the doctrine of the Gospel, it is with a very ftrong metaphor expressed by the name of keyes. Now men are bound and foold in no other wise, but when faith reconcileth some to God, and their owne unbeliefe bindeth other some. If the Pope did take this onely vpou him: I think there will be no man that would either enuy it or strue about it. But becaufe this fucceffion being traueloure and nothing gainfull pleafeth not the Pope, hereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Christ promised to Peter. Therefore I gather by the very matter it felleth, that there is nothing meant, but the dignitie of the office of an Apostle, which cannot be seuered from the charge. For if that definition which I have rehearsed be receiued (which cannot but shamefully be reject) here is nothing gulle to Peter, that was not alfo common to his other fellows: becaufe other wise there should not onely wrong be done to the persons, but the very magisfic of doctrine should fail. They criu out on the other fide: what maileth it, I pray you, to run upon this rocke? For they shall not proune, but as the preaching of one fame Gospel was enioined to all the Apostles, so they were alio alike furnished with power to binde and looie. Christ (fay they) appointed Peter prince of the whole Church, when he promised that he would give him the keyes. But that which he then promised to one, in another place he gave it alfo to all the rest, and deliuered it as it were into their hands. If the fame power were granted to all, which was promised to one, wherein shall he be aboue his fellows? Herein (fay they) he exellceth, becaufe he received it both in common together with them, and feuerally by himselfe, which was not gulle to the other, but in common. What if I anwer with Cyprian and Augustine, that Christ did it not for this purpose, to prefer one man before other, but to set out the vnitie of the Church. For thus faith Cyprian, that God in the person of one gave the keyes to all, to signifie the vnitie of all; and that the rest were the fame thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honour and power: but that the beginning is taken at vnitie, that the Church of Christ may be fwhelled to be one. Augustine faith: If there were not in Peter a mysterie of the Church, the Lord would not fay to him, I will giue thee the keyes. For if this was faid to Peter, the Church hath them not: but if the Church haue them, then Peter, when he receiued the keyes, bocakened the whole Church. And in another place, When they were all asked, only Peter anwered, thou art Chrifte: and it is faid to him, I will giue thee the keyes, as though he alone had receiued the power of binding and looing: whereas both he being one faid that one for all, and he receiued the other with all, as bearing the person of vnitie. Therefore one for all, becaufe there is vnitie in all.

But this, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church, is no where read fpoken to any other. As though Christ fpake there any other thing of Peter, than that which Paul and Peter himfelfe fpake th of all Chrifrians. For Paul makesth Christ the chiefe and corner stone, vpon which they are builded together that grow into a holy temple to the Lord. And Peter biddeth vs to be litle stones which being fouend vpon that choien and precious stone, do by this joynt and coupling together with our God, cleane alfo together among our felues. He (fay they) above the ref: becaufe he hath the name peculliarly. Indeed I do willingly grant this honor to Peter, that in the building of the Church he be placed among the first, or (if they will have this alfo) the first of all the faithful: but I will not suffer them to gather therupon, that he should have a Supremacie over the ref. For what manner of gathering is this? He exellceth other in ferventneffe of zeal in learning, and courage: therefore he hath power over them. As though we might not with better colour gather, that

Andrew is in degree before Peter, becaufe he went before him in time, and brought him to Chrifte. But I passe over this. Let Peter truely have the first place, yet there is great difference between the honour of degree and power. We see that the Apostles commonly commonly granted this to Peter, that he should speak in assemblies, and after a certain manner go before them with propounding, exhorting, and admonishing; but of his power we read nothing at all.

6 Howbeit we be not yet come to dispute of that point only at this present I would proove, that they do so fondly reason, when by the only name of Peter they would build an Empire over the whole Church. For those old folies wherewith they went about to deceive at the beginning, are not worthy to be rehearsed, much less to be confuted, that the Church was builded upon Peter, because it was said upon this rock, &c. But some of the Fathers have fo expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrary, to what purposes is their authority alleaged against God? Yea, why do we strive about the meaning of these words, as though it were darke or doubtfull, when nothing can be more plainly nor more certainly spoken? Peter had confulted in his owne and his brethrens name that Christ is the feme of God. Upon this rocke Christ buildeth his Church: because it is (as Paul faith) the onely foundation, before which there can be laid none other. Neither do I here therefore refuse the authority of the Fathers, because I want their testimonies, if I lifted to alleage them: but (as I have said) I will not with contending about to elec the matter trouble the Readers in vain, specially since this point hath beene long ago diligently enough handled and declared by men of our side.

7 And yet in deed no man can better answer this question, than the Scripture itself, if we compare all the places, where it teacheth what office and power Peter had among the Apostles, how he behaued himselfe, and how he was accepted of them. Runne over all that remaineth written, you Hall finde nothing else, but that hee was one of the twelve, equal with the rest and their fellow, but of their Lord. He doth in deed propound to the councell, if any thing be to be done, and guieth warning what is meane to be done: but therewithall he heareth other, and doth not onlie grant them place to speake their minde, but leaueth the judgement to them: when they had determined, he followed and obeyed. When he writeth to the Paftors, he doth not command them by authoritie, as Superior: but he maketh them his companions, and gently exhaueth them, as equals are wont to do. When he was accused for that he had gone in to the Gentiles, although it were without cause, yea he answered and purged himselfe. When he was commanded by his fellowes, to go with John into Samaria, he refused not. Whereas the Apostles did send him, they did thereby declare that they helde him not for their Superior. Whereas hee obeyed and tooke upon him the Emballage committed to him, hee did thereby confesse that he had a fellowship with them, and not an authoritie ouer them. If none of these things were, yet the onelie Epistle to the Galatians maie easilie take all doubting from vs: where almost in two Chapters together Paul trauellth to proseque nothing else, but that he himselfe was equall to Peter in honour of Apostleship. Then he heareth that he came to Peter, not to professe subjection, but onlie to make their contenct of doctrine approoved by testimonie to all men: and that Peter himselfe required no such thing, but gave him his right hande of fellowship, to worke in common togethger in the Lordes vineyards: and that there was no lesser grace given to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Jews: Finally that when Peter dealt not verie faithfully, hee was corrected by him, and obeyed his reproving. All these things doe make plaine, either that there was an equalitie betweene Paul and Peter, or at least that Peter had no more power over the rest, than they had over him. And (as I have alreadie saide) Paul of purpose labouret about this, that none should preferre before him in the Apostleship either Peter, or John, which were fellowes, not Lords.

8 But, to grant them that which they require concerning Peter, that is, that he was the Prince of the Apostles, and excelled the rest in dignitie: yet there is no cause.
Cap. 6. Of the outward means

cause why they should of a singular example make an univerfal rule, and drawe to perpetuitie that which hath bene once done: Sith there is a farre differing reason. One was cheefe among the Apostles: forsooth, because they were few in number. If one were the cheefe of twelue men, shall it therefore follow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thousand men? It is no maruell that twelue had one among them that should rule them all. For nature beareth this, and the wit of men requireth this, that in every assembly, although they be all equall in power, yet there be one as a gouernour, whome the rest may have regard vnto. There is no court without a Confull: no fession of judges without a Pretor, or Propounder, no companie without a Ruler, no fellowship without a Maister. So should it be no absurditie, if we confessed that the Apostles gave to Peter such a supremacie. But that which is of force among fewe, is not by and by to be drawn to the whole world, to the ruling whereof no one man is sufficient. But (say they) this hath place no lesse in the whole vniverfalitie of nature, than in all the partes, that there be one soueraigne head of all. And hereof (and God will) they fetch a proffee from Cranes and Bees, which alway choose to themselves one guide, not many. I allow in deed examples which they bring forth: but do Bees resort together out of all the world to choose them one king? every feueral king is content with his owne hyue. So among Cranes, euery heard hath their owne king. What else shall they prove hereby, but that euery Church ought to have their owne feueral Bishop appointed them? Then they call vs to ciuel examples. They allege that saying of Homer, It is not good to have many gouernours: and fuch things as in like fene are read in prophan writers to the commendation of Monarchie. The anfweare is easie. For Monarchie is not praised of fIffes in Homer, or of anie other, in this meaning, as though one ought to be Emperor of the whole world: but they meaning, as he calleth it, can abide no companion.

9 But let it be as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole world be holden vnder Monarchy, which yet is a very great absurdity: but let it be fo: yet I will not therefore grant that the same should take place in the government of the Church. For the Church hath Christ her only head, vnder whose dominion we all cleaue together, according to that order and that forme of policie which he hath prescribed. Therefore they do a great wrong to Christ, when by that pretence they will have one man to be ruer of the vniverfal church, because it cannot be without a head. For Christ is the head of whom the whole body coupled and knit together in euery joynyt, wherewith one ministreth to another, according to the working of euery member in the meafeure thereof, maketh increase of the bodie. See you not, how he fetteth all men without exception in the body, and leaueth the honor & name of head to Christ alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certaine meafeure, and a determined and limited function: whereby both the perfection of the grace and the soueraigne power of gouernance may remaine with Christ only? Neither am I ignorant what they are wont to caull, when this is objected against them: they fay that Christ is properly called the only head, because he alone reigneth by his owne authority and in his owne name: but that this nothing withfandeth, but that there may be vnder him another ministeriall head (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this caullation they preuaille nothing, vnlesse they first shew that this ministery was ordained by Christ. For the Apostle teacheth, that the whole ministra tion is dispersed through the members, and that the power floweth from the one heavenly head. Or if they will haue it any plainer spoken, Sith the Scripture teftifieth that Christ is the head, and claimeth that honour to him alone, it ought not to be transferred to any other, but whom Christ himselfe hath made his vicar. But that is not only no where read, but also may be largely confuted by many places.

head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his description we may gather, that it is disagreeing from the institution of Christ. Christ at his ascending tooke from vs the visible presence of himselfe: yet he went vp to fulfill all things. Now therefore the Church hath him yet present, and alway shall haue. When Paul goth about to shew the meane whereby he presenteth himselfe, he calleth vs backe to the ministeries which he vseth. The Lord (faith he) is in vs all, according to the meaure of grace that he hath giuen to every member. Therefore he hath appointed some Apostles, some Pastors, some Evangellifts, other some Teachers, \\n\\nthe framming particular ioyning, there spirittual governement of the head and sueraigne place, should be, that there is not euery one a particular measur. If doth he not say, that he hath set one over all, to be his vicegerent? For the place required that principally, and it could by no means haue bin omitted, if it had bin true. Christ (faith he) is with vs. How? by the ministrery of men, whom he hath appointed to govern the Church. Why nor rather by the ministeriall head, to whom he hath committed his sleede? He named vnitie: but in God, and in the faith of Christ. He assigneth to men nothing but common ministrerie, and to euery one a particular measur. In that commendation of vnitie, after that he had said that there is one body, one spirit, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptisme, why hath he not also immediately added one chiefe bishopp, that may hold the Church together in vnitie? For nothing could have bee more fitly spoken, if it had bee true. Let that place be diligently weighed. It is no doubt but that he meant there altogether to represent the holie and spirittual governement of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. \\nAs for Monarchie among ministers, he not only nameth none, but also sheweth that there is none. It is also no doubt but that he meant to express the manner of combining, whereby by the faithfull cleaque together with Christ their head. There he not onely speaketh of no ministerial head, but appointeth to euery of the members a particular working according to the meaure of grace distributed to euery one. Neither is there any reason why they should suttley dispute of the comparison of the heavenly and earthly Hierarchie. For it is not safe to know beyond meaure of it. And in framing this governement we must follow no other figure, than the Lord himselfe hath painted out in his word.

11 Now although I graunt them another thing, which they shall never win by proofe before sober men, that the supremacie of the Church was so stablished in Peter, that it should alway remaine by perpetuall succeSSION: yet how will they prove, that his seate was so placed at Rome, that whosoeuer is Bishop of that Church, should be set over the whole world? By what right do they binde this dignite to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (say they) liued and died at Rome. What did Christ himselfe? Did not he, while he liued, exercise his Bishoppryke, and in dying fulfill the office of Priesthood, at Hierusalem? The Prince of Pastors, the soueraigne Bishop, the head of the Church, could not purchase honor to the place: and could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not these folles more than childish? Christ gave the honor of supremacie to Peter: Peter liued at Rome, therefore he there placed the sea of supremacie. By this reason the Israelites in old time might haue set the seate of Supremacie in the desert, where Moses the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophets executed his ministrerie and died.

12 Let vs see how trimly they reason. Peter (say they) had the Supremacie among the Apostles: therefore the church where he fesse ought to haue that priulege. But where fesse he first? At Antioch, say they. Therefore the Church of Antioch doth rightly claime to it selfe the Supremacie. They conteffe that it was in old time the firs: but they say, that in removing thence he removed to Rome the honour that he brought with him. For there is an Epistle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the bishoppes of Antioche, where he sayeth thus: Peters fesse was at the beginning with you, which afterward by the Lords commandement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioche, which was once the chiefe, haue giuen place to the fese of Rome:

Bus
But by what Oracle had that good man learned, that the Lord so commanded: For if this cause be to be determined by the lawe, it is necessarie that they should have this privilege to be personall, or reall, or mixt. For it must be one of these three. If they say that it is personall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they say that it is reall, then when it is once given to the place, it is not taken away by reason either of the death or departure of the person. It remaineth therefore that they must say it is mixt: but then that place shall be not simply to be considered, unless the person doe also agree. Let them choose which sooner they will, I will by and by inferre and easily prooue, that Rome can by no meane take the supræmacy upon it selfe.

13 But be it that as (they trislingly say) the supræmacy was remoued from Antioch to Rome: yet why did not Antioch keepe the second place? For if Rome haue therefore the firste place, because Peter fette there to the end of his life: to whom the second place rather be granted, than where he had his firste seat? How came it to passe then, that Alexandria went before Antioch? How agree it, that the Church of one disciple should be above the seate of Peter? If honour be due to euerie Church, according to the worthinesse of the founder, what that we say also of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that seeme to be pillars, James, Peter, and John. If the first place were given to the sea of Rome in the honour of Peter: doe not the seas of Ephesus and Hierusalem, where John and James fette, deserve the second and third place? But among the Patriarches Hierusalem had the last place: Ephesus could not fitte so much as in the uttermost corner. And other Churches were left out both all those that Paul founded, and those that the other Apostles were rulers of. The seate of Mark, which was but one of their disciples, obtained the honour. Therefore they must either confesse that that was a preposterous order, or they must grant vs that this is not a perpetual rule, that there be due to euerie Church the same degree of honour which the founder had.

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters sitting in the Church of Rome, I see not what credite it ought to haue. Truely that which is in Eusebius, that he ruled there five and twenty yeeres, is very easilie confuted. For it is evident by the firste and seconde Chapter to the Galathians, that about twenty yeeres after the death of Christ, he was at Hierusalem, and that then he went Antioch: where how long he was, is vn certaine. Gregorie reckoneth seven yeeres, and Eusebius twenty and five. But from the death of Christ, to the end of Neroes Empire, (in whose time they say that he was slaine) there shall be found but thirtie and seuen yeeres. For the Lord suffered under Tiberius, the eighteenth yeere of his Empire. If you set downe twenty yeeres, during which Paul is witnesse that Peter dwelt at Hierusalem, there will remaine but seuenteen yeeres at the most, which must now bee divided betwene two Bishops. If he taried long at Antioch he could not sit at Rome but a very little while. Which thing wee may yet also more plainly prooue. Paul wrote to the Romane, when he was in his journey going to Hierusalem, where he was taken and from thence brought to Rome. It is not likely that this Epistle was written foure yeeres before that he came to Rome. Therin is yet no mention of Peter, which should not have beene left out, if Peter had ruled that Church. Yea and in the end also, when he rehearsed a great number of the godly, whom he bidde them to be fuldome, where verily he gathered together all those that he knewe, he yet faith utterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it needesfull here to make a long or curious demonstration to men of sound judgement: for the matter it selfe, and the whole argument of the Epistle crieth out, that he should not have overpassed Peter, if he had beene at Rome.

15 Then Paul was brought prifoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that he was received of the brethren, of Peter his faith nothing. He wrote from thence to many Churches: and in some places also he wrote his salutations in the names of certaine: but but he doth not in one word shew that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you shall think it likely, that he could have passed him over with silence, if he had beene present? Yea to the Philippians, where he said that he had none that so faithfully looked unto the worke of the Lord, as Timotheus, he complained that they did all seeke their owne. And to the same Timotheus he maketh a more grieuous complaint, that none was with him at his first defence, but all forsooke him: wherefore was Peter then? For if they say that he was then at Rome, how great a shame doth Paul charge him with, that he was a forfaker of the Gospell? For he speakeoth of the believers: because he addeth, God impute it not vnto them. How long therefore, and in what time did Peter keep that state? But it is a constant opinion of writers, that he governed that Church even to his death. But among the writers themselves it is not certaine who was his successor, because some say Linus, and othersome say Clement. And they tell many fond fables, of the diuersity that had betweene him and Simon the Magician. And Augustine sticketh not to confesse, when he entreateth superstitions, that by reason of an opinion rashly conceiused, there was a custome grown in virc at Rome, that they should not fast that day that Peter got the victorious of Simon the Magician. Finally the doings of that time are so entangled with diversitie of opinions, that we ought not rashly to beleue where we finde any thing written. And yet by reason of this constant of writers, I ordain not against this, that he died there: but yet that he was Bishop there, and specially a long time, I cannot be persuaded, neither do I much passe upon that also: for as much as Paul testifieth that Peters Apostleship did peculiarly belong to the Jews, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that fellowship which they couenant betweene themselfes, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghost may stand in force among vs, we ought to have respect rather to the Apostleship of Paul and Peter. For the holy Ghost do divideth the provinces betweene them that he appointed Peter to the Jews, and Paul to vs. Now therefore let the Romanists go and seeke their supremacie else where than in the word of God, where it is found not to be grounded.

16 Now let vs come to the olde Church, that it may also be made to appeare plainly that our adversaries doe no litle carelessly, and falsly boast of the conquest thereof, than they doe of the witnesse of the word of God. When therefore they bragge of that principle of theirs, that the vnite of the Church cannot otherwise be kept together, but if there be one supreme head in earth, to whom all the members may obey, and that therefore the Lord gave the supremacie to Peter, and from thence forth to the Eves of Rome by right of succession, that the same should remaine in it to the end: they affirm, that this hath beene always obsteu from the beginning. But forasmuch as they wrongfullie wrest many testimonies, I will first say this aforesaid, that I deny not but that the writers doe each where give great honor to the church of Rome, and doe speake reverently of it. Which I thinke to be done specially for three causes. For that same opinion, which I wot not how was grown in force, that it was founded and ordeeind by the ministrerie of Peter, much attailed to procure favoe and estimation vnto it. Therefore in the East parts it was for honors sake called the sea Apostolike. Secondly, when the head of the Empire was there, and that therefore it was likely, that in that place were men more excellent both in learning and wisdom, and skill, and experience of many things, than any where els: there was worthie consideration had thereof, that both the honor of the citie, and also the other more excellent gifts of God should not seeme to be despised. There was beside these also a third thing, that when the Churches of the East, and of Grecia, yea and of Africane, were in tumults among themselfes with disagreement of opinions, the church of Rome was quieter and lesse full of troubles than the rest. So came it to passe, that the godly & holy Bishops, being driven out of their states, did oftentimes fleie thither as into languishing or certaine lauene. For as the Western men are of lesse thaisnesse and...

and swiftnes of wit, than the Asians or Africanes be, so much are they lefte desirous of alterations. This therefore added much authority to the Church of Rome, that in those doubtful times it was not so troubled as the rest, and did hold the doctrine once delivered them, faster than all the rest as we shall by and by better declare. For these three causes (I say) it was had in no small honor, and commended with many notable testimonies of the old writers.

17 But when our adversaries will thereupon gather that it hath a supremacy and suipremacie De tee, "the Bishop of Rome", the Bifhop of Romes, after that he had received many examples of vnite, at the last descendent to the Hierarchie of the Church. When Bifhop of every seuerall Church, ech Archiprife, eche Archdeacon, and all the Ecclesiastical order, doe rest upon their owne rulers. Here a Romaine Priest speaketh, he commendeth vnite in the Ecclesiastical order, why doth he not rehearse that all Churches are knit together with one head as with one bond? Nothing could have more fitly fenced the matter that he had in hand: and it cannot be said that it was for forgetfulness, that he omitted it: for he would have done nothing more willingly if the matter had suffered him. He say therefore without doubt, that that is the true reason of vnite which Cyprian excellently well describeth in these words: The Bishopsrike is one, whereof ech hath a part wholly: & the Church is one, which is with increas of fruitfulness, more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many sun-beames and one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded on a fast holding roote: and like as from one fountain flow many streams, and though the multitude seeme to be diversely spread abroad, with large branches of overflowering plentie, yet the vnite is kept whole in the original: so the Church also being overspread with the light of the Lord, extendeth her beames abroad throughout the whole world, yet is it but one that is ech where pourd forth: and the vnite of the body is not feuered: the spreadeth her branches over the whole world, she sendeth her overflowering streams: yet is there but one head & one beginning, &c. Afterward: The spouse of Christ cannot be an adulteresse: she knowethone only house, she keepeth the holines of one only chamber with chaff shameless. You see how he maketh the vnierfall bishoproke to be Christ's onely, which comprehended the whole Church under him: and therefore all they that execute the office of Bishop under this head, have their parts thereof wholly. Where is the supremacy of the sea of Rome, if the whole bishoproke remaineth with Christ onely, and each bishop hath his part thereof wholly? These things therefore make to this purpose, that the reader may understand by the way, that the old fathers were utterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanistes do take for confessed and vndoubted, concerning the vnite of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the beginning and encrease of the Papacie of Rome, untill it advanced it selfe to this height, whereby both the libertie of the Church hath been oppressed, and all the right government thereof overthrown.

Suntr day aunciente Councils wherein the Bishop of Rome had not the chiefest place.

As concerning the aunciente vnite of the supremacie of the sea of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquitie to stablish it, than the decree of the Nicene Synode, wherein the bishop of Rome both had the first place among the Patriarches given unto him, and is commanded to looke vnto the Churches adiuyning to the citie. When the Council maketh such division betweene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euerie one their bounds: truely, it doth not appoint him the head of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vincentius and Vincentius.
Vincentius in the name of Julius, which then governed the Church of Rome: to them was given the fourth place. I beseech you, if Julius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legates be thrust into the fourth place? Should be Athanasius be chiefe in the Councell, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to be seen? In the Synode at Ephesus it appeareth, that Celestius which was then Bishop of Rome, vned a crooked subtle mane to prouide for the dignite of his chiefe. For when he sent his deputies thither, he committed his feede to Cyrilus of Alexandria, which shoule notwithstanding otherwife have beene the chiefe. To what purpose was that same committing, but that his name might by what mane seuer abide in the first place? For his Legates fate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the rest, and subscribed in their order: in the meane time the Patriarch of Alexandria sioned Celestius name with his owne. What shall I say of the seconde Councell at Ephesus: where when Leo Legates were present, yet Diuscurius Patriarch of Alexandria fate the chiefe as by his owne right? They will take exception that it was no vpright Councell, by which both the holy man Flavianus was condemned, and Eutyches acquited, and his vngodlinell allowed. But when the Synod was gathered, when the Bishops tooke their places in order, verly the Legates of the Bishop of Rome fate there among the rest none otherwise then in a holy and lawfull Councell. Yet they stiuened not for the first place, but yeelded it to another: which they woule neuer haue done, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the Bishops of Rome were neuer ashamed to enter into the greates contentions for their honors: and for this oneely cause oftentimes to vex and trouble the Church with many and hurtfull strifes. But because Leo saw that it should be a too much vreasonable request, if hee shoule seeke to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he surrenede it.

2 Then followed the Councell of Chalcedon, in which by the grant of the Emperour the Legates of the Church of Rome fate in the chiefe place. But Leo himselfe confessteth that this was an extraordinarie priviledge. For when he made petition for it to the Emperor Marcianus, and Pudicilla the Empresse, hee did not affirme that it was due to him, but onely pretended, that the Eastern Bishops, which fate as chiefe in the councell at Ephesus, troubled all things and illabused their power. Whereas therefore it was needfull to have a graine gouernour, and it was not likely that they should be meece for it, which had once bin so light and disordered: therefore he praied, that by reason of the default and vnfitnes of other, the office of gouerning might be remoued to him. Truly that which is gotten by singuler priviledge and bende order, is not by common law. Where this onely is pretended, that there needeth some newe gouernour, because the former gouernours had behaued themselfes ill, it is euident that it neither was so before, nor ought to continue so for euer, but is done onely in respect of present danger. The Bishop of Rome therefore had the first place in the Councell at Chalcedon: not becaufe it was due to his sea, but becaufe the Synode was at that time delitute of a graine and fit gouernour, while they that ought to haue bin the chiefe, did through their owne intemperance and corrupt affection, thrust themselfes out of place. And this that I say, Leo successfull did indeed proove. For when he sent his Legates to the fit Synode at Constantinople, which was helden long time after, he brauled not for the first sea, but easily suffred Meenius the patriarch of Constantinople to fit as chiefe. So in the councell at Carthage, at which Augustine was presernt, we see that not the legates of the sea of Rome, but Aurelius Archibishop of that place fit as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the autaritie of the Bishop of Rome. Yea there was also a generall councell helden in Italye it selfe, at which the Bishop of Rome was not presernt. Ambrose was chiefe there, which was in verie greaat autaritie with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the Bishop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to passe by the dignite of Ambrose, that the sea of Millain was more noble then the sea of Rome.
Cap. 7.

Of the outward means.

3. As concerning the title of supremacie, and other titles of pride, wherupon it now marvellously boasteth itself, it is not hard to judge, when and in what sort they crept in, Cyprian oftentimes maketh mention of Cornelius. He seteth him out with no other name, but by the name of brother, or fellow bishop, or fellow in office. But when he writeth to Stephen the successor of Cornelius, he doth not only make him equal with himself & the rest, but also speaketh more hardly to him, charging him somet ime with arroganice & more with ignorance. Since Cyprian wee haue with all the church of Africa judged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbidd that any should be called Prince of prieffes, or chiefe Bishop, but onely bishop of the chiefe see. But if a man turne his the antienter monuments, he shall finde that the Bishop of Rome at that time was content with the common name of brother. Certainly so long as the face of the Church continued true & pure, all these names of pride, where with since that time the see of Rome hath begun to waxe outrageous, were vterly vnheard of: it was not known, what was the higheft bishop and the onely head of the church in earth. But if the bishop of Rome had bene fo bolde as to haue taken such a thing vpon him, there were floue & wise men that would haue by and by represed his folly. Hierome forasmuch as he was a prieft at Rome, was not ill willing to let ou out the dignitie of his owne Church, so much as the matter and state of his time suffred: yet we fe how he also brought it down into fellowship with the rest. If authority (faith he)be sought for, the world is greater than a city. Why doft thou allure to me the custome of one citie? Why doft thou defende sinaines of number, out of which hath grown pride, against the lawes of the Church? Wherefore there is a bishop, either at Rome, or at Augubus, or at Constantinople, or at Reginum, he is of the same merite and of the same Priesthood. The power of riches or bafenes of pouer tie maketh not a bishop higher or lower.

4. About the title of vnierfall Bishops the contention first began in the time of Gregorie, which was occasioned by the ambition of John Bishop of Constantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) would have made himself vnierfall Bishop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alllege that the right is taken away which was due to himself: but stoutly crieth out against it, that it is a prophane name, yeal of sacrilege, yeal the forewarner of Antichrist. The whole church (faith he) falleth downe from her state, if he fall which is called vnierfall. In another place: It is very sorrowfull, to suffer patiently, that our brother and fellow Bishop, despising all other, should onely be named Bishop. But in this his pride what els is betokened but the times of Antichrist neere at hand? because verily he followeth him, that des pirizing the fellowship of Angels, went about to clime vp to the top of singularity. In another place he writeth to Eulobus of Alexandria, and Anastasius of Antioche. None of my predecessors at any time would vie that prophane worde: for if one be called vnierfall Patriarch, the name of patriarches is abated fro all the rest. But far may this be from a christian minde, that any shoulde have a will to take that vpon him, whereby he may in any part, bee it neuer so little, diminish the honour of his brethren. To content in this wicked worde is nothing elbe but to leele the faith. It is one thing (faith he) that we owe to the preferring of the vnite of faith, and another thing that we owe to the keeping downe of pride. But I say it boldly, because who soever calleth himselfe or desireth to be called vnierfall Bishop, he doth in his proude advancing run before Antichrist, because he doth with seeing himselfe proud preferre himselfe above the rest. Againe to Anastasius bishop of Alexandria: I haue saide that he cannot haue peace with vs, vnlesse he amended the advancing of the superfition & proude word, which the first apostata had inuented. And (to speake nothing of the wrong done to your honour) if one be called vnierfall Bishop, the vnierfall Church falleth when that vnierfall one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honour was offered to Leo in the Synode at Chalcedon, it hath no colour of truth. For neither is there any such thing read in the acts of that Synode. And Leo himself, which with many Epistles impugneth the decree there made in honour of the sea of Constantinople, without doubt would not have pass'd over this argument, which had beene most to bee liked of all other, if it had beene true, that hee refuseth that which was given him: and being a man otherwise too much defirous of honour, he would not have omitted that which made for his praise. Therefore Gregorie was deceived in this, that he thought that that title was offered to the sea of Rome by the Synode of Chaledon: to speake nothing, how fond it is, that he both affirminth it to have proceeded from the holy Synode, and also at the same time called it wicked, prophane, abominable, proud, and full of sacrilege, yea desnised by the duell, and publish'd by the crier of Antichrift. And yet he addeth that his predecessor refuseth it, least all Priests should be deprived of their due honor, when any thing were privately gven to one. In another place: no man at any time hath wilfully to be called by that word. No man hath taken to himselfe that presumptuous name: least if he should in the degree of bishoipe take to himself a glorie of singularime, he should seeme to have denied the same to all his brethren.

5 Now I come to the jurisdiction, which the Bishop of Rome affirmeth that he hath over all Churches. I knowe howe great contentions have beeene in old time about this matter: For there hath beeene no time wherein the sea of Rome hath not countenanced to get an empire over other Churches. And in this place it shall not be out of season, to search by what means it grew then by little and little to some power. I do not yet speake of that infinite empire, which it hath not so long agoe taken by force to it selfe: for we will deare that to a place convenient. But here it is good to shew briefly, how in old time and by what means it hath advanced it selfe, to take to it selfe any power over other Churches. When the Churches of the East were diuided and troubled with the factions of the Ariani under the Emperours Constatine and Constant the sonnes of Constatine the Great; and Athanasius the chief defender there of the true faith was driven out of his see: such calamity compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authoritie of the sea of Rome, he might both after a sort repreffe the rage of his enemies, and confirme the godly that were in diffresse. He was honourably received of Julius then Bishop, and obtained that the Bishops of the West took upon them the defence of his cause. Therefore when the godly stood in great neede of foreign aide, and saw that there was very good succour for them in the church of Rome, they willingly came unto it the most authoritie that they could. But all that was nothing else, but that the communion thereof should be highly esteemed and should be counted a great shame to be excommunicate of it. Afterwarcde cuill and wicked men also added much vnto it. For to escape lawfull judgements, they fled to this sanctuarie. Therefore if any Priest were condemned by his Bishop, or any Bishop by the Synode of his province, they by and by appealed to Rome. And the Bishops of Rome received such appellations more greedily than was meete: because it seemed to be a forme of extraordinary power, lo to entermeddle with matters far and wide about them. So when Eutyches was condemned by Flaniarius Bishop of Constantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wrong done vnto him. Leo withoulte delay, no leffe vnerruely than suddenly, toke in hand the defence of an cuill cause, he greuously inveighed against Flaniarius, as though he had, without hearing the cause, condemned an innocent: and by this his ambition he caulesd that the vngodlines of Eutyches was for a certaine space of time strengthened. In Africa it is ceydent that this oftentimes chanced. For to soone as any lowd men had taken a foyle in ordinarie judgement, he by and by flow to Rome, and charged his countrimsen with many flandersous reports: and the see of Rome was alway ready to entermeddle. Which lowdnesse compell'd the Bishops of Africa to make a lawe, that none vnder paine of excommunication should appeale beyond the sea.

In consecrating of Bishops, the power of the Bishop of Rome to other but the same which in other places others had. Lib. 2. Epift. 68, 8, 79.

6 But whatsoever it were, let vs see what authority or power the see of Rome then had. Ecclesiasticall power is contained in these lower pointes, ordering of Bishops, summoning of Councels, hearing of appeals or jurisdiction, chaftizing, admonitions or censure. All the olde Synodes commanad Bishops to be consecrate by their owne Metropolitans: and they never bid the Bishop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by little and little it grew in vfe, that all the Bishops of Itaie came to Rome to fetch their consecration, except the Metropolitans, which suffered not themselues to be brought into such bondage: but when any Metropolitans was to be consecrate, the Bishop of Rome sent thither one of his Priests, which should only be present, but not president. Of which thing there is an example in Gregory: at the consecration of Constantine Bishop of Miliane after the death of Laurence. Howbeit I do not thinke that that was a very ancient institution: but when at the beginning for honor and good will sake they sent one to another their Legates, to be witnesses of the consecration, and to testifie their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntarie, began to be holden for necessarie. Howsoever it be, it is evident that in olde time the Bishop of Rome had not the power of consecrating, but in the province of his owne Patriarchie, that is to say, in the Churches adjoyning to the citie, as the canon of the Nicene Synode faith. To the Consecration was annexed the fending of a Synodical Epistle, in which he was nothing aboute the rest. For the Patriarches were woont immediately after their consecration, by solemn writing to declare their faith, whereby they professed that they subscribed to the holy and catholike Councels. So rendring an account of their faith, they did approoue themselues one to another. If the Bishop of Rome had receiued of other, and not himselfe given this confession, he had thereby been acknowledged superiour, but when he was no leffe bound to give it, than to require it of other, and to be subject to the common law, truely that was a token of fellowship, nor of dominion. Of this thing there is an example in Gregories Epistle to Anastasius and to Cyriacus of Constantinopole, and in other places to all the Patriarches together.

7 Then follow admonitions or censure: which as in olde time the Bishops of Rome vsed toward other, so they did againe suffer them of other. Irenæus, greeuously reproaued Victor, because he vndiscreetly for a thing of no value, troubled the church with a pernicious diffention. Victor obeyed, and spurned not against it. Such a libertie was then in vre among the holy Bishops, that they vshed a brotherly authoritie toward the Bishop of Rome, in admonishing and chaftizing him if he at any time offended. He againe, when occasion required did admonish other of their dutie: and if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cyprian, when he exhorteth Stephen to admonish the Bishops of France, fetcheth not his argument from the greater power, but from the common right that Priests haue among themselues. I beseech you, if Stephen had then beene ruler over France, would not Cyprian hate fadice: Restraine them, because they bee thine? but he feared far otherwise. This (faith he) the brotherly fellowship, wherewith we be bound one to another requireth that we should admonish one another. And we see also with how great sharpnesse of words he being otherwise a man of a milde nature inueth against Stephen himselfe, when he thinketh him to be too infolent. Therefore in this behalfe also there appeareth not yet, that the Bishop of Rome had any jurisdiction over them that were not of his owne province.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of eterie Metropolitane, at certaine appointed times to assemble a provincial Synode. There the Bishop of Rome had no authoritie. But a generall Councell the Emperor onely might summon. For if any of the Bishops had attempted it, not onely that they were out of his province, would not have obeyed his calling, but also there would by and by haue rifen an ymprore. Therefore the Emperor indifferently warned them all to be present. Socrates indeed reporteth, that Julius did expostulate with the Bishops of the East, because
9. Now remaineth the fourth kind of power, which standeth in appeals. It is evident that he hath the chief power, to whose judgment seate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appealed to the Bishop of Rome, and he himself went about to draw the hearing of causes to himself: but he was always laughed to scorn, when he passed his own bounds. I will speak nothing of the East and of Grecia: but it is certain that the Bishops of France stoutly withheld him, when he seemed to take to himself an empire over them. In Affricans there was long debate about that matter. For whereas at the Milevitas Councell, at which Augustine was present, they were excommunicate that appealed beyond the sea, the Bishop of Rome travailed to bring to passe, that that decree might be amended. He sent his legates to shew that that privilege was given to him by the Nicean Councell. The Legates brought forth the acts of the Nicean Councell, which they had fetched out of the storehouse of their own Church. The Affricans withheld it, and denied that the bishops of Rome ought to be credited in their own cause: and said that therefore they would send to Constantinople, and into other cities of Grecia, where copies were to be had that were lese sulpicious. It was found, that therein was no such thing written, as the Romanes had pretended. So was that decree confirmed, which took the chief hearing of causes from the Bishop of Rome: In which doing the lewd shamelesnes of the Bishop of Rome himself appealed. For when he guiltily did thrust in the Synode at Sardos in stead of the Nicean Synode, he was shamefully taken in a manifest falsehood. But yet greater and more shameles was their wickednes, that added a forged Epistle to the Councell, wherein I wrote not what bishop of Carthage, condemning the arrogance of Aurelius his predecessor, for that he was so bold to withdraw himselfe from the obedience of the sea Apostolike, and yielding himselfe and his Church, humbly craueth pardon. These be the goodly monuments of antiquity, whereupon the majesty of the sea of Rome is founded, while they do childishly lie, vnder the pretence of antiquity, that very blinde men may finde it out by groping. Aurelius (faith he) puffed vp with diuelish boldnes and stubbornnes, rebelled against Christ, and Saint Peter, and therefore to be condemned with curse. What said Augustine? But what said so many fathers that were present at the Milevitas Councell? But what neede is it to spende many words in confuting that foolish writing, which the Romanistes themselfes, if they have any face left, cannot looke upon without great shame? So Gratian, I cannot tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearsed that decree that they should be excommunicate that appeale beyond the sea, addeth an exception: V substitute peraduenture they appeale to the sea of Rome. What may a man doe to these beasts, which are so void of common reason, that they except that onely thing out of the lawe, for whose cause euerie man feeth that the lawe was made? For the counsell when it condemneth appeale beyond the sea, forbiddeth onely this, that none shoulde appeale to Rome. Here the good expostor excepteth Rome out of the common lawe.

10. But (to determine this question at once) one historick shall make plaine what maner of jurisdicution the bishop of Rome had in old time. Donatone of the black-house had accused Cæcilian bishop of Carthage. The man accused was condemned, his cause not the Bishop of Rome mishked and withstood for overreaching his bounds and receivings appeals which should not by order have beene brought vs to him.
not heard. For when he knew that the bishops had conspired against him, he would not appear. Then the matter came to the Emperor Constantine. He for as much as he wished to have the matter ended by ecclesiastical judgement, committed the hearing of it to Mecelades bishop of Rome. To whom he adjoined fellow commissioners, many bishops of Italy, France, and Spain. If that belonged to the ordinary jurisdiction of the see of Rome, to hear an appeal in an Ecclesiastical cause: why doth he suffer other to be joined with him at the will of the Emperor? Yea why did he himself take the judgement upon him rather by the Emperor's commandment, than by his own office? But let vs hear what hapned afterward. There Cclician got the victorie. Donat of the blacke houses was condemned for schaundr: he appealled: Constantine committed the judgement of the appeale to the bishop of Orleance. He fate as judge, to pronounce what he thought, after the bishop of Rome. If the see of Rome hath the chiefes power without apppellation: why doth Mecelades suffer himselfe to receive fo great a shame, that the bishop of Orleance should be preferred above him? And what Emperor doth this? even Constantine of whom they boast that he employed not only all his endeavour, but in a manner all the riches of the Empire to increafe the dignity of their see. We see therefore now, how far the bishop of Rome was at that time by all means from that supreme dominion, which he affiimeth to be given vnto him by Christ over all the Churches, and which he lyingly feith that he hath in all ages possesed by the consent of the whole world.

11 I know how many epiftles there be, how many writings and decrees, where in the bishops doe giue much, and boldly chalenge much vnto it. But this also all men that have a very little wit and learning do know, that the most part of those are vnsauiorius, that by the first taste of them a man may loone finde out of what shoppe they came. For what man of sound wit and sober, wil think that that goodly interpretation is Anaelus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anaelus: that is, that Cephas is a head? The Romanifites do at this day abuse for defence of their see, many such trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without judgement: and yet still in so great light they will sell such smokes, wherewith in old time they were wont to mocke out the ignorant in darkenesse. But I will not bellow much Labour in confuting those things, which do openly confute themselves by reason of their vnsauiorius folly. I grant that there remaine also true epiftles of the old Bishops, wherein they set forth the honour of their see with glorious titles, of which forre are some epiftles of Leo. For that man as he was learned and eloquent, so was he also above measure desirous of glory and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleued his testimonie when he so advanced himselfe, that indeed is it that is in controverse. But it appeareth that many offended with his ambition, did also with that his greedy desire. Sometimes he appointed in his seced the bishop of Thessalonica through out Grecia & other countries adjoyning; sometim he appointed the bishop of Orleance, or some other throughout France. So he appointed Hormidas bishop of Hispalis to be his vicar in Spain: but every where he excepted, that he giueth out such appoinments upon this condition, that the Metropolitananes may have their ancient privileges remaining safe and whole. But Leo himselfe declareth, that this is one of their privileges, that if any doubt happen about any matter, the Metropolitan should first be asked his aduise. Therefore those appointments of vicars in his seced were upon this condition, that neither any bishop should be letted in his jurisdiction, nor any Metropolitan in being judge of Appeales, nor any provincial Council in ordering of their Churches. What was this else but to attaine from all jurisdiction; but to intermeddle to the appeasing of discordes, onely so far as the Law and nature of the communion of the Church suffeth.

12 In Gregories time, that ancient order was already much changed. For when the Empire was shaken, and treme in pieces, when France and Spain were affflieted with with many overthrowes receiv'd, Slavonia wast'd, Italy vexed, and Affrica in a manner destroyed with continual calamities, that in so great a shaking of civil affairs, at least the integrat of Faith might remaine, or yet not vtilly perish, all the Bishops from eck part did the rather joyn themselves to the Bishop of Rome. Theyere it came to pazzle, that not onely the dignitie, but also the power of that Sea greatly increased.

Howbeit I doe not so much pazzle by what means it was brought about. Truely it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from being an unbridled dominion, that one man might beare rule over other after his owne will. But the Sea of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie subdue and represse the lewde and obstinate that could not by the other Bishops be kept within their ductie. For Gregory doth oftentimes diligently testifie this, that he doth no leffe faithfully preferue to other men their righthes, then hee requereth his owne of them. Neither doe I (faith he) pricked on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I desire in all things to honor my brethren.

There is no saying in his writings wherein he doth more proudly boast of the large-tnes of his Supremacie, than this: I know not what Bishop is not subject to the Sea Apostolique when he is found in fault. But he by and by adioyneth. Where fault requreth, not all according to the order of humilitie are equal. He giueth to himselfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all doe their duties, he maketh himselfe equal with the rest. But he himselfe giueth himselfe this power: and they assent to it that would: and other that liked it not, might freely gainsay it, which it is well knowne that the most part of them did. Befide that he speaketh there of the Primate of Constantinople: which when he was condemned by the principall Synode, refuseth the whole judgement. His fellow Bishops informed the Emperor of this stubbornes of him. The Emperor willed Gregorie to be Judge of the case. We see therefore that he both attempteth nothing, whereby he may breake the ordinarie iurisdiction, and the same thing that he doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the Commandement of the Emperor.

13 This therefore was then all the power of the Bishop of Rome, to set himselfe against obstinate and untamed heads, when there needed any extraordinarie remedie: and that to helpe and not to hinder other Bishops. Therefore he taketh no more to himselfe over all other, than in another place he granteth to all other over himselfe, when he confesseth that he is readie to be corrected of all, to be amended of all.
So in another place he doth in deede command the Bishop of Aquileia to come to Rome, to plead his cause in a controversie of Faith that was riven betwene him and other: but he doth not command him of his owne power, but because the Emperor had so commanded. Neither doth he giue warning that he alone shall be Judge, but promiseth that hee will alfoeble a Synode by whom the whole matter may be judged. But although there was yet such moderation, that the power of the Sea of Rome had her certaine boundes, which it might not passe, and the Bishop of Rome himselfe was no more aboue than vnder other: yet it appeareth how much Gregorie disliked such statue. For he now and then complaineth, that vnder color of Bishoprike he was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had serued them while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppressed with tumult of worldly affairs. In another place: so great burdens (faith he) of busineses doe hold me downe, that my minde can nothing at all be raised vp to things above. I am shaken with many waves of causes: and after those leisures of rest I am tossed with tempestes of troubledsome life, so that I may righthe say, I am come into the depth of the sea, and the tempest hath drowned me. Hereby gather, what he would haue said, if he had happened to be in these times. Although he fulfilled not the office of a Pastor, yet he was doing it. He abstained from the government of the ciuall Empire, & confessed himselfe to be subject to the Emperor as other were. He did not thrust himselfe into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by neceffitie. And yet he thinketh himselfe to be in a maze, because he cannot apply himselfe altogether onely to the office of a Bishop.

Rt 2 were.

14 At that time the Bishop of Constantinople struied with the Bishop of Rome for the Supremacie, as it is alreadie said. For after that the fate of the Empire was stableflied at Constantinople, the maiestie of the Empire seemed to require that that Church alfo should have the fecond place of honour after the Church of Rome. And truely at the beginning, nothing more unaied to caufe the Supremacie to be given to Rome, but becaufe the head of the Empire was there at thattime. There is in Gratian a writing vnder the name of Pope Lucius, where he faith, that cities were no otherwise divided, where Metropolitanales & Primates ought to fin, than by the reaion of the civil government that was before. There is alfo another vnder the name of Pope Clement, where he faith, the Patriarches were ordained in those cities that had had the chiefie Flamines in them. Which, although it be faltie, yet is taken out of a truth. For it is certain, that to the end there should be made as little change as might be, the provinces were diuided according to the state of things that then were: and that Primates and Metropolitanales were fet in those cities that excelled the other in honors and power. Therefore in the Council at Taurinum it was decreed, that those Cities which in the civil government were the chiefie cities of every province, should be the chiefie seats of Bishops. And if it happened the honor of the civil government to be remoued from one city to another, that then the right of the Metropolitan citie should therewithall be remoued thither. But Innocentius Bishop of Rome, when he saw the ancient dignitie of his citie to grow in decay, after that the fate of the Empire was remoued to Constantinople, fearing the abatement of his ftead, made a contrarie law: wherein he denieth it to be neceffarie that the Ecclesiasticall mother cities should be changed as the Imperiall mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synode ought of right to be preferred above one mans sentence. Also we ought to suspect Innocentius himselfe in his owne cause. Howforuer it be, yet by his owne prouifio he sheweth, that from the beginning it was so ordered, that the Metropolitan citie should be disposed according to the outward order of the Empire.

15 According to this auncient ordinance, it was decreed in the first councell at Constantinople, that the Bishop of the citie should have the privileges of honor next after the Bishop of Rome, because it was a new Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalecon, Leo stoutly cryed out against it. And he not onely gave himselfe leave to efchee as nothing that which fexe hundred Bishops or moe had decreed: but also bitterly taunted them, for that they took from other sees that honour which they were fo bolde to gue to the Church of Constantinople. I bechee you, what other thing could move a man to trouble the worlde for fo small a matter, but mere ambition? He faith that that ought to bee inuoable, which the Nicene Synode hath once decreed. As though forsooth the Christian faith were endangerd, if one Church be preferred before an other: or as though Patriarchies were there diuided to any other ende, but for policies. But we know that po licie receiueh, yearequithh divers chaunges, according to the diuerfitie of times. Therefore it is fonde that Leo pretendeth, that the honour, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synode was given to the fia of Alexandria, ought not to be giuen to the fia of Constantinople. For common reafon tell eth this, that it was such a decree, as might be taken away according to the respect of times. Yea none of the Bishops of the Eaft withfloodo it, whom that thing most of all concerned. Truly Proterius was present, whom they had made Bishop of Alexandria in the place of Dioscorus. There were present other Patriarches, whose honor was diminished. It was their part to withfand it, not Leo which remained safe in his owne place. But when all they hold their peace, yea affent vnto it, and onely the Bishop of Rome resifteth; refillet: it is ease to judge, what moveth him: that is, he forefeaw that which not long after happened, that it would come to passe, that, the glory of old Rome decaying, Constantinople not contented with the second place, would strue with Rome for the supremacie. And yet with his crying out he did no so much preuaile, but that the decree of the Councell was confirmed. Therefore his successors, when they saw themselves overcome, quietly gave over that stiffeffe: for they suffered that he should be accounted the second Patriarch.

16 But within a little after, John which in Gregories time ruled the Church of Constantinople, brake forth so far that he called himselfe the vnuersall Patriarch. Here Gregorie left he should in a very good caufe faile to defend his owne sea, did constantly set himcife against him. And truely both the pride and madnesse of John was intollerable, which desired to make the bounds of his Bishopricke equall with the boundes of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himselfe, that which he deneth to an other: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abomimations, who so ever take it uppon him. Yea and also in one place he is angrie with Eulalia Bifhop of Alexandria, which had honored him with such a title. Behold (faith he) in the preface of the Epiftle which he directed to my felfe that haue forbidden it, ye haue care to imprin the words of proude calling, in naming me vnuersall Pope, which, I pray that your holinesse will no more doe, because that is withdrawn from you, which is gien to another more than reason requireth. I count it no honour, wherein I see the honor of my brethren to be diminishe. For my honour is the honor of the vnuersall Church, and the sound strengthe of my brethren. But if your holines call me the vnuersall Pope, it denieth it felle to be that which it confeseth me to be wholely. Truely Gregorie tooode in a good and honest caufe. But John holpen by the fauon of Maurice the Emperor, could never be remoued from his purpose. Cyriacus also his successor never suffered himselfe to be intreated in that behalfe.

17 At the last Phocas, which when Maurice was slaine, was set in his place (I wore not for what cause being more friendly to the Romances, but because he was there crowned without strife) granted to Boniface the third that which Gregorie never required, that Rome should be the head of all Churches. After this manner was the contouersie ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperour, could not so much haue profited the sea of Rome, vnlesse other things also had afterward happened. For Grecia and all Asia were within a little after cut off from the communion of Rome, France so much reverence him, that it obeyed no farther than it lusted. But it was then first brought into bondage when Pipin vfurped the kingdome. For when Zacharie Bifhop of Rome had beene his helper to the breach of his Faith, and to robbery, that threouth the lawfull King, he might violently enter upon the kingdome as laid open for a pray: he receaved this reward that the sea of Rome should have jurisdiction over the Churches of France: As robbers are wont in parting to divide the common spoile: so these good men ordered the matter betwene them, that Pipin should haue the earthly and ciuill dominion, spoiling the true king: and Zacharie should be made head of all Bishops and haue the spirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake: (as it is wont to be in newe things) was afterward confirmed by the autioritie of Charles, in manner for a like caufe. For he was also indebted to the Bifhop of Rome, for that by his endeavour he had attened to the honor of the Empire. But although it be credible, that Churches ech where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certaine that the olde forme of the Church was then first utterly defaced in France and Germanie. There remaine yet in the records of the Court of Paris breife notes of these times, which, where they intreate of the matters of the Church, make mention of the covenante both of Pipin and of Charles with the Bifhop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then was an alteration made of the old state.
Cap. 7. Of the outward means

18 Since that time, when things did each where daily fall from worst to worst, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the slothfulness of the bishops. For when one man took all things upon him, and without measure proceeded more and more to advance himselfe against law and right: the bishops did not with such scale as they ought, endeavours themselves to restrain his lust, and though they wanted not courage, yet they were defitute of true learning and knowledge: so that they were nothing fit to attempt so great a matter. Therefore we see what and how Monsterous an unholy defiling of all holy things, and a scattering abroad of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernardes time. He complained that there rests by heaps to Rome out of all the world, ambitious men, couetous, Simonians, robbers of God, keepers of concubines, commiters of incest, and all such monsters, to obtaine or restrain ecclesiasticall honours by the Apostolike authorities: and that fraud and undermining, and violence were grown in force. He faith that that maner of judging which then was viled, was abominable, and unseemly, not onely for the Church, but also for a judiciall court. He crieth out that the Church is full of ambitious men: and that there is none that more dreadeth to commit mifchieuous acts, then robbers do in their case, when they divide the spoiles of waifaring men. Few (faith he) do looke into the mouth of the Lawgiver, but vnto his hands. But not without cause. For those hands do all the Popes businesse. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the spoiles of Churches, that say to thee, Oh well done, well done! The life of the poore is sown in the freest of the rich: silver glistereth in the mine: men run to it from all places: not the poore, but the stranger taketh it vp, or he peraduenture that runneth fastest before. But this maner, or rather this deathly, came not of them, I would to God it might ende in thee. Among these things theu a Pastor goeth forward compassed with much and precious array. If I durst say it, these are rather the Pasteors of dutes, than of sheepe. Forsooth Peter did thus, Paul played thus. Thy court is more accustomed to receive men good than to make them good. For the ill do not there profit, but the good do decay. Now as for the abuses of appeals that he rehearseth, no godly man can read them without great horror. At the last he thus concludes of that unbridled gredinesse of the sea of Rome in the usurping of jurisdiction: I speake the murmure and common complaint of the Churches. They crie out that they be mangled and dismembered. There are either none or few that do not either bewaile or feare this plague. Askst thou what plague? The Abbots are plucked from the bishops, the bishops from the Archbishops, &c. It is marvellous if this may be excused. In so doing ye procure that ye have fulnesse of power, but not of righteousness. Ye do this, because ye can doe it: but whether ye also ought to doe it, is a question. Ye are set to preferre, not to envy to every man his honour and his owne degree. These fewe things of many I listed to rehearse, partly that the readers may see, how fore the Church was then decayed, and partly that they may know in how great sorrow and mourning this calamitie held all the godly.

19 But now, albeit that we graunt to the Bishop of Rome at this day that preeminence and largenesse of jurisdiction, which that sea had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregorie: what is that to the present state of the Papacie? I do not yet speake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuill power thereof, which we will afterwaide consider in place fit for it: but the very spiritual government that they boast of, what hath it like to the state of those times? For they define the Pope none otherwise than the Supreme head of the Church in earth, and the vnutterfull Bishoppe of the whole world. And the Bishops themselves, when they speake of their owne authority, doe with great stoutnesse of countenance, pronounce that to them belongeth the power to command, and other are bound to the necessitie to obey, that so all their decrees are to be holden as confirmed with the divine.

divine voice of Peter, that the provincial Synodes are without force, because they want the presence of the Pope: that they may or clerks of any Church that they will; and may call them to their sea that have been ordered else where. Innumerable of that are in Gratian packe, which I do not now rehearse, lest I should bee too tedious to the Readers. But this is the summe of them, that only the Bishop of Rome hath the supreme hearing and determining of all ecclesiastical causes, whether it bee in judging and defining of doctrines, or in making of laws, or in estabishing of discipline, or in executing of judgements: It were also long and superfluous to rehearse the privileges that they take to themselves in resurrections, as they call them. But (which is most intollerable of all other) they leave no judgement in earth to restrain and bridge their outrageous lust, if they abuse so immeasurable power. It is lawfull for no man (say they) to revoke the judgement of that sea, because of the Supremacie of the Church of Rome. Againe, The judge shall be judged neither by the Emperor, nor by kings, nor by all the clergy, nor of the people. That is indeed too imperiously done that one man maketh himselfe judge of all men, and suffereth himselfe to obey the judgement of no man. But what if he vse tyrannie ouer the people of God? If he scatter abroad and waste the kingdom of Christ? If he trouble the whole Church? If he turn the office of Pastor into robberie? Yea though hee be newer so mischievous, hee saith that he is not bound to yeeld account. For these be the sayings of the Bishops: Gods will was to determine the causes of other men by men, but hee hath without question referred the bishop of this sea to his owne judgement. Again, The doings of subjicets are judged of by others of God only.

20 And that such decrees might have the more weight, they have falsely thrust in the names of the old bishops, as though things had beene so ordeined from the beginning; whereas it is most certaine, that it is newe and lately forged whatsoever the bishop of Rome giveth himselfe more then wee have rehearsed to be given him by the ancient Councils. Yea, they are come to so great shamelesnesse, that they have set forth a writing under the name of Anaclistus, Patriarch of Constantiopol, wherein he taketheth that it was decreed by the old rules, that nothing should be done euin in the furthest province, that were not first moued to the sea of Rome. Beside this, that it is certaine that is most vaine, what man shall thinke it likely, that such a commendation of the sea of Rome proceeded from the aduersarie and enuyer of honour and dignitie thereof? But verily he behoued that these Antichristes should be carried on to so great madness and blindnes, that their lewdnes might be plaine for all men to see, at least so many as wil open their eies. But the decreetall epistles heaped together by Gregory the ninth, against the Clemetines, & Extravagants of Martin, do yet more openly and with fuller mouth euie where breath forth their outrageous fiercenes, and as it were the tyrannie of barbarous kings. But these be the oracles, by which the Romanists will have their papacie to be weyed. Hereupon arose those notable principles, which at this day haue euery where in the papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope cannot erre: that the Pope is above the Councils: that the Pope is the supreme head of all bishops, and the supreme head of the Church in earth: I passe over the much aburder follies, which the foolish Canonists babble in their schooles, to which yet the Romish diuines do not only assent, but do also clap their hands at them, to flatter their idol.

21 I will not deal with them by extremtie of right. Some other man woulde against this their so great insolencie let the saying of Gyprian, Which hate vse among the bishops, at whose Counsell he was chief: None of vs calleth himselfe Bishop of Bishops, or with tyrannous fear compelleth his fellow bishops to necessitie to obey. Hee woulde obiect that, which a little after was decreed at Carthage. That none shoule bee called Prince, Priest, or chief Bishop. Hee woulde gather manie testimonies out of Histories, Canons out of Synodes, and many sentences out of the Decret 17, qve de

the bookes of olde writers, by which the bishop of Rome should be brought downe into the fellowship of rest. But I passe over all these, lest I should seeme too preciely to presse them. But let the best patrones of the sea of Rome answer me, with what face they dare defend the title of vnuerfall Bishop, which they see so oft to be condemned with curse by Gregorie. If Gregories testimonie ought to be of force, they doe thereby declare that Antichrist is there bishop, because they make him vnuerfall. The name also of head was no more valid. For thus he sayeth in one place: Peter is the chief member in the bodie, John, Andrew, and James the heads of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Church vnnder one head: yea the hole ones before the lawe, the hole ones vnnder the lawe, and the hole ones vnnder grace, are set among members, altogether making vp the bodie of the Lord: and no man ever willed to have himselfe called vnuerfall. But whereas the Bishop of Rome taketh upon himselfe the power of commanudding, that thing finally agreeeth with that which Gregorie saith in another place. For whereas Eulobus bishop of Alexandria, had saide that he was commanuued by him, he answered in this wise, I pray ye, take away this word of commanudding from my hearing. For I know what I am, and what ye be. In place, ye he to me brethren: in manners ye be to me fathers. Therefore I commanued not, but I cared to tell you those things that I thought profitable. Whereas he so extended his jurisdiction without end, he doeth therein great and hainous wrong, not onely to the other bishops, but also to all particular Churches; which he so search and plucketh in pieces, that he may build his stae of their ruines. But whereas he exempteth himselfe from all judgements, and will so rage after the manner of tyrants, that he accounteth his owne onely lust for lawe, that verily is so hainous, and so farre from ecclesiasticall order, that it may in no wise be borne: for it utterly abhorret not onely from all feeling of godlineffe, but also from all humannitie.

22 But that I be not compelled to goe through and examine all things particularly, I doe againe appeale to them, that will at this day be accompted the best and most faithful patrones of the sea of Rome, whether they be not ashamed to defend the present state of the Papacie; which it is certaine to be an hundred times more corrupt, than it was in the time of Gregorie and Bernard: which state yet did then, so much displeace those holy men. Gregorie, Bernard, where complaineneth, that he is too much diuerly drawn away with foraine businesse: that he is under the colour of bishippicke brought backe to the world: wherein he suffereth so many cares of the world as he neuer remembreth that he sereueth when he was a laie man, that he is presed downe with tumult of worldly affaires, that his minde is nothing raised vp to things aboue, that he is shaken with many waues of causes, and tossed with tempests of trouble-some life: so that he may worthily say, I am come into the depth of the sea. Truly among those earthly businesse, he might yet teach the people with Sermons, privately admonish and correct such as it behooved, order the Church, give counsell to his fellow bishops and exhort them to their dutie: beside these things there remained sometimie to write: and yet he lamenteth his calamitie, that he is drowned in the depepest sea. If the government of that time was a sea: what is to be saide of the papacie at this time? For what likenesse have they together? Here be no preachings, no care of discipline, no zeal to the Churches, no spiritual doing, finally nothing but the world. Yet this maze is prais’d, as though there could nothing be found more orderly and better framed. But what complaints doeth Bernard poure out, what groanes doth he vitter, when he looketh upon the faultes of his age: What then would he do if he beheld this our age of iron, and worse if any be worse than iron? What obstinate wickedneffe is this, not onely stately to defend as holy and digne, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but also to abuse their testimonie to the defence of the papacie, which it is certaine that they never knew knew of? Howbeit of Bernard's time I confess, that then the corruption of all things was so great, that it was not much unlike our time. But they are without all shame, that fetch any pretence for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregorius, and such other. For they do like as if one, to stablifh the Monarchie of Emperors, would praise the old state of the Empire of Rome: that is, would borrow the praises of libertie, to set forth the honor of tyranny.

23 Finally, although all these things were graunted them; yet there ariseth of freth a new thuite for them, when we deny that there is a Church at Rome, in which such benefits may be resident: when we deny that there is a bishop, which may beare these privileges of dignitie. Admit therefore all those things to be true, (which yet we have already wrung from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Christ appointed head of the vniterall Church: and that he left the honour that was giuen him in the sea of Rome; that the same was stablifhed by the authoritie of the ancient Church, and confirmed with long continuance: that the Supreme power hath beene alway by one conferre giuen of all men to the bishop of Rome, that he hath bee the judge of all both cauies and men, and himselfe subject to the judgement of none: let them have also more, if they will: yet I anfwer in one word, that none of these things auailed, vnlesse there be at Rome a Church and a bishop. This they must needs graunte me, that it cannot be the mother of Churches, which is not it selfe a Church: that he cannot be chief of bishops, which is not himfelfe a bishop. Will they therefore have the sea Apostolike at Rome? Then let them shew me a true and lawfull Apostlehip. Will they have the chief Bishop? Then let them shew me a Bishop. But what? where will they shew vs any face of a Church? They name one indeed, and have it off in theirometer. Truly the Church is knowne by her certaine markes: and bishopricke is a name of office. I speake not here of the people: but of the government it selfe, which ought continually to shine in the Church. Where is the ministerie in their Church, such as Christes institution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before beene spoken of the office of Priests and of a bishop. If we shall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, we shall confess that they are nothing lesse than Priests. As for the chief bishop himselfe, I would faine know what one thing at all he hath bishoplike. Firtit it is the principall point in the office of a bishop, to teach the people with th3 word of God: another and the next point to that is, to minifter the Sacraments: the third is to admonish and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to hold the people together in holy discipline. What of these things doth he? yea, what doth he faine himselfe to do? Let them tell therefore, by what meane they would have him to be counted a bishop, that doth not with his little finger, no not once so much as in outward shew, touch any part of a bishops office.

24 It is not so of a bishop as it is of a king. For a king, although he doth not execute that which belongeth to a king, doeth nevertheless reteine the honor and title. But in judging of a bishop respect is had to Christes commandement, which alway ought to be in force in the Church. Therefore let the Romanists loose me this knot. I deny that their high bishop is the chief of bishops, forasmuch as he is no bishop. They must needs prooue this last point to be false, if they will have the victorious in the fiuit. But how saie they to this, that he not onely hath no power to e a bishop, but rather all things contrarie? But here, O God, whereat shall I beginne? at this learning, or at his manners? What shall I saie, or what shall I leave vnfaide? where shall I make an ende? This I saie, that whereas the world is at this day, stuffed with so many perverse and wicked doctrines, full of so many kindes of superstitions, blinded with so many errors, drowned in so great idolatrie: there is none of these any where, that hath not either flowed from thence: or at least beene there confirmed. Neither is there any other cause, why the bishops are caried with so great rage against the doctrine.
Cap. 7. Of the outwärde meanes

doctrine of the Gospel newly springing vp againe, why they bend all their strengthes to oppresse it, why they kindle vp kings and princes to crueltye, but because they see that their whole kingdome decayeth and falleth downe, so one as the Gospell of Chrift commeth in place. Leu was cruel: Clement was bloudie: Paul is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not so much moued them to fight against the truth, as for that this was their onely meane to maintaine their power. Therefore fis they cannot be safe, till they have driven away Chrift, they travel in this cause, as if they did fight for their religion and countreies, and for their owne licences. What then? Shall that be vs to the sea Apostolike, where we see nothing but horribile Apostasis? Shall he be Chriftes vicar, which by perfecutiong the Gospell with furious enterprises, doth openly profess himselfe to be Antichrist? Shall he be Peters successeour, that rangeth with sword and fire, to destroy all that ever Peter hath builded? Shall he be head of the Church that cutting off and dismembering the Church from Chrift the onely true head thereof, doth in it selfe plucke and teare it in pieces. Admit verly that in the olde time Rome was the mother of all Churches: yet since it hath begun to be the feate of Antichrist, it hath ceased to be that which it was.

25 We seeme to be too much euill speakers and rulers, when we call the Bishop of Rome Antichrist. But they that so thinke, doe not understande that they accute Paul of immodeifie, after whom we so speake, yea out of whose mouth we so speake.
And least any man object, that we doe wrongfully wrest against the Bishop of Rome;
these wordes of Paul that are spoken to another intent, I will briefly shew, that they cannot be otherwise understood, but of the Papacie. Paul wrytheth, that Antichrift shall fit in the temple of God. In another place also the holy Ghost describing his image in the person of Antichristus, sheweth that his kingdome shall consist in haevineffe of speech, and blasphemy of God. Herupon we gather, that it is rather a tyrannie over soules, than over bodies, that is raised vp against the spiritual kingdom of Chrift. Then, that it is such, as doth not abolish the name of Chrift and the Church: but rather should abuse the pretence of Chrift, and lurke under the title of the Church, as under a disguised vifour. But although all the heresies and sectes that have bene from the beginning, belong to the kingdome of Antichrist: yet whereas Paul prophesie, that there shall come a departing, by this description he signifieth, that that state of abomination shall then bee raised vp, when a certaine vnderfall departing shall poseffe the Church: howsoever many members of the Church here and there continue in the true vnitie of faith. But where he addeth, that in his time he began in a mysterie to set vp the worke of iniquitie, which he would afterwadrew openly: thereby we understand, that this calamity was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Now whereas he doth set out Antichrist by this marke, that he shoulde plucke away from God his due honour, to take it to himselfe: this is the chiefe token that we ought to followe in seeking out of Anti-christ, specially where such pride procedeth even to the publike dilipation of the Church. Sith therefore it is certaine that the Bishop of Rome hath shamelesly conveyed away to himselfe that which was the chiefe proper thing to God alone and Chrift, it is not to be doubted but that he is the captain and standard bearer of the wicked and abominable kingdome.

26 Now let the Romanists go, and object antiquitie against us: As if in so great alteration of all things, the honour of the sea might stand where there is no sea. Eusebius telleth, how God, that there might be place for his vengeance, remooued the Church that was at Hierusalem to Pella. That which we heare to have bene once done, might be often done. Therefore so to bind the honor of supremacie to a place, that he which is in deed the most hatefull unimie of Chrift, the higheft aduersarie of the Gospell, the greatest waster and destroyer of the Church, the most cruell slaugterman and butcher of the saints, shoulde nevertheless be accounted the vicar of Chrift,
Christ, the successor of Peter, the chief bishop of the Church, only because he occupied the see that was once the chiefest of all: that verily is too much to be scorned and foolish. I speak not, how great difference there is betweene the Popes chauncery, and a well framed order of the Church. Howbeit this one thing may well take away all doubt of this question. For no man that hath his right wit, will dunke the bishoprike enclosed in lead and bulles: much lisse in that schoole of fraudes and deceites, in which things the Popes spiritual government confitteth. Therefore it was very well sayd by a certaine man, that that church of Rome which is boaste of, is long ago turned into a court, which only is now scene at Rome. Neither do I here accuse the faules of men: but I shew that the papacie, it selfe is directly contrary to the true order of a Church.

27. But if we come to the persons of men, it is well enough known what manner of vicars of Christ we shall finde, Iulius for Sooth, and Leo, and Clement and Paul, shall be pillers of the christian faith, and the chiefe expostors of religion, which never knew any other thing of Christ, than that which he had learned in Lucians schoole. But why do I reckon vp three or foure Popes? as though it were doubtfull, what manner of forme of religion the popes with their whole college of Cardinalls have since long ago professe, and at this day do professe. For first this is the principall article of that secret Divinitie that raigneth among them, That there is no God: the second, That all things that are written and taught concerning Christ, are lies and deceits: the third, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the last resurrection are mere fables. They do not all thinke so: and few of them speake so. I graunt. But this hath long ago begun to be the ordinary religion of popes. Whereas this is very well known to all that know Rome, yet the Romish Dyuines ceafe not to boaste, that by Christes privilege it is professed, that the Pope can not erre, because it was said to Peter: I haue praid for thee, that thy faith should not faunt. What, I pray you, win they by mocking so shamelessly, but that the whole world may understand, that they are come to that extremity of wickednesse, that they neither feare God, nor stand in awe of men?

28. But let vs imagine, that the vngodlines of those popes who I have spoken of, is hidden, because they have neither published it by preaching, nor by writings: but only have bewared it at their table, and in their chamber, or at least within wals of honies. But if they will have this privilege to be of force, which they pretend, they must needes wipe John the xxii. out of the number of Popes, who openly affirmed that foules are mortall, and that they die together with the bodies vntill the day of resurrection. And that you may perceive that the whole see with her principall staves was then wholly fallen: none of all the Cardinals withstood so great a madnesse, but the schoole of Paris moued the king of Fraunce to compell him to recant it. The king forbad his subiects to communicate with him, vnslyce he did out of hand repent: the same, as the manner is, he proclaimed by a herald. The Pope compellled by this necessitie, abjured his error. This example maketh that I neede not dispute any more with my adversaries about this that they say, that the see of Rome and the bishops thereof, can not erre in the faith, because it was said to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may not faunt. Truely, he fell with so soule a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which succeed after Peter in the bishoprie. Howbeit this is also of it selfe so childish, that it needeth no answere. For if they will drawe to Peters successors whatsoever was spoken to Peter, it shall follow that they are all Satans, forasmuch as the Lord said this also to Peter: Go behind, thou Satan, because thou art an offence to me. For it shall be as easy for vs to turne backe this latter saying against them, as it shall be for them to object the other against vs.

29. But I liift not to straine with them in playing the soole. Therefore I returne thither.

Cap.7.

The uncleane manners of the Romane Bishops.

thither from whence I made digression. So to binde the place, and Christ, and the holy Ghost, and the Church together, that whosoever sit in that place, although he be the Deniill, yet he must be judged the Vicar of Christ and the head of the Church, because it was once the feate of Peter: I say this is not onely wicked and slaughterous to Christ, but also too great an absurdity and against common reason. It is alreadie long agoe since the Bishops of Rome are either without all religion, or the greatest enemies of Religion. Therefore they are no more made the the vicars of Christ, by reason of the feate which they occupie, than an idol, when it is set in the Temple of God, is to be taken for God. Now if their manners be to be judged upon, let the Popes themselfes ansuer for themselues: what one thing at all there is in them, wherein they may be knowne for Bishops. First, whereas there is such life at Rome, they not onely winking at it, but also as it were with secrete countenance allowing it, this is vitally vnmeet for Bishops, whole dutie is with seueritie of discipline to retraigne the licentiousneffe of the people. But I will not to rigorous against them, to charge them with other mens faults. But whereas they themselfes, with their own houfhold, with almost the whole Colledge of Cardinals, with the whole flocke of their Clergie, are so guen forth to all wickedneffe, filthineffe, uncleanneffe, to all kindes of lewde and mischievous doings, that they resemble rather monsters than men: therein truely they bewray themselues to be nothing lesse then Bishops. And yet they neede not to feared least I should further disclose their filthineffe. For both I am weare to have to doe in so flinking mire, and I must saue my chaufe cares, & I thinke that I have already enough and more prooved that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in olde time been the head of Churches, yet at this day the is not worthy to be judged one of the smallest toes of the Churches feete.

The rising of Cardinals.

30 As concerning the Cardinals, (as they call them) I cannot tell how it is come to passe, that they be so sordenly rifen vp to so great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to Bishops onely. For so oft as he maketh mention of Cardinals, he meaneth it not of them of the Church of Rome, but of any other: so that briefly, a Cardinall Priest is nothing else but a Bishop. In the writers before thate age I finde not this name at all. But I see that they were then lesse then Bishops, whom they be now far aboue. This saying of Augustine is well known: Although according to the names of honor, which the vic of the Church hath already obtained, Bishopsrike is greater than Priesthood, yet in many things Augustines is lesse then Hierome. Herein indeed he maketh difference betweene a Priest of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently setteth them all behind the Bishops. And that was so long obferued, that in the Councell of Carthage, when there were present two Legates of the sea of Rome, the one a Bishop, the other a Priest, the Priest was thrust backe into the laft place. But not to follow too old examples, there remaineth a Councell holden vnder Gregorie at Rome at which the Priestes sate in the lower place, and subscrib'd severally by these as for the Deacons, they had no place at all in subscrib'ing. And truly they had then no office, but to be present and vnder the Bishop at ministering of doctrine and of the Sacraments. Now the cafe is so changed, that they are become the cousins of Kings and Emperors. And it is no doubt but that they grew vp by little and little together with their head, till they were advanced to this high top of dignitie. But this also I thought good to touch shortly by the way that the readers might the better understand, that the Sea of Rome, such as it is at this day, doth much differ from that ancient one, vnder pretence whereof, it doth now maintaine and defend itselfe. But of what sort soever they were in olde time, forasmuch as they have now nothing of the true and lawfull office in the Church, they retaine onely a deceitfull colour & vaine visour: yea forasmuch as they have all things vterly contrary, it was necessary that should happen to them, which Gregorie wroteth fo oft. I say it & I say it. I gue sewarning of it, groning: that finally the order of Priesthood is fallen within, it shall also not be able to stand long without. But rather it behoved that this should be fulfilled in them which Malachi faith of such: Ye haue gone back out of the way, & haue made manie to stumble in the law. Therefore ye haue made voide the covenante of Law, faith the Lord. Therefore behold, I haue giuen you out of estimation, and vile to all the people. Now I leave it to all the godly to thinke of what sort is that supreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papistes with abominable shameleffe little not to make subject the very word of God, which ought to haue beene honourable and holy both to heauen and earth, men and Angels.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and wish how unbridled licentiousneffe it hath in the papace beene wrested to corrupt all pureneffe of doctrine.

Now followeth the thirde place of the power of the Church, which partly consisteth in all the Bishops, and partly in the Councells, and those either provinciall or generall. I speake onely of the spirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That consisteth either in doctrine, or in jurisdiction, or in making of Lawes. Doctrine hath two partes, the authoritie to teach articles of Doctrin, and the expounding of them. Before that wee begin to discourse of every one of these in specialtie, wee will that the godly Readers bee warned, that whatsoever is taught concerning the power of the Church, they must remember to applicte it to that ende, whereunto (as Paul testified) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to destruction: which who so lawfully vse, they thinke themselves no more than the ministers of Christ, and therewithall the ministers of the people in Christ. Now of the edifying of the Church, this is the only way, if the ministers themselves endeavour to preferre to Christ his authoritie, which can not otherwise bee safe vnlesse that bee left vnto him, which he received of his Father: that is, that he be the onely souldier of the Church. For it is written, not of any other but of him alone, Heare him. The power of the Church therefore is not to be sparingly set forth, but yet to be enclosed within certaine boundes, that it bee not drawn hither and thither after the lust of men. Hereunto it shall be much profitable to note, how it is described of the Prophets and Apostles. For if we simplic grant vnto men such power as they lift to take upon them, it is plaine to all men, what a slippery readines there is to fall into tyrannic, which ought to be farre from the Church of Christ.

Therefore herie it must be remembered, that whatsoever authoritie or dignity the holy Ghost in the Scripture giuen either to the priests or to the Prophets, or to the Apostles, or to the succesors of the Apostles, all that same is giuen, not properlie to the men themselves, but to the ministerie ouer which they are appointed, or (to speake it more plainly in one worde) whereof the ministerie is committed to them. For if we go through them all in order, we shall not finde that they had any authority to teach or to answer, but in the name and word of the Lord. For when they are called to the office, it is also enjoyned them, that they shoule bring nothing of themselves, but speake out of the mouth of the Lorde. And hee himselfe doth not bring them foorth to be heard of the people, before that he haue giuen them instructions what they ought to speake, to the intent that they should speake nothing bedefe his wordes. Moses himselfe, the prince of all the prophets, was to be heard above the rest: but he was first instructed with his commandements, that he might not declare anie thing at all, but from the Lorde. Therefore it is faide, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, beleued in God, and in his servant Moses. Also that the authoritie of the Priests should not grow in contempt, it was stablished with most greuous
Mal. 3.4 & 6. STORY. But therewithall the Lord sheweth upon what condition they were to be heard, when he faith that he hath made his covenant with Levi, that the law of truth shou'd be in his mouth. And a little after he addeth: The lips of the priest shall keep knowledge, & they shall require the law at his mouth because he is the angel of the God of hosts. Therefore if the priest will be heard, let him hear himselfe the messenger of God; that is, let him faithfully report the commandements that he receiv'd of his author. And where it is specially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expressly fet, That they may answer according to the law of God.

Deut. 17.10. THE power of prophets consisted in delivering that which God had given them in charge. Ezek. 3.17. 3 What manner of power the prophets generally had, is very well described in Ezekiel: Thou art man (faith the Lord) I have gien thee to be a watchman to the house of Israel. Therefore thou shalt hear the word out of my mouth, and thou shalt declare it to them from me. He that is commanded to hear out of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbidden to invent any thing of himselfe? But what is to declare from the Lord, but to speake as he may boldly boast, that it is not his own, but the Lords word that he hath brought? The selfe same thing is in Hieremie, in other words. Let the prophet (faith he) with whom is a dreame, tell a dreame: and let him that hath my word speake my word true. Certainly he appointeth a lawe to them all. And that is such, that he perumeth not any to teach more than he is commanded. And after he calleth it chaffe, all that is not from himselfe only. Therefore none of the Prophets thecleues opened his mouth, but as the Lord told him the words before. Whereupon these sayings are so oft found among them: the word of the Lord, the burden of the Lord, so faith the Lord, the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. And worthily. For Esaiie cried out that he had defiled lips. Jeremie contested that he could not speake, because he was a child: What could proceed from the defiled mouth of the one, and the foolish mouth of the other, but vnclene and vnwise, if they had spoken their owne speech? But his lips were holy and pure, when they began to be the instruments of the holy Ghost. When the Prophets are bounde with this religion, that they deliver nothing, but that which they have received, then they be garnished with notable power and excellent titles. For when the Lord testifieth, that he hath set them over nations and kingdomes, to plucke vp and to root out, to destroy and plucke downe, to bulde and to plant, he by and by adiouneth the caufe: because he hath put his words in their mouth.

Esa. 6.5. Joh. 1.6. 4 Now if you looke to the Apostles: they are indeed commended with manie and notable titles, that they are the light of the worlde, and the salt of the earth, that they are to bee heard in stead of Christ, that whatsoever they binde or looise in earth shall be bound or loosed in heaven. But in their verie name they shew how much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be apostles, that they shoulde not prate whatsoever they lift: but shoulde faithfully report his commandements from whom they are sent. And the words of Christ are plaine enough, in which he hath determined their embassage: when he commanded them to go & teach all nations, all those things that he had commanded. Yea, and he himselfe also receiv'd this law, and laid it vpon himselfe, that it should be lawfull for no man to refuse it. My doctrine (faith he) is not mine, but his that sent mee, my fathers. Hee that was alwaies the onely and eternall counsellor of the father, and he that was appointed by the father the Lord & school-master of all men, yea because he executed the miniftere of teaching, prescribed by his owne example to all minifters, what rule they ought to follow in teaching. Therefore the power of the Church is not infinite, but subject to the word of the Lorde, and as it were enclofed in it.

Ioh 7.16. THE ancient patriarchs and fathers taught by Christ. 5 But fith this hath from the beginning been of force in the church, and at this day ought to be in force, that the seruants of God shoulde teach nothing which they have not learned of him: yet according to the diversitie of times they have divers orders of learning. But that order which is nowe, much dffereth from those that were were before. First if it be true which Christ faith, that none hath scene the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom it hath pleased the Sonne to shew him, it behooved verily that they should be alway directed by the eternal wisdome of the Father, which would come to the knowledge of God. For how should they either have comprehended in minde, or uttered the mysteries of God, but by his teaching, to whome alone the secrets of the Father are open? Therefore the holy fathers in olde time knewe God no otherwishe but beholding him in the Sonne as in a glasse. When I say this, I meane that God did neuer by any other meanes disclose himselfe to men but by the Sonne, that is, his only wisdome, light and truth. Out of this fontaine did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the other draw the knowledge that they had of heavenly doctrine. Out of the same fontaine haue also all the Prophets themselves drawen all the heavenly Oracles that they uttered. For verily this wisdome hath alway disclosed it selfe by moe waye then one. To the Patriarches he vfed secret revelations: but therewithall to confrme their minde, he adioyned such ligues, that it could not be dooubtfull to them, that it was God that spake. The Patriarches couered over from hand to hand to posterity, that which they had receiued. For the Lorde left it with them to this intent, that they should so spread it abroad. But the children and childrens children, by God secretely informing them, did knowe that that which they heard was from heauen, and nor from the earth.

6 But when it pleased God, to raise a more apparant forme of a Church he willed to haue his worde put in writing and noted, that the priests should fetch from thence what they might deliver to the people, and that all the doctrine that should be taught should be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publishing of the lawe, when the priests are commanded to teach out of the mouth of the Lorde, the meaning is, that they should teach nothing strange or differing from that kind of learning, which the Lorde comprehended in the lawe: and to add and diminish was unlawful for them. Then followed the Prophets, by whose in deede the Lorde published newe Oracles to be added to the lawe: but yet not so newe, but that they came out of the lawe, and had respect vnto it: For, as touching doctrine, they were only expositors of the lawe, and added nothing vnto it, but propheties of things to come. Those excepted, they vtered nothing else but a pure exposition of the lawe. Because it pleased the Lorde that there should be a plainer and larger doctrine, that weake confidences might be the better satisfied: he commanded that the Prophecies also should be put in writing, and accounted part of his word. And hereunto were added the histories, which are also the works of the Prophets, but made by the ending of the holy ghost. I recorne the Psalms among the Prophecies, because that which we attribute to the Prophecies is also common to the Psalms. Therefore that whole body compacted of the lawe, propheties, pfasmes and histories, was the worde of the Lorde to the olde people, by the rule whereof the priests and teachers even vnto Christes time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawful for them to swerve either to the right hand or to the left, because all their office was inclosed within these bounds, that they should answere the people out of the mouth of God. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindfull of the lawe, and to giue heede to it, even to the preaching of the Gosspell. For thereby he forbiddeth them all newe found doctrines, and gранteth them noe leaue to swerve euener so little out of the waye which Moses had faithfully shewed them. And this is the reason why David so honourably setteth out the excellencie of the lawe, and rehearts so many praiyes of it: that is, that the Iews should couet no forren thing without, litle within it was all perfection inclosed.

7 But when at last the wisdome of God was openly shewed in the flesh, that same wisdome with full mouth declared vnto vs all that euery man with mans witbe comprehended, or ought to be thought concerning the heavenly Father. Now therefore, fore, since Christ the son of righteousness hath shined, we have a perfect brightness of the truth of God, such as the clearest of it is wont to be at mid-day, when the light was before but dim. For verily the Prophet meant not to speake of any meane thing, when he wrote that God in olde time spake diversly and many waies to the fathers by the Prophets: but that in these last daies he began to speake to vs by his beloved Sonne. For he signifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not hereafter, as he did before, speake sometime by some, and sometime by other, nor will adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or revelations to revelations: but that he hath so fulfilled all the partes of teaching in the Sonne, that they must have this of him for the last eternall testimonie. After which fort all this time of the new Testament wherein Christ hath appeared to vs with the preaching of his Gospel, even to the day of judgement, is expressed by the last hour, the last times, the last daies: to the end verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Christ, we should learne neither to faine vs any new beyond it, or receive it fained of other. Therefore not without cause the Father hath by singular prerogative ordained the Sonne to be our teacher: commanding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did in deed in few words set out his school-mastership vnto vs, when he said, Hear him: but in which there is more weight and force than men commonly think. For it is as much in effect, as if leading us away from all doctrines of men, he should bring vs to him only, and command vs to looke at al the doctrine of salvation at him alone, to hang upon him alone, to cleare to him alone, finally (as the very words doe sound) to harken to the voice of him alone. And truly what ought there now to bee either looked for or desired at the hande of man, when the very word of life hath familiarly and openly disclosd himselfe vnto vs? Yea but it is meete that the mouthes of all men be shut, after that he, in whom the heavenly Father willed to have all the treasures of knowledge and wifedom to bee hidden, hath once spoken, and so spoken, as became both the wifedom of God (which is in no part vnperfect) and Messiah at whose hand the revelation of all things is hoped for: that is to say, that he left nothing afterward for other to be spoken.

8. Let this therefore be a fixed principle: that there is to be had no other word of God, whereunto place should be giuen in the Church, than that which is contained first in the lawe and the prophets, and then in the writings of the Apostles: and that there is no other manner of teaching rightly, but according to the prescription and rule of that word. Hereupon also we gather, that there was no other thing granted to the Apostles, but that which the prophets had had in olde time: that is, that they should expounde the olde Scripture, and shew that those things that are therein taught are fulfilled in Christ: and yet that they should not doe the same but of the Lord, that is to say, the spirite of Christ going before them, and after a certain manner enditing words vnto them. For Christ limited their embassage with this condition when he commanded them to goo and teach, not such things as they themselves had rashly forgered, but all those things that he had commanded them, and nothing could be more plainly spoken, than that which he saith in another place: but be not ye called masters, for onely one is your maister, Christ. Then to imprint this more deeply in their minde, he repeteath it twic in the same place. And because their rudeness was such, that they could not conceuie those things that they had heard and learned of the mouth of their maister, therefore the spirite of truth is promised them by whom they shoulde be directed to the true vnderstanding of all things. For that same restraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is assigned to the holy Ghost, to put them in minde of all those things that hee before taught them by mouth.

9. Therefore Peter who was very well taught howe much hee might lawfully doe, leaueth nothing either to himselfe or other, but to distribute the doctrine delivered of God. Let him that speaketh (faith he) speake as the wordes of God, that is to say, not doubtfully, as they are wont to tremble whose owne conscience misgiveth them, but with plaine confidence, which becometh the servant of God furnished with allured instructions. What other thing is this, but to forbid al intentions of mans mind, from what head soever they have proceeded, that the pure word of God may be heard and learned in the Church of the faithfull? To take away the ordinances or rather the fained duties of all men, of what degree soever they bee, that the decrees of God onely may remaine in force? These bee these spirittuall armours, mightie through God to cast downe holds: by which the faithfull servants of God may throw downe counsels, and all height that advance the selfe against the knowledge of God, and may lead all knowledge captive to obeye Christ. Lo this is the souveraine power, wherewith it behoveth the Pasteurs of the Church to be endued, by what name soever they be called, that is, that by the word of God they may with confidence bee bold to do all things: may compel all the strength, glorie, wifdom and height of the worlde to yeld, and obey to his majestie: being vpholden by his power, may command all even from the highleft to the lowest: may build up the house of Christ, and pull downe the house of Satan: may feed the sheepe & drive away the wolves: may instruct & exhort the willing to leaue: may reprooue, rebuke and subdue the rebellious & stubborn: may binde, & loose: finally may thunder and light, if need be: but all things in the worlde of God. Howbeit ther is, as I haue faied, this difference betwene the Apoftles and their successors, that the Apoftles were the certaine & authentike secretaries of the holy Ghost, and therefore their writings are to be esteemed for the oracles of God: but the other have none other office, but to teach that which is set foorth & written in the holy Scriptures. We determine therefore, that this is not now left to faithfull ministers, that they may coinie any new doctrine, but that they ought simply to eleaue to the doctrine, whereunto the Lord hath made all men without exception subject. When I say this, my meaning is not onely to shew what is lawfull for all particular men, but alfo what is lawfull for the whole vniuerse Church. Now as touching all particular men: Paul verily was ordered by the Lorde Apostle to the Corinthians: but he denieth that he hath dominion over their faith. Who now dare take a dominion upon himselfe, which Paul left forth that it belonged not to him? If he had acknowledged himselfe to have this libertie of teaching, that whatsoever the Pastor teacheth he may therein of right require to be beleued: he would never haue taught the Corinthians this discipline, that while two or three prophets speake, the rest should judge, & if it were revealed to any that fay the first should hold his peace. For so he spared none, whose authority he made not subject to the judgement of the word of God. But wil I somma fay, of the whole vniuerse Church the case is otherwise. I anfwer that in another place Paul meeteth with this doubt also, where he faith, that faith is by hearing, & hearing by the word of God. Truly, if faith hang of the word of God only, hath respect vnto & refleth vpon it alone, what place is there none left to the word of the whole world? For here in no man may doubt that hath well known what faith is. For Faith ought to be fet vpon that faithfullnesse, whereby it may stand invincible against Satan, and all the engines of the hell, and against the whole worlde. This faithfullnes we shall no where finde but in the onely worde of God. Againe, it is a generall rule which wee heere ought to haue respect vnto: that God doth therefore take from men the power to set forth a newe doctrine, that hee onely may be our schoolemaister in heavenly learning, as hee onely is true which can neither lie nor deceive. This rule belongeth no leffe to the whole Church than to enorie one of the faithfull.

10 But is this power of the Church, which we haue spoken of, to be compared with that power, whereof the spirittuall tyrants, that haue falsely called themselves Bishops and Prelates of Religion, haue in certaine ages past boastted themselves among the people of God, the agreement shall be no better than Christ hath with Belial. Their tyrannie who bindeth the world to believe what soever pleaseth them to teach.

Beliaw. Yet it is not in this place my purpose to declare in what sort and with how wicked meanes they have exercised their tyranny: I wil but rehearse the doctrine, which at this day they defend, first with writings, and then with word and fire. Because they take it for a thing confessed, that a generall Councell is the true image of the Church, when they have taken this principle, they do without doubt determine, that such counsellors are immediately governed of the holy Ghost, and that therefore they cannot erre. But whereas they themselfes do rule the counsellors, yea and make them, they do indeed challenge to themselfes whatsoever they affirme to be due to the counsellors. Therefore they wil have our faith to stand and fall at their will that whatsoever they shall determine on the one side or the other, may be established & certaine to our minds: so that if they allow any thing we must allow the same without doubting: if they condemn any thing we must also hold it for condemned. In the meanes time after their owne lust, and defiling the word of God, they came doctrines, to which afterward they require by this rule to have faith gien. For they also fay that he is no Christian, that doth not certainly consent to all their doctrines as well affirmative as negative: if not with expressed yet with unexpressed faith: because it is in the power of the Church to make new articles of the Faith.

II First let vs heare by what arguments they proue that this authoritie is gien to the Church: and then we shall see how much that maketh for them which they allege of the Church. The Church (fay they) hath notable promises, that it shall never be for taken of Christ her spouse, but that it shall be guided by his spirit into all truth. But of the promises which they are wont to allege, many are given no leste to erue one of the faithful particularly, than to the whole Church univerally. For though the Lord spake to the twelve Apostles, when he said: Behold I am with you even to the end of the world: Again: I will ask my father, and he shall give you an other comforter, namely the Spirit of truth: yet he made the promise not only to the whole number of the twelve, but also to every one of them: ye to the other disciples likewise, either those that he had already receu'd, or those that should afterward be added to them. But when they expound such promises full of singular comfort, as though they were gien to none of the Christians, but to the whole Church together: what do they else, but take away from all Christians that confidence which they all ought to receive thereby to encourage them? Yet I do not here deny, but that the whole fellowship of the faithful furnisht with manifold duetue of gifts, is endued with much larger and more plentuefull treasure of the heavenly wisdome, than each one severally: neither is it my meaning, that this is spoken in common to the faithful, as though they were all alike endued with the spirit of understanding and doctrine: but because it is not to be granted to the aduersaries of Christ, that they should for the defence of an euill cause wrest the Scripture to a wrong sense. But, omitting this, I simply confesse that which is true, that the Lord is perpetually present with his, and ruleth them with his spirit. And that this spirit is not the spirit of error, ignorance, lying or darknes: but of sure reuelation, wise and true, and light, of whom they not deceitfully may learne those things that are gien them, that is to say, what is the hope of their calling, and what be the riches of the glory of the inheritance of God in the Saints. But whereas the faithful, eu'n they that are endued with more excellent gifts above the rest, do in this flesh receiue onely the first fruits and a certaine taste of that Spirit: there remaineth nothing better to them than knowing their owne weaknesses, to hold themselves carefully within the bounds of the words of God: least, if they wander farre after their owne sense, they by and by stray out of the right way, and much as they be yet voide of that spirit, by whose onely teaching truth is discerned from fallhood. For all men do confesse with Paul, that they have not yet attained to the marke. Therefore they more endeauour to daily profiting, than glorie of perfection.
12. But they will take exception, and say that whatsoever is particularly attributed to every one of the holy ones, the same doth thoroughly and fully belong to the Church itself. Although this hath some seeming of truth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth indeed so distribute to every one of the members the gift of his Spirit by measure, that the whole body wanteth nothing necessarie, when the gifts are given in common. But the riches of the Church are always such, that there ever wanteth much of that highest perfection, which our adversaries doe boast of. Yet the Church is not therefore so left destitute in any behalf, but that she alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lord knoweth what her necessarie requireth. But, to hold her under humiliation and godly modestie, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be expedit. I know what here also they are wont to object, that is, that the Church is cleanced with the washing of water in the word of life, that it might be without wrinkles and spot, and that therefore in another place it is called the piller and stay of truth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ daily worketh in it, than what he hath alreadie done. For if he daily sanctifieth, purgeth, pollueth, wipeth from spots all them that be his: truely it is certaine that they are yet besprinkled with some spots and wrinkles, and that there wanteth somewhat of their sanctification. But how vain and fabulous is it, to judge the Church already in every part holy and spotles, whereof all the members are spotty and very unclean? It is true therefore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But only the beginning of that sanctifying is here seen: but the end and full accomplishment, when Christ the holie of holy ones shall truely and fully fill it with his holiness. It is true also that the spots and wrinkles of it are wiped away: but so that they be daily in wiping away, vntil Christ with his coming doth utterly take away all that remaineth. For vnlesse we grant this, we must of necessarie affirm with the Pelagians, that the righteousones of the Faithfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathari and Donatists we must suffer no infirmities in the Church. The other place, as we have else where seen, hath a former vterlie differing from that which they pretend. For when Paul hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishop, he taught that he did it to this purpose, that he should know how he ought to behave himselfe in the Church. And that he should with the greater religiounes & endevor bend himselfe thereunto, he adding that the Church is the very piller and stay of truth. For what else doe these words meane, but that the truth of God is preserved in the Church, namely by the ministry of preaching? As in another place he teacheth, that Christ gave Apostles, Pastors, and Teachers, that we should no more be carried about with every winde of doctrine, or be mocked of men: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Soule of God, we should altogether meete in vnitiue of Faith. Whereas therefore the truth is not extinguished in the world, but remaineth stable, that same commeth to passe because it hath the Church a faithfull keeper of it, by whose helpe and ministrie it is sustained. But if this keeping standeth in the ministrie of the Prophets and Apostles, it followeth that it hangeth wholly hereupon, if the word of the Lorde be faithfullie preferred and doe keep his purse.

13. But that the readers may better understand, upon what point this question chiefly standeth, I will in few words declare, what our adversaries require, and wherein we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth hercunto, and thus they expound it, that forasmuch as it is governed by the Spirit of God, it may goe safely without the word: that wherether it goeth, it cannot think nor speake anything but truth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside God's word, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine oracle of God. If we grant that first point, that the Church can not erre in things necessarie to saluation, this is our meaning, that this is therefore because forsaking all his owne wisdom, she suffereth her selfe to be taught of the holy Ghost.

by the wordes of God. This therefore is the difference. They set the authoritie of the Church without the wordes of God, but we will that it be annexed to the word, and suffer it not to be feuered from it. And what maruel is it, if the spouse and scholar of Christ be subject to her husband and schoolemaster, that she continually and earnestly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a well government, that the wife should obey the authoritie of the husband, and this is the rule of a well ordered schoole, that the teaching of the schoolemaster alone should there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wise of her selfe, nor thinke any thing of her selfe: but determine the end of her wisdom where he lieth made an end of speaking. After this manner she shall also distrust all the intentions of her owne reason: but in those things wherein it standeth upon the word of God, the shall waier with no distrustfulness or doubting, but shall rest with great assurednes and steadfast constancie. So also trusting upon the largeness of those promises that the bath, she shall have whereupon abundantly to sustaine her faith: that she may nothing doubt that the best guide of the right way, the holy spirit, is alway present with her: but there with all the shall kepe in memorie whatsoever the Lord would have vs to recieve of his holy spirit. The spirit (faith he) which I will send from my father shall lead you into all truth. But how? because (faith he) he shall put you in mind of all those things that I have told you. Therefore he giuen thee warning, that there is nothing more to be looked for of his spirit, but that he should enlighten our minde to perceive the truth of his doctrine. Therefore Chrystofrome faith excellently well. Many (faith he) do boast of the holy spirit: but they which speake their owne do falfly pretend that they have him. As Chryst testified that he spake not of himselfe: because he spake out of the law and the Prophets: so if any thing beside the Gospeall be trusted in vnder the title of the spirit, let vs not beleue it, because as Christ is the fulfilling of the law and the Prophets: so is the spirit of the gospel. These be his words. Now it is easie to gather how wrongfully our adversaries do, which boast of the holy Ghost to no other end but to fet forth vnder his name strange and forraigne doctinies from the word of God, whereas hee will with unspakable knot be conioined with the word of God, and the same doth Chryst proffesse of him when he promiseth him to his Church. So is it truly. What fobiets the Lord hath once prescribted to his Church, the same he will have to be perpetually kept. But he hath forbidden her, that she should not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing from it. This is the inuiolable decree of God and of the holy Ghost, which our adversaries go about to abrogate, when they faine that the Church is ruled of the spirit without the word.

14 Here againe they murmure against vs, and say that it behooved that the Church should add some things to the writings of the Apostles, or that they themselves should afterward with liuely voice supply many things which they had not clearly enough taught, namely if Christ spake vnto them. I have many things to be said to you, which you cannot now beare, and that these be the ordinances, which without the scripture have beene receiued onely in vfe and maner. But what shamelesnesse is this? I grant the disciples were yet rude, and in a manner vnapt to learne, when the Lorde said this vnto them. But were they then also holden with such dullenes, when they did put their doctrine in writing, that they afterward needed to supply with liuely voice what they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their writings? But if they were already lead by the spirit of truth into all truth when they did let foorth their writings: what hindered that they have not therein contained and left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospel? But go to: let vs grant them that which they require. Only let them point out what be those things that it behooved to be revealed without writing, If they dare enterprife that, I will affaile them with Augustines words: that is, When the Lord had said nothing of them, which of vs dare say these be, or thole they be; or if any dare say so, wherby doth he proove... it? But why doe I strive about a superfluous matter? For a very child doth know, that in the writings of the Apostles, which these men doe make in a manner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the stature of that regulation which the Lorde did then promise them.

15 What? say they, did not Christ put out of controversy whatsoever the Church teacheth and decreeth, when he commandeth him to be taken for a heathen man and a Publicane that dare say against her? First in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but only the authoritie of the cures is established for correcting of vices, that they which have beene admonished or rebuked should not resist his judgement. But omitting this, it is much maruiall, that these laws have so little shame, that they dare be proud of that place. For what shall they get thereby, but that the content of the Church is neuer to be despised, which neither confesseth but vnder the truth of the word of God? The Church is to be heard, say they. Who denieth it? forasmuch as it pronounced nothing but out of the word of the Lord. If they require any more let them know that these words of Christ doe nothing take their part therein. Neither ought I to be thought too much contentious because I stand so earnestly upon this point. That it is not lawfull for the Church to make any new doctrine, that is, to teach and declare for an Oracle any more than that which the Lord hath revealed by his word. For men of sound wit doe see how great danger there is, if so great authoritie be once granted to men. They see also how wide a window is opened to the mockings and calumnations of the wicked, if we say that that which men have judged is to be taken for an Oracle among Christians. Beside that, Christ speaking according to the consideration of his owne time, giuen this name to the Synagogue, that his disciples should afterward learn to reverence holy assemblies of the church. So should it come to passe that every Citie and village should have equall authoritie in conying of doctrines.

16 The examples which they use, doe nothing helpe them. They say that the Baptising of infants, proceeded not so much from the express commandement of the Scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a very miserable succour, if we were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defense of the Baptisme of infants: but it shall in another place sufficientely apperare that it is far otherwise. Likewise whereas they object that that is no where found in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Niceene Synode, that the Sonne is confubstantial with the Father: therein they doe great wrong to the fathers, as though they had rashly condemned Arminius, because he would not seare to their words, when he professed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophets, and Apostles. This word, I grant, is not in the Scripture: but when therein is so oft affirmed, that there is but one God; againe, Christ is so oft called the true and eternal God, one with the Father: what other thing doe the Fathers of the Niceene Council when they declare that he is of one substance, but simply set out the natural sense of the Scripture? But Theodorite reporteth that Constantine vseth this preface in their assembly, In disputations (faith he) of Divine matters, there is a prescribed doctrine of the holy Ghost: the Bookes of the Gospels and of the Apostles, with the Oracle of the Prophets, doe fully shew vs the meaning of God. Therefore laying away dissord, let vs take the discoueries of questions out of the words of the Spiritue. There was at that time no man that spake against these holy monitions. No man took exception, that the Church might add somewhat of her owne: that the Spiritue revealeth not all things to the Apostles, or at least vtered them not to those that came after: or any such thing. If it be true which our ancestors would have: first, Constantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authoritie; then, whereas none of the Bishops at that time rose vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their Faith: for so they were betrayers of the right of the Church. But sicth Theodorite reheareth that...

they willingly embraced that which the Emperour saide, it is certaine that this new doctrine was then utterly unknowne.

The ix. Chapter.

Of Counsels and of their authoritie.

N ow although I grant them all things concerning the Church: yet they shall thereby not much prevaile for their intent. For whatsoever is said of the Church, the same they by and by give to the Counsels, forasmuch as in their opinion those represent the Church. Yet where they so stiffly contend for the power of the church, they do it of no other purpose, but to give all that they can to the Bishop of Rome and his garde. But ere I beginne to discourse this question, I must needs here make protestation of two things aforehand. First, that where I shall in this point be somewhat rough, it is not because I leffe esteeme the olde Counsels than I ought to doe. For I reverence them from my heart, and with them to be had in their due honor with all men. But herein is some mean, that is, that there be nothing withdrawn from Christ.
Now this is the right of Christ, to be the head in all Counsels, and to have no man fellow with him in this dignity. But I say that then only he is the head, when he govern-eth the whole assembly with his word and spirit. Secondly, whereas I giue leffe to Counsels than the adueraries require, I doe not for this cause that I am afraid of the Counsels, as though they did make for their side, and were against ours. For as we are abundantly furnished with the word of the Lord to the full proofe of our doctrine fully, and to the overthrow of the whole Papistrie that we need not much to defire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the olde Counsels do for a great part minister unto vs so much as may suffice for both.

2 Now let vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it be sought of the Scriptures, what is the authoritie of Counsels: there is no plainer promiseth than in this sayeing of Christ: Where two or three shall be gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that doth no leffe belong to every particular assembly than to a generall Counsell. But the doubt of the question standeth not therein: but because there is a condition added, that God will so onely be in the midst of the Counsell, if it be gathered together in his name. Therefore although our adversaries do a thousand times name Counsels of Bishops, they shall little prevaile: neither shall they make vs to beleue that which they affirm, that is, that they be governed of the holy Ghost, vnless they have proved that they are gathered together in the name of Christ.
For it is as possible that wicked and euill Bishops may conspire against Christ, as good and honest Bishops may come together in his name. For a verie cleare proofe heere of are many decrees that haue proceeded from such Counsels. But this shal be seen hereafter. Now I do but answer in one word that Christ promiseth nothing, but to them that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I deny that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the commandement of God, wherewith he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken from it, do decree every thing after their owne will: which being not contented with the Oracles of the Scripture, that is to say the only rule of perfect wisdom, do imagine some new thing of their own head. Surely, such Christ hath not promised that he will be present at all Counsels, but hath adjoined a peculiar marke, whereby to make true and lawful Counsels different from other: it is meeke that we should not neglect this difference. This is the covenant, which in old time God made with the Leuitical priests, that they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the prophets: this law also we see to haue been laid vp by the Apostles. Who to brake this covenant, God doth not vouchsafe, to let them haue the honor of priesthood, nor any authority.
authority. Let the aduersaries vndoo me this knot, if they will make my faith bounde to the decrees of men beside the word of God.

3 For whereas they thinke not that truth remaineth in the Church vnlesse it bee among the Pastors: and that the Church it selfe standeth not, vnlesse it appeare in generall Counsels: that is farre from having beene alwaye true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esai a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the Pastors hee faith thus: The watchmen are all blinde, neither know they any thing. They are all dum dogs, neither are they able to bache. They lie along and sleepe, and loue sleepe: and the pastors themselves know nothing, nor do undergo: and they doe altsogther looke bache vnto their owne waies. After the same maner (see faith: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the share of the fouler, a hatred in the house of God. Where joyning them with God by way of mockage, hee teacheth that their pretence of the priesthood is vaine. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremies. Let vs heare what he faith of the Pastors. From the prophet even to the priest, euene one followeth lying. Againe: The prophets do prophesie a lie in my name, when I have not sent them nor commanded them. And I lefte we should bee too long in reciting his words, let those things be read that he hath written in the whole xxij. and xl. Chapters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuoy against the same men. The conspiracie (faith he) of the prophets in the midst of hire as a roaring lion, & that violently takest his pray. Her prophets haue broken his lawe, and haue debiled his holy things, and haue made no difference betweene holy and profanne: and the rest that he adioyneth to the same effect. Like complaints are euery where in the prophets, so that nothing is ofter found in them.

4 But perhaps it might be that it was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euill. I would to God indeed it were so: but the holy Ghost hath giuen warning that it shall be farre otherwise. The words of Peter are plaine. As (faith he) there were in the old people false prophets, so shall there also bee among you false teachers, shily bringing in fectes of pretention, see you not howe hee faith, that there is danger to come, not by men of the common people, but by them that shall boast themselves with the title of teachers and pastors? Moreouer howe oft hath it bee spokun by Christ and his apostles, that there should very great dangers hang ouer the Church by the pastors? Yea, Paul plainly sheweth, that Antichrist shall fit in no other place than in the temple of God. Whereby hee signifieth, that the horrible calamitie of which he there speaketh, shall come from no where else but from them that shall fit in stead of pastors in the church. And in another place he sheweth, that the beginnings of so great a mischief are euery already neere at hande. For when he speaketh to the bishop of Ephesus, I know (faith he) that after my departure there shall enter into you such synning wolves not sparing the flocke. And they shall be of your owne felues, that shall speake peruerse things, to lead away disciples after them. How much corruption might a long course of yeeres bring among pastors, when they could so farre go out of kinde in so small a space of time? And i not to fill much paper with rehearsing them by name: we are admonished by the examples in a maner of all ages, that neither the truth is alwaye nourished in the bosome of the pastors, nor the safetie of the Church doth hang upon their estate. They ought indeed to haue bene the goournors and keepers of the peace and safetie of the Church, for preperation whereof, they are ordeined: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which hee ought, and another thing to owe that which he perfometh not.

5 Yet let no man take these our wordes in such part, as though I woulde euere where and rathly without any choise diminsh the authoritie of Pastors. I do but one ly admonish that euery among pastors themselves there is a choise to be had, that wee shoulde not immediately thinke them to be pastors that are so called. But the Pope with all his flock of bishops, upon none other reason, but because they are called Pastors, shaking away the obedience of the word of God, do tumble and toss all things after their owne lust: and in the meantime they trample to perjury, that they cannot be destitute of the light of truth, that the spirit of God perpetually abideth in them, that the church confoundeth them and dieth with them. Although there be now no judgements of the Lord, whereby he may punish the world at this day with the same kinde of punishment, wherewith sometime he took vengeance of the unhallowes of the old people, that is, to strike the pastors with blindness and amazement alike. Neither do they most foolish men understand, that they sing the same songs, which those in old time did sing that warred against the word of God. For the enemies of Hieremia did thus prepare themselves against the truth: Come, and we will imagine imaginations against Hieremia: forasmuch as the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wife man, nor the word from the prophet.

6 Hereby it is ease to answer to that other objection concerning general counsels. It can not be denied but that the Jews had a true Church in the time of the prophets. But if there had been a general council gathered together of the priests, what manner face of the church had there appeared? We are what God faith, not to one or two of them but to the whole order: The priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall be made afraid. Again, the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the Elders. Again, Night shall be to you in stead of a vision, and darkness in stead of prophecy: and the sunne shall fall downe upon the prophets, and be darkened upon these dates &c. Well: if all such had then been gathered together in one, what spirit should have governed in that assembly? Of that thing we have a notable example in that council which Achab called together. There were present four hundred prophets. But because they were come together of no other mind but to flatter the wicked king; therefore Satan was sent of the Lord to be a lying spirit in the mouth of them all. There by all their voices the truth was condemned. Mich was condemned for an heretike, smitten and cast in prison: So was done to Hieremia, so to the other prophets.

7 But let one example suffice for all, which is more notable than the rest. In that council which the bishops & Pharisees gathered at Jerusalem against Christ, what can a man say that there wanted, in so much as pertained to the outward show? For if there had not then been a Church at Jerusalem, Christ would never have communicted with their sacrifices and other ceremonies. There was made a solemn summons of them together: the high bishop fane as chief: the whole order of priests fane by him: yet Christ was there condemned, and his doctrine dven away. This doing is a proofe that the Church was not enclosed in that council. But there is no peril that any such thing should happen to vs. Who hath given vs assurance thereof? For it is not without fault of sluggines, to be too careles in so great a matter. But where the holy Ghost doth with express words prophecy by the mouth of Paul, that there shall come a departing (which cannot come but that the pastors must be the first that shall forsake God) why are we herein wilfuly blinded to our own destruction? Wherefore it in no wise to be granted, that the Church confoundeth in the company of pastors, for whom the Lord hath no where undertaken that they shall perpetually be good, but he hath pronounced that they shall sometime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the danger, he doth it to this intent to make vs the water.

8 What then will thou say: Shall the counsellors have no authoritie in determinning? Yes forsooth. For neither doe I here argue that all counsellors are to be condemned, or all their acts to be repelled, or (as the saying is) to be defaced with one blot. But (thou wilt say to me) thou bringest them all into subjection, that it may be free for every man to receive or refuse that which the counsellors have determined.
Not so. But so oft as the decree of any council is brought forth, I would have it first to be diligently weighed, at what time it was holden, for what cause it was holden, what manner of men were present: and then the very thing that is intreated of, to be examined by the rule of the scripture: and that in such sort as the determination of the council may have his force, and be as a forejudged sentence, and yet not hinder the aforesaid examination. I would to God all men did kepe that moderation which

Augs fiane prescribeth in the third booke against Maximinus. For when he minded briefly to put to silance this heretike contending about the Decrees of counsels: Neither (faith he) ought I to object against the Synode of Nicer, nor thou against me the Synode of Ariminum, as to the entent to conclude one another by forejudged sentence, neither am I bound by the authoritie of the one, nor thou of the other. By authorities of Scriptures, not such as are proper to either one, but such as are common to both, let there shew matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. So should it come to passe, that counsels should haue the maieftie that they ought: but in the meanes whereon the Scripture should be alone in the higher place, that there might be nothing that should not be subject to the rule thereof. So the olde Synodes, as of Nicer, of Conftantinople, the first of Ephesos, of Chaledon, and such other, which were holden for confuting of errors, we willingly embrace and reverence as holy, so much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they containe nothing but the pure and naturall exposition of Scripture, which the holy fathers with spirituall wisdome applied to the subduing of the enemies of Religion that then rose vp. In some of the latter counsels also, we see to appeare a true zeale of godlineffe, and plaine tokens of wit, learning, and wisdome. But as things are wont commonly to grow to worse, we may see by the latter Councils, how much the Church hath now and then degenerate from the pureneffe of that golden age. And I doubt not but that in these corrupter ages also, counsels have had some bishops of the better sort. But in these the same happened which the Senators themselues complained to be not well done in making of ordinances of the Senate of Rome. For while the sentences are numbred, not weighed, it is of necessitie that oftentimes the better part is overcome of the greater. Tuly they brought forth many wicked sentences. Neither is it here needefull to gather the speciall examples, either because it should be too long, or because other have done it so diligently, that there cannot much be added.

9. Now, what neede I to rehearse Councells disagreeing with Councells? And it is no caufe that any should murmure against me, and say, that of those counsels that disagree the one is not lawfull. For, how shall we judge by this? By this, if I be not deceived, that we shall judge by the Scriptures, that the decrees thereof are not agreeable with true doctrine. For this is the only certaine lawe to discerne them by. It is now about nine hundred yeares ago, since the Synode of Conftantinople gathered together under Leo the Emperour, judged that images set vp in Churches should be overthrown, and broken in peeces. A little afterward, the councell of Nicer, which were the Emperour assembled in spite of him, decreed that they should be restored. Whether of these two shall we acknowledge for a lawfull Councell? The latter which gaine images a place in Churches, hath prevaile among the people. But Augs fiane faith that that cannot be done without most present peril of idolatry. Epifhopianiis which was before in time, spake with much more sharplie: for he faith it is wickedneffe and abolition to have images scene in a Church of Christians. Would they that so spake, allow that councell, if they were alowe at this day? But if both the historians tell truth, and the very actes be beleene, not only images themselves, but also the worshipping of them was there receiued. But it is evidente that such a decree came from Satan. How saie you to this, that in depraung and tearing the Scripture, they shew that they made a mocking rooke of it? Which thing I haue before sufficiently made open. Howsouter it be, wee shall no otherwise be able to discerne betweene contrarie and disagreeing Synodes, which were many, vnlesse we trie them all by that ballance of all men and Angels, that is, by the worde of the Lorde. So we imbrace the Synode of Chaledon, refuting the second Synode of Ephesus, because in this latter one the wickednesse of Eutyches was confirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue judged none otherwise but by the scripture: whom we so followe in judging; that the worde of God which gaue light to them doth also now giue light to vs. Nowe let the Romanistes goe and boaste, as they are woone, that the Holy Ghost is fastened and bound to their counsels.

10 Howbeit there is also somewhat which a man may well thinke to be wanting in those ancient and purer counsels: either because they that then were at them, being otherwise learned and wise men, wholly bent to the businesse then in hand, did not forsee many other things, or for that many things of lighter importance escaped them being busied with weightier and more earnest matters: or for that simply, as being men they might be deceived with vnskillfulnesse: or for that they were sometime carried headlong with too much affection. Of this last point (which seemeth the hardest of all) there was a plain example in the Nicene Synode, the dignitie whereof hath by consent of all men, as it was woorthie, beene received with most high reverence. For when the principal article of our faith was there in danger, Arrius the enimie was present in readinesse, with whom they must fight hande to hande, and the chief importance laye in the agreement of them that came prepared to fight against the error of Arrius, this notwithstanding, they carelesse of so great dauntes, yea, as it were having forgotten gravitie, modestie and all humanitie, leaving the battell that they had in hand, as if they had come thither of purpose to doe Arrius a pleasaure, began to wound themselves with inward diffentions, and to turne against themselves the false that should have beene bent against Arrius. There were heard foule obstetings of crimes, there were scattered books of accusations, & there would have been no end made of contentions, vntill they had with mutuell wounds one destroyed another, vnlesse the Emperor Constantine had prevented it, which professing that the examining of their life was a matter above his knowledge, and chastised such intemperance rather with praise than with rebuking. How many waies is it credible that the other counsels also failed, which followed afterwarde? Neither doth this matter neede long proffe. For if a man recade over the actes of the counsels, hee shall note therein many infirmities: though I speake of nothing more greevous.

11 And Leo Bishop of Rome sticketh not to charge with ambition and vnaduised rashnesse, the Synode of Chaledon, which yet he contefteth to be found in doctrines. He doth in deepe not denye that it was a lawfull Synode: but he openly affyrneth, that it might erre. Some man peraduenture will thinke me fonde, for that I busie my selfe in shewing such errors: for as much as our aduersaries doe confess, that counsels may erre in those things that are not necessarie to salvation. But this labour is not yet superfluous. For although because they are compelled, they doe in deepe confesse it in word: yet when they thrust vnbo the determination of all counsels in evey matter whatsoever it be, for an Oracle of the holy Ghost, they doe therein require more than they tooke at the beginning. In so doing what doe they affyrn, but that counsels cannot erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawfull for vs to see the truth, or not to sooth their errors? And I intend nothing else, but that it may thereby be gathered that the holy Ghost, so governed the godly and holy Synodes, that in the mean time he suffered somewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, left we shoulde too much truft to men. This is a much better sentence, than that of Gregorie Nazianzen that he neuer sawe a good ende of any counsell. For he that affyrneth that all without exception ended ill doth not leaue them much authoritie. It is now nothing needful to make mention severally of provinciall counsels: forasmuch as it is ease ease to judge by the general, how much authority they ought to have to make new articles of faith and to receive what kind of doctrine fudder it pleaseth them.

12. But our Romanists, when they see that in defence of their cause all help of reason doth fail them, do resort to that extreame and miserable shift: that although the men themselves be blockish in wit and counfell, and most wicked in minde and will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commandeth to obey Rulers. Is it so? what if I deny that they be rulers that are such? For they ought to take upon themselves no more than John had, which was both a prophet of the Lord, and an excellent pastor. But let vs heare with what words he is set by the Lord into his office. Let not (faith he) the volume of this law depart from thy mouth: but thou shalt study it dayes and nightes. Thou shalt neither bow to the right hand nor to the left: then shalt thou direct thy way, and understand it. They therefore shall be to vs spiritual rulers which shall not bow from the law of the Lord, neither to the one side nor to the other. But if the doctrine of all pastors whatsoever they be, is to be receiued without any doubting, to what purpose was it that we should so oft and so earnestly be admonished not to harke to the speech of false prophets. Hear ye not (faith he by Hieremie) the words of the prophets that prophetic to you. For they teach you vanitie, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. Againe. Beware you of false prophets, that come vs to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves. And John should in vaine exhort vs, that we should proue the spirits, whether they be of God. From which judgement the very Angels are not exempted, much leffe Satan with all his lies. What is to be said of this saying: if the blinde leade the blinde, they fall both into the ditch? Doth it not sufficiently declare, that it is of great importance what maner of prophets be heard, and that not all are rafly to be heard. Wherefore there is no reason that they should make us afraid with their titles, thereby to draw vs into partaking of their blindness: forasmuch as we see on the other side, that the Lord had a singular care to fraye vs away from suffering our felues to be led with other mens errour, under what form of name focuer it lurketh. For if the answer of Christ be true, then all blind guides, whether they be called fathers of the Church, or prelates, or bishops, can do nothing but draw their partners into the same headlong downfall. Wherefore let no names of counsels, Pastors, bishops (which may as well be falsely pretended as truly vfed,) hinder vs, but that being taught by lessons both of words and examples, we may examine all spirits of all men by the rule of the word of God, that we may prooue whether they be of God or no.

13. Forasmuch as we have prooved that there is not given to the church a power to set vp a new doctrine, now let vs speake of the power which they attribute vs to it in expounding of scripture. Truly we do willingly grant, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better nor furer remedy than if a Synode of true bishops affemble together, where the doctrine in controversie may be disscussed. For such a determination, whereunto the pastors of Churches shall agree in common together, calling vpon the spirite of Christ, shall have much greater force, than if every one severally should conceive it at home, and so teach it to the people, or if a fewe private men should make it. Againe, when bishops are gathered in one, they doe the more commodiously take attude in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, least diversitie should breed offence. Thirdly Paul prescribeth this order in discerning of doctrines: For whereas he giuen to every severall Church a power to discerne, he shewes what is the order of doing in weightier causes, that is, that the Churches should take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And so doth the very feeling of godlines instruct vs, that if any man trouble the church with an unwonted doctrine, and the matter procee to farre that there be peril of greater dissention, the churches should first meete together, and examine the question propounded: at last, after just discusting had, bring forth a determination, taken out of the Scripture, such as may both take away doubting out of the people, and stopp the mouths of wicked & greedy men, that they may not be so hardie to proceed any further: So when Arrius was risen, the Niece Synode was gathered together, which with the authoritie thereof both did break the wicked endeavours of the ungodly man, and restored peace to the Churches which he had vexed, and defended the eternall godhead of Christ, against his blaphemous doctrine. When afterward Eunomius and Macedonius flird vp new troubles, their madness was resifted with like remedy by the Synode of Constatinople. In the Councell at Ephesus the wickednesse of Nicator was banished. Finally this hath beene from the beginning the ordinarie meane in the Church to preferr e vntie; so oft as Satan began to wooke any thing. But let vs remember, that not in all ages or in all places are found Athanasies, Basiles, Cyrilles, and such defenders of true doctrine, whom the Lord then raised vp. But let vs thinke what happened at Ephesus in the second Synode, where the heresie of Eutiches prevailed, the man of holy memorie Plauinus was banished with certaine other godly men, and many such mischieues committed: even because Dioscorus a fuddious man and of a very naughtie nature, was there the cheefe, and not the Spirite of the Lord. But there was not the Church. I graunt. For this I determine vitally that the truth doth not therefore die in the Church, although it be oppressed of one counsell: but that the Lord marvellously preferveth it, that it may againe in due time rise vp, and get the ouerhand. But I deie that this is perpetuall, that is a true and certaine expostion of Scripture which hath beene received by consents of a Councell.

Not every determination of a Councell to be receiued as a true and sound expostion of the scripture, some counsels having expressly defined things against Scripture: so far off it is that Counsels should have power to authorise Scripture.

14 But the Romanists shooe at another mark, when they teach that the power to expound the Scripture belongeth to the Councelles, yet and that without appellation from them. For they abuse this colour, to call it an expostion of the Scripture whatsoever is decreed in the Counsels. Of purgatory, of the intercession of Saints, of auricular confession, and such other there cannot be found one syllable in the Scriptures. But because all these thinke have beene stablified by the authority of the Church, that is to say (to speake truly) receiued in opinion and vfe, therefore every one of them must be taken for an expostion of Scripture. And not that onely: But if a Councell decree any thing, though Scripture cry out against it, yet it shall beare the name of an expostion thereof. Christ commandeth all to drinke of the cup, which he reacheth in the Supper. The councell of Constance forbade that it should not be given to the lay people, but willed that the Priest only should drinke of it. That which is directly fighteth against the institution of Christ, they will haue to be taken for an expostion of it. Paul calleth the forbidding of marriage, the hypocrie of deluils: And the holy Ghost in another place pronounceth that marriage is in all men holy and honorable. Whereas they haue afterward forbidden Priests to marrie, they require to haue that taken for the true and natural expostion of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more against it. If any dare once open his mouth to the contrary, he shall be judged an heretike: because the determination of the church is without appellation: and to doubt of her expostion, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why should I innue against so great shamelesnesse? For the very flaming of it is an overcomming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allow the Scripture, I wittingly passe it ouer. For in such fort to make the Oracles of God subject to the judgement of men, that they should therefore be of force because they have pleased men, is a blaphemous vnooorthy to be rehearsed: and I haue before touched the same matter alreadie. Yet I will ask them one thing: If the authoritie of the Scripture be founded vpon the allowance of the Church, what Counsels decree will they alleadge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius suffer himselfe to be over come at Nice with testimonies brought out of the Gospell of John? For after these mens saying, it was free for him to haue refused them, them, for as much as there had no allowance of a general council gone before. They allege the old roll, which is called the Canon, which they say to have proceeded from the judgement of the Church. But I ask them againe, in what council that Canon was set forth. Here they must needs bee dumb. Howbeit I desire further to know, what manner of Canon they think that was. For I see that the same was not very certainly agreed among the old writers. And if that which Hierom faith ought to be of force, the books of Maccabees, Tobit, Ecclesiasticus and such other shall be thrust among the Apochrypha: which those Canons doe in no wise suffer to be done.

The x. Chapter.

Of the power in making of Lawes: where in the Pope and his hauing vfd a most cruel tyrannie and butcheries vpon soules.

Now followeth the seconde part, which they will have to consist in making of lawes, out of which springe have flowed innumerable traditions of men, even so many faires to strangle poore soules. For they have had no more conscience, than had the Scribes and Pharisees to lay burdens vpon other mens shoulders, which they themselves would not touch with one finger. I have in another place taught how cruel a butchery is that which they command concerning auricular confession. In other lawes there appeareth not so great violence: but those which seeme the most tolerable of all, doe tyrannously oppresse confessions. I leave unspoken how they corrupt the worship of God, and doe spoile God himselfe of his right, which is the only lawmaker. This power is now to bee intreated of, whether the Church may binde confessions with her lawes. In which discourse the order of policie is not touched, but this onely is intended, that God bee rightly worshipped according to the rule which himselfe hath prescribed, and that the spirituall libertie, which hath regard to God, may remaine safe vnto vs. Wee have made that all those decrees be called traditions of men, whatsoever they bee that haue concernings the worshipping of God proceeded from men beside his word. Against these doe we strue, not against the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preservation either of discipline or honestie or peace. But the ende of our struing is, that the immeasurable and barbarous Empire may be restraine, which they vsurpe vpon soules, that would be counted pastors of the Church, but in very deed are most cruel butchers. For they say that the lawes which they make are spirituall, and pertaining to the soule, and they affirme them to bee necessarie to eternall life. But so (as I have euem now touched) the kingdome of Christ is invaded, so the libertie by hym given to the confidences of the faithful is utterly oppressed & thrown abroad. I speake not now with how great vngodlines they stablish the obseruing of their lawes, while out of it they teach men to seeke both forgiveness of sins, and righteouenes & saluation, while they set in it the whole sum of religion and godlines. This one thing I Earnestly hold, that there ought no necessitie to bee laid vpon confessions in those things wherein they are made free by Christ, and vnlke they be made free, as we haue before taught, they cannot rest with God. They must acknowledge one onely king Christ their deliverer, and be governed by one law of libertie, even the holy word of the Gospel; if they will keepe still the grace which they have once obtained in Christ: they must be holden with no bondage, and bound with no bonds.

2 These Solons doe indeede name that their constitutions are lawes of libertie, a sweete yoke, a light burden: but who cannot see that they bee meerly lies? They themselves in deed doe feel no heauines of their owne lawes, which casting away the fear of God, doe carelesslie and floutly neglect both their owne and Gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their saluation, are faire from thinking themselves
Cap. 10.

Of the outward means.

1. Cor. 7. 25.

felues free so long as they be intangled with these snares. We see with how great warines Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he duft not so much as in any one thing laie upon men any snare at all, and that not without cause. Truly he foresaw with how great a wound confciences should be striken, if they should be charged with a nece-sitie of those things whereof the Lord had left them libertie. On the other side the confitions are almost innumerable, which these men have most greedily stablished with threatening of eternal death, which they most feerely require as necessary to saluation. And among those there are many most hard to be kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be laid together) are impossible: so great is the heape. How then shall it be possible, that they upon whom so great a weight of dif-cultie lieth, should not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguifh and terror?

Therefore my purpose is here to impute such confitions, as tend to this ende, inwardly to bind soules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things necessarie to saluation.

3. This question doth therefore incumber the most part of men, because they do not suitably enough put difference betwene the outwade court (as they call it) and the court of confciencie. Moreover this increaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to bee obeyed not onely for feare of punishment, but for confciences fake. Whereupon followeth, that confciences are also bounde with the politike lawes. But if it were so, then all shoulde fall that we haue spoken in the laft

Chapter, and intend now to speake concerning the spirituall government. For the losing of this knot, first it is good to learne what is confciencie. The definition is to

to be gathered of the proper derivation of the word. For, as when men do with mind & understanding concerne the knowledge of things, they are thereby fad fire, to knowe, wherupon is derived the name of confciencie knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of Gods judgement as a witnes adivoynd with them which doth not suffer them to hide their sins, but that they be brought accusted to the judgement sever of God, that same feeling is called confciencie. For it is a certaine meane betwene God and man: because it suffereth not man to suppress that which hee knoweth, but pursueth him so far till it bring him to guiltinesse. This is it that Paul meaneth when he teacheth that confciencie doth together witnesse with men, when their th oughts doe accuse or acquire them in the judg ment of God. A simple knowledge might remaine in man as inclosed. Therefore this feeling which presenteth man to the judgment of God, is as it were a keeper loynd to man, to make and watch all his fecretes, that nothing shoulde remaine buried in darkenesse. Whereupon also commeth that olde proverbe, confciencie is a thousande witnesse. For the same reason also Peter hath set the examination of a good confciencie, for quietnesse of minde, when we being perswaded of the grace of Christ, doe without feare present our selues to God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes with these wordes, to have no more confciencie of sinne, in fteed of, to be deliuered or acquired, that sinne may no more accuse vs.

4. Therefore as workings haue respect to men, the confciencie is referred to God: so that confciencie is nothing else but the inwarde purenesse of the hart. In which sense Paul writeth that charite is the fulfilling of the lawe, out of a pure confciencie, and faith not fained. Afterward also in the fame chapter hee theweth howe much it differeth from understanding, saying that some had suffered shipwrack from the faith, because they had forfanken good confciencie. For in these wordes hee signifi-eth, that it is a lively affection to worship God, and a sencere defire to love godly & holy. Sometimeindeede it is referred also to men, as in Luke, when the same Paul testifieth, that he indemened himselfe that he might walke with a good confciencie toward God and men. But this was therefore faide, because the frutes of good confciencie doe flowe and come euuen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to

to God only, as I have already said. Hereupon commendeth that a law is said to bind conscience, which simply bindeth a man without regard of men, or not having any consideration of them. As for example, God commandeth not only to keep the mind chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbideth all manner of incontinence of words & outward wantonness whatsoever it be. To the keeping of this law my conscience is subject, although there lived not one man in the world. So that he behaveth himself temperately, doth not only sinne in this that he grieveth cuill example to his brethren, but he hath his conscience bound with guiltiness before God. In things that are of themselves meane, there is another consideration. For we ought to abstain from them, if they breed any offence, but the conscience is being free. So Paul speaketh of flesh conserate to idols. If any (faith he) make doubt, touch it not, for conscience sake. I say for conscience, not thine own, but the others. A faithful man should shun, which being first warned should nevertheless rate of such flesh. But howsoever, in respect of his brother, it is necessary for him to abstaine, as it is prejudiced of God, yet he ceaseth not to keep still the libertie of conscience. We see how this law binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

5 Now let vs returne to the lawes of men. If they be made to this end, to charge vs with a religion, as though the observing of them were of itself necessary, then we say that that is laide vnpon conscience which was not lawfull to be laide vnpon it. For our conscience have not to doe with men, but with God only: whereunto pertaineth that common difference betweene the earthly court and the court of conscience. When the whole world was wrapped in a most thicke mist of ignorance, yet this small spark of light remained, that they acknowledged a mans conscience to be above all judgements of men. Howbeit the same thing that they did with one word conscience, they did afterward the same, as if it were Gods will that there should then also remaine some testimonie of Christian libertie, which might declare conscience from the tyranny of men. But that difficulty is not yet dissolved, which ariseth out of the words of Paul. For if we must obey Princes not only for penaltys sake, but also for conscience, it seemeth thereupon to follow that Princes lawes have also dominion over conscience. If this be true, then the same also ought to be vnder the lawes of the Church. I answer that first here we must put a difference between the generall and particular. For though all speciall lawes doe not touch the conscience, yet we are bound by the generall commandement of God, which commandeth versus the authoritie of magistrates. And upon this point handeth the disputacion of Paul that magistrates are to be honored because they are ordained of God. In the meantime he teacheth not that those lawes that are prescribed by them, doe belong to the inward government of the soule: whereas he each where extolleth both the worshipping of God and the spirituall rule of living righteous, above all the ordinances of men whatsoever they be. Another thing also is woorlde to be noted, (which yet hangeth vpon the former) that the lawes of men, whether they be made by the magistrate or by the Church, although they be necessary to be kept, (I speake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therefore doe not by themselves bind conscience, because the whole necessity of keeping them is referred to the generall ende, but consisteth not in the things commanded. From this sort doe faire differ both those that prescribe a new forme of the worshipping of God, and those that appoint necessity in things that be at libertie.

5 But such are those that at this day be called Ecclesiasticall constitutions in the Papacie, which are built in, in stead of the true and necessary worshipping of God. And as they be innumerable: so are their infinite bonds to catch and stare soules. But although in the declaration of the law we have somewhat toucht them: yet because this place was fitter to inreate fully of them, I will now trauell to gather together the whole summe in the best order that I can. And because we have already already discoursed so much as seemed to be sufficient, concerning the tyranny which the false Bishops do take upon themselves, in libertie to teach whatsoever they list. I will now omit all that part: and I will here terminate upon declaring the power, which they say they have, to make laws. Our false Bishops therefore do burden consciences with new laws, under this pretence, that they do ordain of the Lord and the Church. Certainly, if they were true Bishops, I would in this behalf grant them some authority, not so much as they require, but so much as is requisite to the well ordering of the polity of the Church. Now such they are nothing less than that which they would be accounted, they cannot take any thing to them, be it never so little, but that they shall take too much. But because this hath beene elsewhere considered, let vs grant them at this present, that whatsoever power true Bishops have, the same rightly belongeth to them also: yet I deny that they be therefore appointed lawmakers over the faithful, that may of themselves prescribe a rule to live by, or compel to their ordinances the people committed unto them. When I say this, I mean, that it is not lawful for them to deliver to the Church to bee obserued of necessitie, that which they have devised of themselves without the word of God. For as much as that authority both was vnown to the Apostles, and so oft taken away from the ministers of the Church by the Lords owne mouth: I maruell what hauent so bolde to take it upon them, and at this day are so bolde to defend it, beside the example of the Apostles, and against the manifest prohibition of God.

7 As touching that which pertained to the perfect rule of well living, the Lord hath so contained all that in his lawe, that he hath left nothing for men that they might adde to that sum. And this he did first for this purpose, that because the whole vertue of living standeth in this point, if all works be governed by his will as by a rule, he should be holden of vs the onely master and director of life: then, to declare that he requireth of vs nothing more than obedience. For this reason James saith: he that judgeth his brother judgeth the law: he that judgeth the law, is not an observer of the law, but a judge. But there is one onely lawmaker, that can both save and destroy. We hear that God doth claime this one thing as proper to himselfe, to rule vs with the government and lawes of his word. And the same thing was spoken before of Esai, although somewhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, the Lord is our lawmaker, the Lord is our judge, he shall save vs. Truly in both these places is thwed, that he that hath power over the soul, hath the gosueme of life and death. Yet James pronounceth this plainly: Now, no man can take that upon him. Therefore God must be acknowledged to be the onely king of soules, to whom alone belongeth the power to save and destroy, as those words of Esai expresseth, and to be the king, and judge, and lawmaker and Saviour. Therefore Peter, when he admonisheth the Pastor of their duty, exhorteth them so to feede the flocke, not as vsing a Lordship over the Clergie, by which word Clergie he signifieth the inheritance of God, that is to say the faithful people. That if we rightly weigh, that it is not lawfull, that that should be transferred to man, which God maketh his owne onely: we shall understand that so all the power is cut off whatsoever it be, that they challenge, which advance themselves to command any thing in the Church without the word of God.

8 Now, for as much as the whole cause hangeth thereupon, that if God be the onely lawmaker, it is not lawfull for men to take that honour to themselves: it is meete also therewithall to keepe in minde these two reasons which we have spoken, why the Lordes claimeth that to himselfe alone. The first is that his will may be to vs a perfect rule of all righteousness and holiness: and that so in the knowing of him may be the perfect knowledge to live well. The other is, that (when the manner is fought how to worship him rightly and well) he only may have authority over our soules, whom we ought to obey, and upon whose backe we ought to hang. These two reasons being well marked, it shall be easy to judge, what ordinances of men are contrarie to the word of God. Of that sort be all those which are fained to belong to the true worshipping of God, and to the obseruing whereof confections are bounde, as though they were necessary to be obserued. Let vs therefore remember that all lawes of men ought to be weighed with this balance, if we will have a sure tryall that may never suffer vs to err. The first of these reasons Paul in the Epifile to the Colofians vfeth in contending against the false apostles that attempted to opprffe the churches with new burthens. The second reason he more vfeth with the Galatians in the like case. This therefore he traveleth to proue in the Epifile to the Colofians, that the doctrine concerning the true worshipping of God is not to be fought at mens hands:
because the Lord hath faithfully and fully instructed vs how he ought to be worshipped. To proue the fame in the firft Chapter, he faith in that in the Gofpel is contained all wisdom, whereby the man of God may be made perfect in Christ. In the beginning of the second Chapter he faith, that all the treasures of wisdom and vnder-standing are hidden in Christ. Thereupon he afterward concludeth, let the faithfull be-wary that they be not by vaine Philosophie led from the flocke of Christ, according to the conftitutions of men. But in the end of the Chapter, hee doth yet with greater boldnes condemne all Eschelobresbies, that is to faye, all fained worships, which men define to themfelves, or receive of other, and whatsoever precepts they dare of themfelves give concerning the worshipping of God. Wee haue therefore, that all those ordinances are wicked, in obseruing whereof the worshipping of God is fained to be. As for the places in the Galatians wherewith he earnestly affirmeth that confections, which ought to bee ruled of God onely, ought not to bee intangled with fnares, they are open enough, specially in the fift Chapter. Therefore let it be sufficient to have but noted them.

9 But because the whole matter shall better bee made open by examples, before that we go any further, it is good alfo to apply this doctrine to our owne times. We say that the conftitutions which they call Eccleftiasticall, where with the Pope and his do burden the Church, are pernicious and wicked; our aduersaries defende that they be holy and inuincible to Saluation. There be two kinds of them: for some concerne Ceremonies and rites, other some pertaine more to discipline. Is there then a fuit cause to mooue vs to impugne them both? Truly a fuit thane we would. First doe not the authors themfelves clearely define, that the very worshipping of God is contented in them? To what purpofe do they apply their ceremonies, but that God shoulde bee worshipped by them? And that commeth to passe not by the onely error of the ignorant multitude, but by their allowance that have the place of teaching. I doe not touch the groffe abominations, wherewith they have gone about to overthrowe all godlines. But it should not be imagined among them to be so hainous an offence, to have failed in any of the leaff petic traditions, vnderlie they did make the worshipping of God subject to their fained deuifes. What doe we then offend, if at this day we can not bære that which Paul taught to be intollerable, that the lawful order of the worshipping of God shoulde bee reduced to the will of men: specially when they command men to worship according to the elements of the world, which Paul condemneth to be againft Christ? Again, it is not unknown, with how proude necessitate they bind confections to kepe whatsoever they command. Here when we cry out to the contrarie, we have all one caufe with Paul, which in no wise suffrith faithfull confections to be brought into bondage of men.

10 Moreover, this worst of all is added, that when religion hath once begun to be defiled with fuch vaine inventions, thereuer followeth after that peruerfity

Another

another abominable ordinariness, whereof Christ reproved the Pharisees that the commandment of God is made void for the traditions of men. I will not vfe mine own words in fighting against our laymakers at these days. Let the have the victorie, if they can by any meanse purge themselues from this accustome of Christ. But how should they excuse them, when among them it is thought infinitely more hainous, to have omitted auricular confirmation when the time of yeere commeth about, than to have continued a most wicked life a whole yeere together? to have infected their tongues with a little tasting of flesh on a Friday, than to have defiled their bodie with whoredome all the daies of the weeke? to hate put their hand to an honest worke upon a day consecrate to I was not what peece Saints, than to have continually exercised their members in most wicked offences? for a priest to be coupled with one lawfull mariage, than to be entangled with a thousand adulteries? not to have performed a vowed pilgrimage, than to breake faith in all promises? not to have wasted somewhat upon monstros and no leffe superfluous and vnprofitable excellie gorgeousness of temples, than to have failed to helpe the extreme necessitie of the poore? to have paffed by an Idole without honour, than to have despifedfully intracted all kinds of men? not to have mumbled vp at certaine hours a great number of words without understanding, than neuer to have conceived a true prayer in their heart? What is to make voide the commandment of God for the traditions of men, if this be not: when commending the keeping of Gods commandements but coldly and as it were lightly by the way, they do no leffe earnestly and busily exact the obeying of their owne, than if they contained in them the whole pith of godlines? when reuenging the transcressings of Gods law, with light penaltie of satisfactions, they punish the very least offence of one of their owne decrees with no leffe paine than with prisonment, banishment, fire or fword? Being not so sharpe and hard to entreat against the despisers of God, they persecute the despisers of themselves with vnappeasable hatred to the extremitie, and doe so instruct all those, whose simplicitie they hold captive, that they would with more contented minde see the whole law of God ouerthrown, that one small title (as they call it) in the commandements of the Church to be broken. First in this point is gruous offence committed, that for small matters, and such as (if it should be tried by Gods judgement) are at libertie, one man despifeth, judgeth and calleth away another. But now as though that were not cuit enough, those trifling elements of the worlde (as Paul calleth them in writing to the Galatians) are weighed of more value than the oracles of God. And he that is in a maner acquit in adulterie, is judged in maner as he that hath leaue to vfe a harlot, is forbidden to have a wife. This proft verily is gotten by those transcressings obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men.

There be also other two not slender faults, which we disallow in the same ordinarces. First, because they presume for the most part vnprofitable, and somet ime also profound obseruations: then, because godly confidences are oppressed with the infinit multitude of them, and being reuled backe into a certaine Jewillines, they so cleane to shadowes, they cannot attaine to Christ. Whereas I call them fond and vnprofitable, I know that that will not seeme credible to the wisdome of the fиеth, which so wel like them, that it thinketh the church to be vterly deformed when they be taken away. But this is it, that Paul writeth of, to have a resemblance of wisdome in counterfeit worshipping, in humility, and in this that they thinke that with their sharpness they are able to tame their flesh. This is truely a most wholesome admonition, such as ought never to slip away from vs. Mens traditions (faith he) do deceive vnder the fiew of wisdome, whence have they this coult? because they are fained of men, therefore the wit of man doth therein acknow his owne, and acknowledging it doth more gladly embrace it, than any thing were it never so good, that leffe agreeeth with his his vanity. Again they have hereby another commendation, because they seem to be fit introductions to humility, for that with their yoke they hold the minds of men pressed down to the ground. Last of all, because they seem to tend to this end to restrain the dainties of the flesh, and to subdue it with rigor of abstinence, therefore they are thought to be wisely devised. But what faith Paul to these things? doth he not shew off those visors: left the simple should be deceived with false pretence? Because he judged this enough for confusion of them, that he had laid that they were the inventions of men, he paseth over all these things without confusion, as though he esteemed them for nothing? Yea, because he knew that all fained worshipings in the Church were condemned, and are so much more suspicious to the faithfull as they more delight the wit of man: because he knew that that fained image of outward humility doth so much differ from true humility, as it might easie be discerned: finally because he knew that that childish introduction was no more esteemed than an exercise of the body: therefore he willed that the very same things should be to the faithfull in stead of a confusion of mens traditions, by favour of which they were commended among the ignorant.

12 So at this day not only the unlearned common people, but every man as he is most puffed vp with worldly wisdom, so is he most marvellously delighted with beholding of ceremonies. But hypocrites and foolish women thinke that there can be nothing devised more glorious nor better. But they which do more deeply search, and more truly weigh according to the rule of godliness, of what value so many and such ceremonies are, doe wonderland first that they are trifles, because they have no profit: then, that they are deceits, because they doe with vaine pompe begule the eyes of the beholders. I speake of those Ceremonies, vnder which the Romish matters will that there be great mysteries: but we find them by experience to be nothing else but mery mockeries. And it is no maruell that the Authors of them have fallen so far as to mocke both themselves and other with trifling follies: because they partly tooke their examplar out of the dotages of the Gentiles, and partly after the manner of Apes did vndiscreetly counterfeit the old visages of the Law of Moses, which no more pertained to vs than the sacrifices of beasts and such other things. Truely although there were none other argument, yet no man that hath his found wit will look for any goodness of a heapofo ill patched together. And the thing it selfe plainly sheweth that many Ceremonies have no other vse but to amase the people rather than to teach them. So in these new found Canons, that doe rather pervert than preferre discipline, the hypocrites repose great importance: but if a man do better looke into the he shall find that they are nothing else but a shadowish & vanishing shew of discipline.

13 But now (to come to the other point) who doth not see that traditions with heaping one vpon another, are overgrown into so great a number, that the Christian Church may in no wise bear them. Herby it is come to passe, that in Ceremonies there appeareth I wot not what Jewishes, and the other observations bring a grieuous butchery to Christian Souls. Augustine complained that in his time, the Commandements of God neglected, all things were full of so many presumpitions, that he was more grieuously rebuked that in his Octaves he touched the ground with bare foote, than he that had buried his wit with drunkennes. He complained that the Church, which the mercy of God willed to be free, was so burdened, that the state of the Jews was much more tolerable. If that holy man had happened to live in our age, with what complaintes would he have bewailed the bondage that now is? For both the number is ten times greater, and every small title is a hundred times more rigorously looked vnto, than at that time. So is wont to be done: when these peruerse lawmakers have gotten the dominion, they make no end of bidding and forbidding, till they come to extreme perversenes. Which thing Paul hath also very well declared in these words: If ye be dead to the world, why are ye holden as though ye were living with
With traditions, as eate not, taffe not, handle not? For whereas the Grecke word *ap-

sthesai signifieth both to eate and to touch, doubtles in this place it is taken in the frist de the two significations, least there should be a superfluous repetition. Therefore he dothee, excellently well describe the proceedings of thefalse Apostles. They begin at superstition, so that they do not only forbid to eat, but also even seldener to shaw:

when they have obtained this, they then also forbid to taffe. When this is also granted them, they reckon it not lawfull so much as to touch with a finger.

14 This tyrannie in the ordnances of men we do at this day woorthily blame, by which it is come to passe that poor confections are maruellously tormentid with innumerable decrees & immediatly exacting of keeping of them. Of canons pertaining to discipline we have spoke in another place. Of the ceremonies what shall I say, by which it is brought about that Christ being hafte buried, we are returned to Jewis figures? Our Lord Christ ( faith Augustine) hath bound together the fellowship of the newe people, with Sacraments very fewe in number, most excellent in signification, most easie in obtaining. How farre the multitude and diverse of vetes wherewith at this day we bee the church to be entangled, doth differ from this simplicity, it cannot be sufficiently declared. I know what crafte shes some little men do excuse this perverisnesse. They say that among vs there are many as rude as they were in the people of Israel: that such introduction was ordained for their fakes, which although the stronger may well want, yet they ought not to neglectt it, for as much as they see it to be profitable for the weake brethren. I answere, that we are not ignorant, what we owe to the weakebrethren; but on the other side we take exception and say, that this is not the way whereby the weake may be provided for, that they should be overwhemed with great heapes of Ceremonies. The Lord did not in vaine put his difference betweene vs and the olde people, that his wil was to infruct them like children with signes and figures, but vs more simply without such outward furniture. As (faith Paul) a childe is ruled of his Scho-media and kept vnder custodie, according to the capacity of his age: so the Iewes are kept vnnder the law. But we are like vnto full grown men, which being set at libertie from tutors shippe and government, have no more neede of childish introductions. Truely the Lord did forsee what maner of common people there should be in his Church, and how they should be ruled. Yet he did in this manner as we haue saide, make difference betweene vs and the Iewes. Therefore it is a foolish way, if we will provide for the ignorant, in raising vp Iewishmes which is abrogate by Christ: Christ also touched in his owne words this difference of the olde and newe people, when he said to the woman of Samaria, that the time was come wherein the true worshippers should worship God in Spirit and truth. This verily had alway beene done: but the new worshippers differed from the old in this point, that vnnder Moses the Spirituall worship-ning of God was shadowed and in a maner entangled with many Ceremonies, which being abolished, he is now more simply worshipped. Therefore they that confound this difference, do overthrow the order institute and stabilizd by Christ. Shall there then ( wilt thou say) no ceremonies be gitten to the Iuder forb to helpe their vnskull-fulnes? I sy not to ye: for I verily thinke that this kind of helpe is profitable for them.
I do here trauell only that such a meane may be vsubd, as may brightly set out Christ and not darken him. Therefore there are gitten vs of God few Ceremonies, and thosc not laborfome, that they should shew Christ being present. The Iewes had moe gi-guen them, that they should be images of him being absent. Abfent I say he was, not in power, but in maner of signifying. Therefore that meane may be kept, it is necessary to kepe that fewnes in number, easines in obseruing, and dignitie in signifying, which also confineth in cleerness. What neede I say this hath not beene done?
For the thing it selfe is in all mens eies.

15 Heere I omit with how pertinious opinions mens minde are filled in think
king that they be sacrifices where with oblation is rightly made to God, whereby sins are expir'd, whereby righteousness and salvation is obtain'd. They will deny that good things are corrupted with such forsworn errors; for so much as in this behalf a man may no more offend in the very works also commanded of God. But this hath beene, that so much honor is given to works rashly fained by the wil of man, that they are thought to be things defering eternal life. For the works commanded of God haue reward therefore, because the lawmaker himselfe in respect of obedience accepteth them. Therefore they receive not their value of their owne worthines, or of their owne defering, but because God so much esteemeth our obedience toward him. I speake here of the perfection of works which is commanded of God, and is not performed of men. For therefore the very works of the law which we doe have no strength but of the free goodnes of God, because in them our obedience is weak and lame. But because we do not here dispute, of what value works are without Christ, therefore let vs passe over that question. I come backe againe to that which properly belongeth to this present argument, that whatsoever commendation works haue in them, they haue it in respect of the obedience, which onely the Lord doth look upon, as he testifieth by the Prophet: I gave not commandement of sacrifices and burnt offerings, but onely that ye shoulde with hearing, heare my voice. But of fained works he spaketh in another place, saying: Ye way your filteer and not in bread. Again, They worship me in vaine with the precepts of men. This therefore they can by no wares excuse, that they suffer the silly people to lecke in those outward trufles the righteousness whereby they may stand against God and uphold themselves before the heauenly judgement seat. Moreover, is not this a fault worthy to be intreated against, that they shew forth ceremonies not vnderstanded as it were a stage play, or a magickall enchantment? For it is certaine that all ceremonies are corrupt and hurtfull, vnlike men be by them directed to Christ. But the Ceremonies that are v'd under the Papacy, are feuered from doctrine, that they may the more hold men in signes without all signification: Finally (such a cunning craftsman is the bellie) it appeareth that many of them have beene inventedd by custous sacrificing Priests, to be sharers to catch money. But what beginning ouer they haue, they are all so given foorth in common for filthy gaine, that we must needs cut of a great part of them, if we will bring to passe that there be not a prophane market, and full of sacrilege v'd in the Church.

16 Although I seeme not to teach a continuall doctrine concerning the ordinances of men, because this speaking is altogether applied to our owne time; yet there is nothing spoken that shall not be profitable for all times. For so oft as this superstition creepeth in, that men will worship God with their owne fained deuices, whatsoever the lawes be that are made to that purpose, they doe by and by degenerate to those groile abuses. For the Lord threatneth not this curse to one or two ages, but to all ages of the world, that he will strike them with blindness and amased dullest that worship him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that Esa.19.13, they flee from no kind of abjuriditi, which desertit so many warnings of God, doe wilfully wrap themselves in those deadly sharers. But if, setting aside circumstances, you will have simply shewed what be the mens traditions of all ages, which it is meet to be reiected of the Church, and to be disallowed of all the godly, that same shall be a sure and plain definition which we haue above sett: that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this end, either to preffcribe a manner of worshipping God, or to bind consciences with religion, as though they gauie commandement of things necessarie to salvation. If to the one or both of these there be adioyned other faults: as, that with the multitude they darken the brightnes of the Gospel: that they nothing edifie, but be rather vnprofitable and trifling occupations than true exercises of godlines: that they be laide abroad to filthinesse and vnfrank gaine: that they be too hard.
Cap. 10.

Of the outward meanes

hard to be kept: that they be defiled with euill superstitions: these shall be helpe that we may the more easily finde how much euill is in them.

17 I heare what they answere for themselves, that their traditions are not of themselues, but of God. For, they say that the Church is governed of the holy Ghost, that it cannot erre: and that the authoritie thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it there withall followeth, that their traditions are the revelations of the holy Ghost, which cannot be defiled but wickedly and with the contempt of God. And that they should not seeme to have attempted any thing without great authority, they will have it beleued that a great parte of their obseruations came from the Apostles: and they affirme that by one example is sufficiently declared what the Apostles did in other things, when being assembled in one Council, they did by the decree of the Council command the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered to idols, from blood and strangled. We haue already in another place declared, how falsely for boasting of themselves they lyingly usurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this present cause: if, plucking away visors, and deceitfull colours, we truely looke vp on that which we ought principally to care for, and which chiefly is for our behoove, that is, what maner of Church Christ will haue; that we may fashion and frame our selues to the rule thereof: it shall easily be euident unto vs, that it is not the church, which passing the bounds of the word of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in making of newe lawes. For doth not that lawe which was once prescribed to the Church, remaine eternall? What I commaunde thee, that thou shalt kepe that thou makest do. Thou shalt not adde any thing nor take any thing from it. And in another place: Ad not to the word of the Lord, nor minish any thing: least he peraduenture reprooue thee, and thou be found a lyer. Sih they cannot deny that this was spoken to the church, what do they else but report the stubbornnes of that church, which they boast to have been so bold as after such prohibitions neuertheles to adde and mingle of her owne with the doctrine of God? But God forbid that we shoulde attent to their lies, whereby they burden the church with so great a flander: but let vs understand, that the name of the Church is falsely pretented, so oft as this lust of men rashnesse is spoken of, which cannot hold it selfe within the prescribed bounds of God, but that it wildly rangeth and runneth out into her owne inventions? There is nothing entangled, nothing dark, nothing doubtful in these words, in which the whole Church is forbidden to adde to the word of God, or to take any thing from it, when the worshipping of God, and precepts concerning saluation, are entreated of. But this (say they) was spoken of the lawe only, after which followed the prophecies and the whole ministration of the Gospell. I grant in deed: and I adde also, which are rather fullfillings of the lawe, than additions or diminishings. But if the Lord suffred nothing to be adde to or taken from the ministration of Moses, which was (as I may so terme it) darke by reason of many doubtfull enwrappings, till by his seruants, the Prophets, and at length by his beloved sonne, he ministrd a clearer doctrine: why should we not thinke it much more seuerely forbidden vs, that we should adde nothing to the lawe, the Propheters, the Psalmes, and the Gospell? The Lord is not gone out of kinde from himselfe, which hath long ago declared, that he is with nothing so highly offended, as when he is worshipped with the inventions of men. Whereof came those notable sayings in the Propheters, which ought to have continually founded in our eares: I spake no words to your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of Egypt, concerning sacrifice and burnt offering. But this word I commanded them, saying: With hearing hear my voice: And I will be your God, and you shall be my people, and you shall walke in all the way that I shall command you. Again, I hate with protesting protested vnto your fathers, Hear my voice. And other like sayings: but this is notable about the rest. Will God have burnt offerings and sacrifices, not rather that his voice be obied? For obedience is better than sacrifice,
to Salvation. Lib.4. 324

sacrifice, & to harken is better than to offer the fat of Rams: For, to resist is as the sin of foodslaying: and not to obey is as the wickedness of idolatry. Therefore whatsoever inventions of men are in this behalf defended with the authoritie of the Church, forasmuch as the same cannot be excused from the crime of vngodlines, it is easy to proue that it is falsly imputed to the Church.

18 After this sort we freely inveigh against this tyranny of mens traditions, which is proudly thrust in among vs, under the title of the Church. For neither do we forue the Church (as our adversaries do bring vs in hatred, do vanityly lie vpon vs) but wee give vs to her the praife of obedience, than which she knoweth no greater praife. They rather are verye fore wrong doers to the Church, which make her of infinite against her Lorde, while they faine that she hath proceeded further then the lawfullie might do by the word of God: though I speake nothing howe it is a notable shamelesnes joyned with as great malice, continually to erie out of the authoritie of the Church, and in the mean time dissemblingly to hide both what is commanded by the Lord, and what obedience oweth to the commandement of the Lorde. But if we have a minde, as it is meete we should have, to agree with the Church, this pertieneth rather to the purpose, to have an end vs and remember what is commanded by the Lord both to vs and the Church, that we shoulde with one agreement obey him. For there is noe doubt but we shall very well agree with the Church, if we do in all things shew our felues obedient to the Lord. But now: as father vpon the apostles, the originall of the traditions wherewith the Church hath beene hitherto oppressed, was a point of meece deceite: forasmuch as the doctrine of the apostles travaileth wholly to this end, that confusions should not be burdened with new obseruations, nor the worshipping of God bee defiled with our intenotions. Moreover if there be any faithfullnes in histories and ancient monuments, the apostles not onelie never knewe, but also never heard of this that they attribute vnto them. Neither let them prate, that the most part of their decrees were receiued in vfe & in mens behauiours, which never were put in writing: cuen those things forsooth, which, while Christ was yet luuing, they could not understand, after his ascending they learned by the revelation of the holy Ghost. Of the expouision of that place wee haue else where already seen. So much as is sufficient for this present cause: truly they make themselues worthless to be lauged at, while they faine that those great mysteries, which so long time were vnown to the apostles, were partly obseruations either Iewish or Gentile (of which all the one flort had beene long before published among the Iewes, and all the other flort among the Gentiles, and partly foolish gesturings and vaine pettie ceremonies, which foolish sacrificing priests that can neither skill of swimming nor of letters, vfe to do very trimly: yea such as children and foole do aptly counterfeit that it may seeme that there be no fitter minifters of such holy mysteries. If there were no histories at all: yet men that have their sould wit might consider by the thing it self, that so great a heap of ceremonies and obseruations did not suddenly burst into the Church, but by little and little crept in. For when those holyer bishops, which were next in time to the Apostles, had ordaine some things that belonged to order and discipline, afterward there followed men, some after other, not discreete enough, and too curious and greedy, of which the later that every one was, so he more striued with his predecessors in foolish envious counterfaiting, not to giue place in inuenting of new things. And because there was perill leaft their deutes woulde shortly growe out of vfe, by which they coueted to get praife among their posterity, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpon the keeping of them. This wrongfull zeale hath bred vs a great part of these ceremonies which they set out vnto vs for Aposto-

The Apostles no authors of those things, for which their names are pretended in the Church of Rome.

19 Leaft in making a regifter of them we should be to tedious: we will be content with one example. In the ministring of the Lordes supper, there was in the Apostles Tt 4 time
Cap. 10. Of the outward means time great simplicity. The next successors, to garnish the dignity of the mystery, added somewhat that was not to be disallowed. But afterward there came those foolish counterfeiters, which with now and then patching of pieces together, have made vs this apparel of the priests which we see in the Male, those ornaments of the altar, those gettings, and the whole furniture of vnprouitable things. But they object, that this in olde time was the perversion, that those things which were with one confection done in the vnwithout Church, came from the Apostles themselves, whereof they cite Augustine for witness. But I will bring a solution from no other where than out of the words of Augustine himselfe. Those things (saith he) that are kept in the whole world, we may understand to have beene ordained either of the Apostles themselves, or of the generall Councels, whose authoritie is most healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lords passion, and resurrection, and his ascending into heauen, and the coming of the holy Ghost, are celebrate with yearely solemnitie: and whatsoever like thing be found, that is kept of the whole Church, which way sooner it be spread abroad. When he reckoneth up so few examples, who doth not see that he meant to impute to authours worthy of credit and reuerence, the obseruations that then were vfed, even none but those simple, rare, and sober ones, with which it was profitable that the order of the Church should be kept together? But how farre doth this differ from that which the Romish masters would enforce men to grant, that there is no pettie ceremony among them that ought not to be judged Apostolike.

20 That I be not too long, I will bring forth only one example. If any man ask them, whence they have their holy water: they by and by answeare, from the Apostles. As though the histories do not attribute this intention to I know not what Bishop of Rome, which truly, if he had called the Apostles to counsell, would never have defiled Baptisme with a strange and vnfit signe. Albeit I do not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that hallowing is so old as it is there written. For, that which Augustine saith, that certaine Churches in his time did shun that solemn following of Christes example in washing of feet, least that usage should seeme to pertaine to Baptisme, secretly sheweth that there was then no kind of washing that had any like with baptisme. Whosoever it be, I will not grant, that this proceeded from an Apostolike sprit, that baptism, when it is with a daily signe brought into remembrance, should after a certaine maner be repeated. And I passe not vpon this, that the felsame Augustine in another place afteriboth other things also to the Apostles. For sith he hath nothing but conjectures, judgement ought not vpon them to be guened so great a matter. Finally, admit that we graunt them also, that those things which he reharketh came from the time of the Apostles: yet there is great difference betweene instituting some exercise of godlines, which the faithfull with a free conscience may vfe, or if the vfe of it shall not be profitable for them, they may forbeare it: and making a law that may break conscience with bondage. But now, from what author soever they proceeded, sith we see that they are slidden into so great abuse, nothing withstandeth, but that we may without offence of him abolish them: forasmuch as they were never so commanded, that they must be perpetually immouable.

21 Neither doth it much help them, that to excuse their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apostles. The Apostles (say they) and the elders of the first church, made a decree before the commandement of Christ, wherein they commanded all the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered to idols, from strangled, and from bloud. If that was lawfull for them, why is it not also lawfull for their successors, to follow the same so oft as occasion doth require? I would to God, they did both in all other things and in this thing follow them. For I deny that the Apostles did there instinct or decree any new thing, which is easie to be proved by a strong reason: For whereas Peter in that counsell pronounceth, that God is tempted, if a yoake be laid vpon the necks necks of the disciples: he doth himselfe overthrow his owne sentence, if he afterward confent to have any yoke laid upon them. But there is a yoke laid, if the Apostles do decree of their owne authoritie that the Gentiles should be forbidden, that they should not touch things offered to idols, bloud, and strangled. In deed there yet remaineth a doubt, for that they do nevertheless seeme to forbid. But this doubt shall easily be dissolved, if a man do more neatly consider the meaning of the decree itselfe: in the order and effect whereof the chiefe point is, that to the Gentiles their libertie is to be left, and that they ought not to be troubled, nor accombred about the obseruations of the law. Hitherto it very well maketh of our side. But the exception that immediatly followeth, neither is any new lawe made by the Apostles, but the divine and eternall commandement of God, that charitie ought not to be broken, nor doth diminish one title of that libertie: but only admonisbeth the Gentiles, how they should temper themselves to their brethren, that they abufe not their libertie to the offence of them. Let this therefore be the second point, that the Gentiles should use a harmeless libertie, and without offence of their brethren. But yet they prescribe some certaine things: that is, they teach and appoint, so far as was expedient for the time, by what things they might run into the offence of their brethren, that they might beware of those things: but they add no new thing of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

22 Like as if the faithfull Pastors which governe the Churches not yet well reformed, should command all their people, that till the weake with whom they live do grow stronger, they should not openly eate flesh on Friday, or openly labour upon holy dayes, or any such thing. For although these things being superstition aside, are by themselves indifferent: yet when there is added offence of brethren, they cannot be done without a fault. But the times are such, that the faithfull cannot shew such a sight to the weake brethren, but that they shall fore wound their confidences. Who, but a cauiller, will say that so they make a new lawe, whereas, it is certaine that they do openly prevent offences, which are expressly enough forbidden of the Lord? And no more can it be laid of the Apostles, whose purpose was nothing els, but in taking away the matter of offences, to call upon the law of God concerning the avoiding of offence: as if they had said: It is the Lords commandement that ye offend not a weake brother. Yce can not eate things offered to images, strangled and bloud, but that the weake brethren shall be offended. Therefore we command you in the word of the Lord, that ye eate not with offence. And that the Apostles had respect to the same thing, Paul himselfe is a very good witness, which writeth thus, verily none otherwise than according to the meaning of the Councell: Concerning meates that are offered to idols, we know that the idol is nothing. But some with confidence of the Idol, do eate it as offered to idols, and their confidence, forasmuch as it is weake, is defiled. See that your libertie be not made an offence to the weake. He that shall have well weighed these things, shall not afterward be deceived with such a false colour as they make, that pretend the apostles for defence of their tyranny, as though the apostles had begun with their decree to break the libertie of the Church. But, that they may not be able to escape, but be driven even with their owne confition to allow this solution, let them anwre me, by what right they were so bolde to abrogate the same decree. Because there was no more perill of those offences and defecions: which the Apostles meant to provide for, and they know that the lawe was to be weighed by the end thereof. Forasmuch as therefore this lawe was made in respect of charitie, there is nothing preferred in it, but so much as pertained to charity. When they confesse that the transgressing of this lawe is nothing but a breaking of charitie, do they not therewithall acknowledge, that it is not a forged addition to the law of God, but a natural and simple applance to the times and manners wherunto it was directed?
23 But although such lawses be a hundred times vnust & injurious vnto vs,yet they affirme that they must be heard without exception: for they say that this is not here intended, that we should consent to errors, but only that being subiects we should beare the hard commandements of our gouernours, which it is not our partes to refuse. But here also the Lord very well refieth them with the truth of his word, and deliuereth vs out of such bondage into the libertie, which he hath purchased for vs with his holy bloud, the beneite whereof hee hath more than once confirmed with his word. For that is not here only intended (as they maliciously feyne) that we should suffer some grievous oppreßsion in our bodie, but that our consciences being spoiled of their libertie that is of the beneite of the bloud of Christ, shoulde bee seruillye tormented. Howbeit let vs passe over this also, as though it made little to the matter. But of how great importance doe we thinke it is, that the Lordes kingdome is taken away from him, which he claimeth to himselfe with so great severitie? But it is taken away fo oft as he is worshippd with the lawes of mens inuentiones, whereas he will be holden for the onely lawmaker of his owne worship. And least any man shoulde thinke it to be a matter of nothing, let vs heare how much the Lord esteemeth it. Because (faith he) this people hath feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men: behold I will afflonish them with a great and woonderous miracle. For wifedome shall perifh from the wife men thereof, and understanding shall depart from the elders. In another place, They worshipt me in vaine, teaching doctrines, the commandements of men. And truly whereas the children of Israel defiled themselves with many idolatries, the cause of all that euill is ascribed to this vnclean mixture, that tranfegressing the commandements of God, they have forg'd new worships. And therefore the holy history rehearseth that the new strangers that had been transplanted by the king of Babylon to inhabitate Samaria, were torne in pieces and consumed of wilde beasts, because they knew not the judgements or statues of the God of that land. Although they had nothing offended in the Ceremonies, yet God would e not have allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meantime he ceased not to take vengeance of the desluing of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Whereupon it is afterward said, that they being made afraid with that punishment, received the Ceremonies prescribed in the law: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twice repeated that they did fear him and did not feare him. Whereupon we gather, that the part of reuerence which is given to him, consisteth in this, while in worshipping him we simply follow what he commandeth with mingling none of our inuentiones. And therefore the godly kings are oftentimes praifed, because they did according to all the commandements, and declined not to the right hand nor to the left. I goe yet further: although in some fained worshipping ther does not openly appeare vngodlineffe, yet it is severely condemned of the holy Ghoft, so soon as men depart from the commandement of God. The Altar of Abba, the paterne whereof was brought out of Samaria, might have seemed to increase the garnishtement of the temple, whereas his deuife was to offer Sacrifices thereupon to God onely, which he should doe more honourably than vpon the first and olde Altar: yet we fee how the spirite detection that boldnesse, for none other cause but for that the inuentiones of men in the worshipping of God are vnclean corruptions. And how much more clearly the will of God is opened vnto vs, so much the leffe excufable is our frowardnesse to attempt any thing. And therefore woorthyly with this circumstance the crime of Manasseh is inforced, for that he built a new Altar in Ierusalem, of which God had pronounced, I will there set my name, because the authoritie of God is now as it were of set purpose refusd. 24 Many doe maruell why God so sharply threateneth that he will doe things to be wonderd at to the people of whom he was worshippd with the commandements of men, and pronounceth that he is worshippd in vaine with the precepts of men, men. But if they considered, what it is in the cause of religion, that is to say of heavenly wisdom, to hang upon the only mouth of God, they would there withall fee, that it is no slender reason why God so abhorreth such pernecce services, that are done to him according to the lust of mans wit. For although they that obey such lawes for the worshipping of God, have a certain shew of humilitie in this their obedience, yet they are not humble before God, to whom they proscribe the same lawes which they themselves doe keepe. This is the reason why Paul will eth vs so diligently to beware, that we be not deuerted by the traditions of men, and that which he calleth ethelotbreusian, that is, Will worship invented of men beside the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wisdom, and all mens wisdom must be foolish vs to that, we may suffer him alone to be wise. Which way they keepe not which doe study with pettie obseruations fained by the will of men to commend themselves vs to him, and dothuff vs to him as it were against his will a transgressing obedience toward him, which is in deed giuen to men. As it hath beene done both in many ages heretofore, and in the time within our owne remembrance, and is also at this day done in those places where the authoritie of the creature is more esteemed than of the creator: where religion (if yet the same be worthie to be called religion) is defiled with more and more vainishous superstitions, than ever was any Paynne wickednes. For what could the wit of men breede but all things carnall and foolish and such as truely reseeme their authors?

25 Whereas also the Patrons of superstitions allready, that Samuel sacrific’d in Ramathia, and although the same was done beside the lawes, yet it pleased God: the solution is easie, that it was not a certaine second altar to set against the one only altar: but because the place was not yet appointed for the arke of the covenante, he appointed the towne where he dwelled for sacrifices, as the most conuenient place. Truly the mind of the holy prophet was not to make any innovacion in holy things, whereas God had straitly forbidden any thing to be added or minimized. As for the example of Menahia, I say that it was an extraordinarie and singular case. He being a private man offered sacrifices to God and not without the allowance of God: verily because he interpreted it not of a rash motion of his owne minde, but by a heauenly insituation. But how much the Lord abhorreth those things that men deuise of them selves to worship him withall, another not inferior to Menahia Gedeon is a notable example, whose Ephod turned to destruction not only to him and his familie, but to the whole people. Finally, every new found invention, wherewith men couet to worship God, is nothing else but a dehilling of true holines.

26 Why then (say they) did Christ will that those intollerable burdens should be borne, which the Scribes and Pharisees bound upon men? But why in another place did the same Christ will that men should beware of the leauen of the Pharisees: calling leaven (as Matthew the Evangelist expoundeth it) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the pureoffe of the word of God. What would we have more plaine, than that we be commanded to flee and beware of all their doctrine? Whereby it is made most certaine vs, that in the other place also the Lord willed not, that the confidences of his should be vexed with the Pharisees owne traditions. And the verry words, if they be not wrested, found of no such thing. For the Lord purpoising there to inueue sharly against the manners of the Pharisees, did first simply instruct them that heard him, that although they sawe nothing in their life meete for them to follow, yet they should not cease to do those things which they taught in words, while they lye in the chaire of Moses, that is, to declare the lawe. Therefore he meant nothing els but to provide that the common people should not with the evil examples of the teachers be brought to deuise the doctrine. But for as much as many are nothing at all moued with reasons, but alway require authority, I will alleage Augustines words, in which the very same thing is spoken. The Lords in Ioh, Tract. 46.
Cap. 10. Of the outwarde meanes

Theepefold hath governours, some faithfull, and some hirelings. The governours that are faithfull, are true Pastors; but heare ye, that the hirelings also are necessarie: for many in the Church following earthly profits, doe preach Christ, and by them the voice of Christ is heard: and the theepe doe follow, not a hireling, but a Pastor by the meanes of a hireling. Heare yee that hirelings are thowed by the Lord himselfe. The Scribes (faith he) and the Pharisees sit in the chaire of Moses. Doe yee those things that they say, but doe not those things that they doe. What other thing saide he, but heare the voice of the Pastor by the hirelings? For in sitting in the chaire they teach the lawe of God: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, hear ye not, doe ye not. This faith Augustine.

27 But whereas many unskilfull men, when they heare that conferences are wickedly bounde and God worshipped in vainse with the traditions of men, doe at once blot out altogether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is set in frame: therefore it is convenient also to meete with their error: Verily in this point it is easy to be deceived, because at the first sight it doth not by and by appeare what difference is betwene the one sort and the other. But I will so plainly in fewe words set out the whole matter, that the likenesse may deceive no man. First let vs hold this, that if we see in every fellowship of men some policie to be necessarie, that may serve to nourish common peace, and to retaine concord: if we see that in the doinge of things there is alway some orderly forme, which is behoouefull for publike honestie and for very humanitie not to be refuseth: the same ought chiefly to be observed in Churches, which are both best maintained by a well framed disposi- tion of all things, and without agreement are no Churches at all. Therefore if we will have the saffetie of the Church well provideth for, we must altogether diligently procure that which Paul commanded, that all things be done comely and according to order. But forasmuch as there is so great diversitie in the manners of men, so great variety in minde, so great disagreement in judgementes and wittes: neither is there any policie fited: fited enough, vntil it be established by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vlage can be observed without a certaine appointed forme: Therefore we are so farre off from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpose, that we affirme that when those be taken away, Churches are dissolved from their finenes, and vertue deformed and scattered abroad. For this which Paul requireth, that all things be done decently and in order, cannot be had, vntil the order it selfe and comelinesse be established, with observations adjoyned as with certaine bonds. But this onely thing is alway to be excepted in those observations, that they be not either beleueth to be necessarie to salvation, and so binde conveiences with religion, or be applied to the worshipping of God, and so godlinesse be re- posed in them.

28 We have therefore a very good and most faithfull marke, which putteth difference betweene those wicked ordinances, by which we have said that true religion is darkened & conferences subuerred, and the lawfull observations of the Church: if we remember that the lawfull observations tend alway to one of these two things or to both together, that in the holy assemblie of the faithfull all things be done comely and with such dignitie as becometh: and that the very common fellowship of men should be kept in order as it were by certaine bonds of humanitie and moderation. For when it is once understood that the Law is made for publike honesties sake, the superstition is now taken away, into which they fall that measure the worshipping of God by the intenotions of men. Againe when it is known that it pertaineth to common vse, then that false opinion of bondes and necesitie is overthrown, which did make a great terror into conferences, when traditions were thought necessarie to salvation. For herein is nothing required but that charitie should with common dutefull doinge be nourished among vs. But it is good yet to define define more plainly, what is comprehended under that comeliness which Paul commendeth, and also what under order. The end of comeliness is, partly that when such Ceremonies are used as may procure a reverence to holy things, we may by such helps be stirred up to godliness: partly also that the modestie and grasse which ought to be seen in all honest doings may therein principally appeare. In order to this is the first point, that they which governe may know the rule and lawe to rule well: and the people which are governed may bee accustomed to obeying of God, and to right discipline: Then, that the state of the Church being well framed, peace and quietnesse may be provided for.

29 Therefore we shall not say that comeliness is, wherein shall be nothing but vaine delection: such as we see in that player like apparel, which the Papites vse in their ceremonies, where appeareth nothing else, but an vnprofitable visor of gaynesse, and excisse without fruit. But we shall account that to be comelinesse which shall so be meete for the reverence of holy mysteries, that it be a fit exercice to godliness, or at the least such as shall vse to convenient garnishing for the celebrating thereof: and the same not without fruit, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with how great modestie, religioufnesse and reverence, they ought to handle holy things. Now, that ceremonies may be exercices of godlinessse, it is necessarie that they lead vs the straight way to Christ. Likewise we may not say that order consisteth in those trifling pomps that have nothing else than a vanishing gaynesse: but that it standeth in such an orderly framing as may take away all confusion, barbarousnesse, obstinacie, and all strife and disension. Of the first sort are these examples in Paul: that prophane banketings should not be mingled with the holy Supper of the Lord: that women should not come abroad, but covered: and many other which we have in common vse: as this, that we pray kneeling and bare headed: that we minister the Lords Sacraments not vncleanly, but with some dignitie: that in the burying of the dead we vse some honest shew: and other things that are of the same forme. Of the other kind are the hours appointed for publique prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of mysteries: at Sermons, quietnes and silence, places appointed, singing together of Hymnes, dates prefixed for celebrating of the Lords Supper, that Paul forbidde that women should teach in the Church, and such like. But specially those things that concerne discipline, as the teaching of the Catechisme, the ceremonies of the Church, excommunication, fastings, and such as may be reckoned in the same number. So all the constitutions of the Church, which we receive for holy and wholesome, we may referre to two chiefe titles: for some pertaine to rites, and ceremonies, and the other to discipline and peace.

30 But because here is peril, least on the one side the false bishops should thereby catch a pretence to excuse their wicked and tyrannous lawes, and least on the other side there be some men too farswell: which admonished with the fore and evils doe leave no place to lawes be they never so holie: here it is good to protest, that I allow only those ordinances of men which be both grounded upon the authority of God, and taken out of the Scripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Letvs take for an example the kneeling which is vned in time of common prayer. It is demanded, whether it be a tradition of man, which every man may lawfully refuse or neglect, I say that it is so of men, that it is also of God. It is of God, in respect that it is a part of that comeliness, the care and keeping whereof is commended unto vs by the Apostle: it is of men, in respect that it specially betokeneth that which had in generall rather been pointed to, than declared. By this one example we may judge, what is to be thought of that whole kind: verily because the Lord hath in his holy Oracles both faithfully contained and clearly set forth both the whole summe of true righteousnes, and all the partes of the worshipping of his divine Majestie, and whatsoever was necessarie to salvation: therefore in these things he is onely to be heard as our Schoole.

Schoolemaster. But because in outward discipline & Ceremonies his will was not to prescribe each thing particularly what we ought to follow (because he foresaw this to hang upon the state of times, and did not think one forme to be fit for all ages) herein we must flee to those general rules which he hath giuen, that thereby all those things should be tried which the necessity of the Church shall require to bee commanded for order and comeliness. Finally, Forasmuch as hee hath therefore taught nothing expressly, because these things both are not necessarie to salvation, and according to the manners of every nation and age ought diversely to be applied to the edifying of the Church: therefore as the profite of the Church shall require, it shall be convenient as well to change and abrogate those that be vset, as to institute newe. I grant indeed, that we ought not rashly, nor oft, nor for light causes to run to innovation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie shall best judge: which if we will suffer to be the gouernne, all shall be safe.

31 Now it is the dutie of Christian people, to keepe such things as have beene ordained according to this rule, with a free conscience and without any superstition, but yet with a godly & eafe readines to obey, not to despise them, not to passe them over with careless negligence: so farre is it off, that they ought by pride and obstinacie openly to break them. What manner of libertie of conscience (wilt thou saie) may there be in so great obstination and warineffe? Yea, it shall stand excellent the wise when we shall consider, that they are not medstfull & perpetual flared lawes, whereunto we be bounde, but outward instruments for the weakenesse of men: which although we doe not all neede, yet we doe all vse them, because we are mutuallie bounde to one another, to nourish charitie among vs. This we may reknowledge in the examples above rehearsed. What? Doth religion stand in a womens veile, that it is not lawfull to goe out of dores with her head vncovered? Is that holie decree of his concerning silence, such as cannot be broken without most hainous offence? Is there any mysterie in keeling, or in burying of a dead carcasse, that may not be omitted without sinne? No, For if a woman neede, for the helping of her neighbour, to make such haste as may not suffer her to couer her head, she offended not if she runne thither with her head vncovered. And it may sometime befall that it may be no lesse convenient for her to speake, than at another time to holde her peace. And there is no cause to the contrarie, but that he which by reason of disease cannot bow his knees may pray standing. Finally, it is better to bury a dead man speedily in time, than when they lacke a winding sheet, or when there be not men present to conuoy him, to carrie till he be vnburied. But nevertheless in these things there is somewhat which the maner and ordinances of the coutrie, and finally very natural beneffe, and the rule of modestie appointeth to bee done or avoided: wherein if a man sware any thing from them, by vnwariness, or forgetfulness, there is no crime committed: but if upon contempt, such stubbornesse is to be disallowed. Likewise the daies themselfes, which they be, and the houres, and how the places be builded, and what Psalmes be sung vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is meete that there be both certaine daies, and appointed houres, and a place fit to receive all, if there be regarde had of the preperation of peace. For how great an occasion of brawlings should the confusion of these things be, if it were lawfull for eyuer man as hee list, to change those things that belong to common faire: forasmuch as it will never come to passe that one same thing shall please all men, if things be left as it were in the midst to the choice of every man? If any man do carpe against vs, and will, herein bee more wife than he ought; let him fee himselfe: by what reason he can defend his owne pretences to the Lord. As for vs, this saying of Paul ought to satisfie vs, that we have not an vse to contend, nor the Churches of God.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to bee intemperate, that no error creepe in, that may corrupt or obscure this pure vse. Which shall be obtained, if all obser-
The xiv. Chapter.

Of the iurisdiclion of the Church, and the abuse thereof, such as is seen in the Papacie.

Now remaineth the third part of the power of the Church, yea and the chiefe part in a well ordered state, which we have said to consist in jurisdiction. The whole jurisdiction of the Church pertained to the discipline of manners, of which we shall inlarge by and by. For as much as no citie or no towne can stand without magistrate and policie: so the Church of God (as I have already taught, but now I am compelled to repeat it again) needeth her certaine spiritual policie: but such as is vitterly feuered from the civil policie, and doth so nothing hinder or minish it, that it rather doth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of jurisdiction shall in a summe be nothing else but an order framed for the preterution of spiritual policie. To this ende from the beginning were ordained judiciall orders in Churches, which might vs examination of manners, correct vices and exercise the office of the keies. This order Paul speaketh of in the Epistle to the Corinthians, when he nameth governments. Againe, to the Romanes, when he faith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefullness. For he speaketh not to the magistrates, (for at that time there were no chritian magistrates) but to them that were joynded with the Pastors for the spiritual government of the Church. Also in the Epistle to Timothee, he maketh two forces of Elders: some, that labor in the word: other some, that doe not vs the preaching of the word, and yet do rule well. By this latter force it is no doubt that he meaneth them that were appointed to looke vnto manners, and to the whole vs of the keies. For this power, of which wee nowe speake, hangeth wholly vpon the keies which Christ gave to the Church, in the xvii. Chapter of Matthew: where he commandeth, that they should be sharply admonished in the name of the whole Church, that have deailed private monitions: but if they goe forwarde in their obstinacie, he teacheth that they should be put out of the fellowship of the faithful. But these monitions and corrections cannot bee without knowledge of the cause: therefore there needeth both

The use of a pollicie in the Church different from that which is called the antiquity of ecclesiastical judgements: the difference of authoritie given to the Church in the 18. of Matthew, from that which is given in the 16. of Matthew, and the 21. of John.

Cap. 11. Of the outward meanes

both some judgement and order. Wherefore vnlesst we will make voide the promife of the kites, and take vterly away excommunication, solemn monitions, and all such things whatsoever they be: we must needs give to the Church some jurisdiction. Lest the readers marke that that place incurreth not of the general authority of doctrine, as in the xvj. Chapter of Matthew, and the xxii. of John: but that the power of the Synagogue is for the time to come transferred to the flocke of Christ. Vnsto that day the Jews had their order of governing, which Christ stablifheth in his Church, and that with great penaltie, so much as concerneth the pure institution of it. For so it behooued, for as much as otherwise the judgement of an vnoble and vnregarded congregation might be despifed of rash and proude men. And that it should not encumber the readers, that Christ doth in the same words expresse things somewhat differing one from the other, it shall be profitable to diloue this doubt. There be therefore two places, that speake of binding and loosing. The one is in the xvj.
Chapter of Matthew, where Christ, after that he had promised that he would giue to Peter the kites of the kingdom of heauen, immediately addeth, that whatsoever he shall bind or loose in earth, shall be confirmed in heauen. In which words he meaneth none other thing, than lie doth by other wordes in John, when sending his disciples to preach, after that he had breathed upon them he saide: whose finnes yee forgive, they shall be forgiven: and whose yee retaine they shall be retained in heauen. I will bring an exposition not futile, not enforced, not wrested: but naturally, flowing, and offering it felle. This commandement of forgiving and retaining finnes, and that promise of binding and loosing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the minifterie of the word: which when the Lord committed to the Apopostles, he did therewith also arm them with this office of binding and loosing. For what is the summary of the Gospell, but that we all being bondservants of finne and of death, are loosed and made free by the redemption that is in Christ Iefus: and that they which do not receive nor acknowledge Christ their deliverer and redeemer, are damned and adjinced to everlafting bonds? When the Lorde deliered this message to his Apostles, to be carried into all nations: to approue that it was his owne and proceeding from himselfe, he honored it with this noble testimonie: and that to the singular strengthening both of the Apostles themselues, and of all those to whom it should come. It behooued that the Apostles shoude have asteadfast and found certaintie of their preaching, which they should not onely execute with in-fine labours, cares, troubles and dangers, but also at the last seale it with their blood.
That they might (I say) knowe the same to be not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behooued that in so great carefullness, in so great hardnesse of things, and in so great dangers, they should be perswaded that they did the business of God:
that when all the world withstood them, and fought against them, they should knowe that God stood on their side: that having not Christ the auoucher of their doctrine present by sight in earth, they should understand him to be in heauen, to confirme the truth of the doctrine which he had deliered them. It behooued againe that it should also be most certainly prooued by testimonie to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Gospell was not the worde of the Apostles, but of God himselfe: not a voice bred in earth, but come downe from heauen. For these things, the forgivinge of finnes, the promife of everlafting life, the message of saluation, cannot bee in the power of man. Therefore Christ hath testified, that in the preaching of the Gospell there is nothing of the Apostles, but the onely minifterie: that it was his himselfe that spake and promis d all things by their mouthes as by instruments: and therefore that the forgivinge of finnes which they preached, was the true promife of God: and the damnation which they pronounced, was the certaine judgement of God. But this testifying is given to all ages, and remaineth in force, to certify and assure all men, that the worde of the Gospell, by what man soeuer it bee preached, as the verie sentence of God, published at the soueraigne judgement seate, written in the booke of life, raised, firme and fixed in heaven. Thus we see that in those places the power of the keys is nothing but the preaching of the Gospell: and that it is not so much a power as a ministrie, if we have respect to men. For Christ hath not giuen this power properly to men, but to his owne worde, whereof he hath made men ministers.

2. The other place which wee haue faide to be concerning the power of binding and loosing, is in the xvij. chapter of Matthew, where Christ saith: If anie brother heare not the Church, let him be to thee as a heathen man or a publicane. Verily I say vnto you: whatsoever ye binde vpon earth, shall be bound also in heaven; whatsoever ye looke shall be loosed. This place is not altogether like the first, but is a little otherwise to be understood. But I doe not so make them diuerse,that they haue not great affinitie together. This first point is like in both, that either of them is a general sentence: that in both there is alway all one power of binding & loosing, namely by the word of God, all one commandement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that the first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the ministers of the word do execute: this latter place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the church. The Church bindeth, whom she excommunicateth, not that she throweth him into perpetual ruine and desparation, but because the condemneth his life & manners, & vntles he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She looseth whom she receiueteth into communion: because she doth make him as it were partaker of the vittie which she hath in Christ Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinatly despise the judgemenst of the church, or little regard that he is condemned by the consenting voyces of the faithful: the Lord williseth that such judgement of the faithful is nothing else but a publishling of his owne sentence: and that whatsoever they do in earth is confirmed in heaven. For they have the word of God, whereby they may condene the peruerse: they haue the worde, whereby they may receive the repentant into grace. And they can not err, nor differ from the judgement of God: because they judge not but after the law of God, which is not an uncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy will of God, and a heavenly oracle. Out of these two places, which I thinke I have both briefly familiarie and nuly expounded, those distant men without difference as they be caried with their own giddines, go about to establish sometime confession, sometime excommunication, sometime jurisdiction, sometime the power to make lawes, sometime pardons. But the first place they allege to stablishe the supremacy of the Sea of Rome: they can so wel skill to fit their keys to all lockes and doores, that a man may say they haue practisde finishes craft all their life.

3. For whereas many thinke that those things endured but for a time, when the Magistrates were yet strangers from the profission of our religion: they are deceived in this,that they consider not: how great difference and what manner of vnlikenesse there is of the Ecclesiasticall and civil power. For the Church hath not the power of the sword to punish or restraine, no empire to command, no prison, no other penes which the magistrate is wont to lay vpon men. Again, it tendeth not to this end, that he that hath sinned should be punished against his will, but should with willing chastisement proffesse his repentance. Therefore there is a farre dierse order: because neither doth the Church take to it selfe anything which properly belongeth to the Magistrate, nor the magistrate can execute that which the Church doth. This shall be made plainer by an example. Is any man drunke? In a well ordered state prison shall be his punishment. Hath he committed fornication? He shall have like, or rather greater punishment. So shall both the lawes, and the magistrate, and outward judgemenst be satisfied: But it may be that he shall give no signification of repentance, but rather murmur, and grudge against it. Shall the Church in this case do nothing?
Cap. 11.

Of the outward meanes

But such cannot be received to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Christ and his holy institution. And reason requirith this, that he which offendeth the church with an evil example, should with solemn declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raised. The reason which they bring that are of contrary opinion, is too cold: Christ say they committed these doings to the Church, when there was no magistrate to execute them. But it happeneth often times that the magistrate is more negligent, yea sometime peraduenture that himselfe is to be chastised, which happened to the Emperor Theodosius. There may beside this as much be told of the ministrer of the word. Now therefore after their sentence, let Pastors cease to blame manifest wicked doings, and them cease to chide, to reproove, to rebuke, for there bee Christian magistrates, which ought to correct these things with the law and with the sword. But as the magistrate ought by punishing, and by restraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: So likewise the minister of the word for his part ought to helpe the magistrate that there may not so many offend. So ought their workings to be conoynd that the one may be a helpe, not a hinderance to the other.

4. And truly if a man more necerly wee the words of Christ, he shall easily perceive that in these places, is described a stayed state, and a perpetual order of the Church, not such as endureth but for a time. For it is not meete that we should accuse them to the Magistrate, that will not obey our monitions: which yet should be necessarie if the magistrate succeeded into the office of the Church. What is this promise? Shall we say that it is a promise of one or a few yeres? Verily verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye binde on earth. Moreouer Christ did here institute no new thing, but followed the custome alway observed in the ancient Church of his owne nation: whereby he signified that the Church cannot want the spiritual jurisdiction, which had bin from the beginning. And this hath bin confirmed by the consent of all times. For when Emperors and magistrates began to professe Christ, the spiritual jurisdiction was not by and by abolished: but only to ordered, that it should diminish nothing of the civil jurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrate, if he be godly, will not exempt himselfe from the common subjection of the children of God, whereof it is not the last part to submit himselfe to the church, judging by the word of God: So far it is off, that he ought to take away that order of judgment. For what is more honorable (faith Ambrose) for the Emperour than to be called the son of the church? For a good Emperor is within the church, not above the church. Therefore they, which to honor the magistrate do spoile the church of his power, do not only with false exposition corrupt the sentence of Christ, but also do not tenderly condemne so many holy bishops which haue bin from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vnderhaued the honor and office of the magistrate.

5. But on the other side it is good to see this, what was in olde time the true use of the jurisdiction of the Church, and how great abuse is crept in, that we may know what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquity, if we will overthrow the kingdom of Antichrist, and yet the true kingdom of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shot at, that offences be prevented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may be abolished. In the use two things are to be considered: first, that this spiritual power be altogether seperated from the power of the sword: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull assembly. Both these things were obserued in the purer Church. For the holy bishops did not exercise their power with fines, or imprisonments, or other civil punishments: but they vsed the only word of the Lord, as they ought to do. For the fourest revenge, and as it were the vtermost thunderbolt of the Church is excommunication, which is not vsed but in necessitie. But this requireth neither force nor strong hande, but is content with the power of the word of God. Finally, the jurisdiction of the old Church was nothing elie
But such authority (as we have declared) was not in the power of one man, to doe every thing according to his owne will; but in the power of the assembly of the Elders, which was the same thing in the Church that a Senate is in a Citie. Cyprian, when he make mention by whom it was exercised in his time, saith to ioyne the whole Cleargie with the Bishop. But in another place also he saith, that the whole Cleargie so governed, that in the mean time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus he writeth: Since the beginning of my Bishoprump I have determined to do nothing without the counsell of the Cleargie and content of the people. But this was the common & usuall manner, that the jurisdiction of the church should be exercised by a Senate of Elders: of whom (as I have said) there were two sortes: For some were ordered to teaching, & other some were only Judges of manners. By little and little this institution grew out of kinde from the first beginning of it: so that even in the time of Ambrose only Clearkes were Judges in Ecclesiasticall judgements. Which thing he himselfe complaineth of in these words: The old Synagogue (faith he) and since that time the Church hath had Elders, without whole counsell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is growne out of vs, I know not, vnlesse peraduenture by the slownes of men or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone would be thought to be somewhat. We see how much the holy man is displeased, that any thing of the better state is decayed, when notwithstanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the least tolerable. What then would he doe if he saw these deformed ruines that shew almost no signe of the old building? What bewailing would he vs? First, against lawe and right, the Bishop hath claimed to himselfe alone, that which was given to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Consull, driving out the Senate, should take the Empire upon himselfe alone. But as he is above the rest in honour, so in the whole assembly is more authority than in one man. Therefore it was too wicked a deed, that one man, remouing the common power to himselfe, hath both opened an entry to tyrannous lust, and hath taken from the Church that which belonged unto her, and hath suppressed and put away the assembly ordered by the Spirite of Christ.

But (as of one cuill alwaye growth another) Bishops disdaining it as a thing vnworthy of their care, have committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officialis to serve that roome: I do not yet speake what kind of men they be, but onely this I say, that they nothing differ from sprophane Judges. And yet they still call it a spiritual jurisdiction, where men contend about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more cuill, with what face dare they call a brawling Court the judgement of the Church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doth a poore man owe a little money? he is cited: if hee appear, he is condemned. When he is condemned, if he do not satisfie he is monished: after the second monition they proceede one steppe towards excommunication: if he appeare not, he is monished to come and yeeld himselfe to judgement: if he then make delay, he is monished, and by and by excommunicate. I beseech you, what is there any thing like either to the institution of Christ, or to the auantian manner, or to an Ecclesiastical order? But there is also correction of vices. But how? verily they not onely suffer but with secret allowance doe after a ceraine manner cherith and confirme adulteries, wantonnes, drunkenesse and such kind of mischeuous doings: and that not only in the common people, but also in the clear-gie themselves. Of many they call a few before them, either that they should not seeme flouthful in winking at them, or that they may milke out some money. I speake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, and sacrileges that are gathered thereby, I speake not what manner of men are for the most part chosen to this office. This is enough and too much, that when the Romanists doe boast that their jurisdiccon is spiritual, it is easie to shewe that there is nothing more contrary to the order instituted of Christ, and that it hath no more likenesse to the ancient custome than darkness hath to light.

Although we haue not spoken all things that might be alleaged for this purpoe, and those things that we haue spoken of are knitte vp in fewe words: yet I trust that we haue solved it out, that there is nowe no more caule why any man should doubt, that the spiritual power whereof the Pope with all his kynsdome prouudly glorieth, is wicked against God, & an vnjust tyranny over his people. Vnder the name of spiritual power I comprehend both boldnesse in framing new doctrines, wherein they haue turned away the foly people from the naturall puresse of the word of God, and the wicked traditions wherewith they haue snared them, and also the false ecclesiastical iurisdiccon which they execute by Suffrages and Officiale. For if we graunt vnto Christ a kynsdome among vs, it is not possible but that all this kinde of dominion must immediatly be ouerthrown and fall downe. As for the power of the sword which they also giue to themselves, because it is not exercized upon coniences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to entreate of it. In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alwaye like themselves, verily nothing lesse than that which they would be taken for, that is to say, Pastors of the Church. Neither doe I blame the peculiar faults of men, but the common wickednes of the whole order, yea the very pestilence of the order: for as much as it is thought that the same should bee maimed, yenes it be gloriousely set forth with wealth and proud titles. If we require the authoritie of Christ concerning this matter, it is no doubt but that his mind was to debar the ministers of his word from euill dominion and earthlie government, when he said, The kings of the Gentiles vse rule over them: but ye shall not so. For he signifieth not onely that the office of Pastor is distinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be things so seuered, that they cannot meete together in one man. For whereas Moses did vse both the offices together: first that was done by a rare miracle: agayne, it was but for a time till things were better set in order. But when a certaine forme was once prescribed of God, the euill government was left vnto him, and he was commanded to assign the priesthood to his brother. And worthy. For it is aboue nature, that one man should suffice to bear both burdens. And this hath in all ages been diligently observed in the Church. And there was never any of the Bishops, so long as the true forme of the church endured, that once thought of vnder双重 the power of the sword: so that this was a common proverbe in the time of Ambrose, that Emperors rather coveted the priesthood, than priests the empire. For this which he afterward saith, was emprinted in the minds of all men, that palaces pertained to the Emperor, and Churches to the Priest.

9 But since that way hath been devised, whereby Bishops might hold the title of honor and riches of their office without burden or care: least they should be left altogether idle, the power of the sword was given them, or rather they did by usurpation take it upon themselves. By what colour will they defend this themselves? Was this the duty of Bishops to wrap themselves with judicial hearing of causes, with the governments of Cities and Provinces, and through large circuits to meddle in businesses unappertaining to them: which have so much works and businesses in their own office, that if they were wholly and continually occupied in it, and were withdrawn with no callings away from it, yet they were scarcely able to satisfy it? But (such as is their waywardness) they stick not to boast, that by this means the Church doth florish according to her worthines, and that they themselves in the mean time are not too much drawn away from the duties of their vocation. As touching the chief point: if this be a comely ornament of the holy office, that they be advanced to such height, that the highest Monarchies may stand in fear of them: then they have cause to quarrel with Christ, which hath in such sort grievously pinched their honor. For, at least in their opinion what could have been spoken more dishonorably than those words: The Kings of the Gentiles and Princes bear rule over them, but you shall not so? Matt.20.25.

And yet he laid no harder Law upon his servants than he first laid and received upon himselfe. Who (faith he) hath made me a Judge or divider among you? We see that he plainly putth away from himselfe the office of judging, which hee would not doe if it were a thing agreeing with his office: will not the servants suffer themselves to be brought into that order, whereunto the Lord hath yeelded himselfe subject? As for the other point, I would to God they could so prooue it in experience as it is safe to speake it. But forasmuch as the Apostles thought it not good, to leave the word of God and minister at tables: thereby, because they will not be taught, they are condemned; that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good Bishop and a good Prince. For if they (which according to the largenes of the gits where with they were endued, were able to satisfie no and greater cares than any men that have been borne since them) have yet confessed that they cannot at once apply the ministerie both of the word and of tables, but that they should faint under the burden: how could them that are of no valor in comparison of the Apostles a hundred fold excell the industrie of the Apostles? Truely, to attempt it was a point of most shamelesse and too presumptuous boldnes: yet we see that it hath beene attempted: but with what success, it is evident. For it could not other wise come to passe, but that forsaking their owne office they should remoue into other mens charge.

10 And it is no doubt but that of small beginning they have by little and little grown to so great encreafe. For it was not possible that they should at the first step climb so high. But sometime with subtletie and crooked craftie they privie advanced themselves, so as no man could for see that it would come to passe till it was done: sometime when occasion serued they did by terror and threatnings wringing from Princes some augmentation of their power: sometime when they faile Princes not hard laced to glue, they abused their fond and vnadvised gentlenesse. In olden time if any controversie happened, the godly, to escape the necessitie of going to law, committed the arbitrement to the Bishop, because they doubted not his vp-rightness. With such arbitrements the olde Bishops were oftentimes encombr'd, which in deed greatly displeased them (as Augustine in one place testifieth) but least the parties should runne to contentious laying, they did though against their wills take that encumbrance upon them. These men haue of voluntarie arbitrements, which were altogether differing from the noise of judiciall courtesies, made an ordinarie jurisdiction. In a little while after when cities & countries were troubled with divers hard distresses, they referrd to the protection of Bishops, to be safeguarded by their faithfull love: the Bishops by museulie syncly, of protectors made them-

Seizes Lords. Yea, and it cannot be denied that they have gotten the possession of a great part by violent seditions partaking. As for the Princes, that willingly gave jurisdiction to bishops, they were by divers affections seised thereof. But admitting that their gentleness had some flaw of godliness: yet with this their wrongfull liberalitie they did not rise well prouide for the profit of the Church, whose ancient and true discipline they haue so corrupted, yea (to say truth) have utterly abolished. But those bishops that have abused such goodness of princes to their owne commoditie, haue by the using of this one example enough and too much testified that they are not bishops. For if they had had any sparkel of an Apostolike spirit, they would without doubt have anwered out of the mouth of Paul: the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but spiritual. But they being rauished with blind greedines, haue destroyed both themselves, their successors, and the Church.

At length the bishop of Rome not contented with meane Lordships, first laide hand vpon kingdoms, and afterward vpon the verie Empire. And that he may with some colour whatsoever he retain the possession gotten by meere robbery, he sometime boasteth that he hath it by the law of God, he sometime pretendeth the gift of Constantine, sometime some other title. First I answer with Bernard: Admit that he do by any other reason whatsoever, claim this vnto him, yet he hath it not by apostolike right. For Peter could not giue that which he had not: but he gave to his successors that which he had, the care of Churches. But when the Lord and master, that he is not appointed judge betweene two, a suertia and scholler ought not to thinke神州 if he be not judge of all men. But Bernard speaketh of euill judgements. For he addeth: Therefore your power is not in crimes, not in possessions: because for those & not for these ye haue received the leies of the kingdome of heaven. For which seemingly to the the greater dignitie to forgive sinnes, or to daude landes? There is no comparison. These base and earthly things haue Kings and Princes of the eart their judges. Why do ye invade the bounds of other &c. Again, Thou art made a superour: (he speaketh to Pope Eugenius) but whereunto? Not to beare Lordship, I think. Therefore how much fonder we think of our seizes, let vs remember that there is a ministery laid vpon us, not a lordship giuen vs. Learne that thou haft need of a weede-booke not of a leeter, that thou maist do the work of a Prophet. Again, it is plaine: Lordship is forbidden to the Apostles. Go thou therefore, & presume to usurpe thy self either being a Lord, an Apostelship: or being an Apostle, a Lordship. And by & by after: the forme of an Apostelship this is, Lordship is forbidden them, ministery is bidden them. Whereas these things are so spoken of a man, that it is cuitent to all men that the very truth speaketh them, yea whereas the very thing it self is manifest without all words: yet the Bishop of Rome was not ashamed in the Counsell at Orleance to decree that the supreme power of both the swords belong to him by the lawe of God.

12. As for the gift of Constantine, they that be but meanly practied in the histories of those times need not to be taught how much this is not oney fabulous, but also to be laughe at. But to passe our histories, Gregory himselfe is both a sufficient and most full witness herof. For so oft as he speaketh of the Emperor, he calleth him most noble Lord, & himselfe his unworthy servant. Again, in another place: But let not our Lord by the earthly power be the sooner angry with the priests: but with excellent consideration, for his false whose servents they be, let him so rule order they, that he also giue them due reverence. We see how in common subjection he would be accounted as one of the people. For he there pleadeth not any other mans cause, but his owne. In another place, I trust in the almighty God, that he will giue a longe life to our godly Lords, and dispose vs under your hand according to his mercie. Neither haue I therefore allegged these things, for that it is my purpose throughly to discuss this question concerning the gift of Constantine: but only that, that the Readers should see by the way how childishly the Romanists doe lie, when they go about to challenge an earthly Empire to their bishop, and so much the more foul, is the shamelesnes of Augustine Stecchus, which in such a dispaired cause hath bin so bold to tell his truthe and coong to the bishop of Rome. Valla (as it was not heard for a man learned and of a sharpe wit) had strongly contested that sable. And yet (as a man little exercized in ecclesiasticall matters) he had not saide all that might have made for that purpose. Stecchus built in, and feattered stinking trifles to oppresse the electe light. And truly he doste no lesse boldly handle the cause of his matter, than if some merrie conceited fellow faining himselfe to do the same, woulde indeede take Vallas part. But verily it is a worthie cause, for which the Pope shoulde hire such patrons for money: and no lesse worthy are those hired lesse to be deceted of their hope of gaine, as it happened to Eugenius.

13 But if any man require to knowe the time, since this faine Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed five hundred yeeres, since the bishops yet remined in subjection of the princes, neither was the Pope created without authoritie of the emperour. The Emperour Henry the fourth of that name, a light and rash man, and of no foresight, of great boldnes and dissolute life, gave first occasion to Gregory the seuenthe to alter this order. For when he had in his count the bishoprickes of all Germany partly to be sold, and partly laid open for spoile: Hildebrand, which had received displeasure in his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to revenge himselfe. But because he seemed to pursue an honest and a godly cause, he was furthered with the favour of many. And Henry was otherwise, by reason of his insolent manner of governing, hated of the most part of princes. At the length Hildebrand, which called himselfe Gregorie the seuenthe, as he was a filthie and naughtie man, bewared the malice of his heart: which was the cause that he was fortaken of many that had conspire with him. But he thus much prevailed, that his successeors might freely without punishment not onely shake off the yoke, but also bring Emperours in subjection to them. Hecceunto was added, that from thence foorth there were many Emperours liker to Henry than to Julius Caesar, whom it was no hard thing to subdue, whyle they sat at home carelesse of all things and slothfull, when they had most need with vertue and lawfull meanes to reprise the greeneacres of the bishops. Thus we see with what colour that same godly gift of Constantine is shadowed, whereby the Pope faineth that the Empire of the Welt was delivered unto him.

14 In the meane time the Popes ceased not, sometime with fraud, sometime with treason, and sometime with force to invade other mens dominions: and the very city it selfe, which before was free, within a hundred and thirtie yeeres, or there about they brought into their subjection, till they grewe to the same power which they have at this day: and for the obtaining or encreasing whereof, they have troubled Christendome by the space of two hundred yeeres, (for they began before that they tooko to them the dominion of the city) that they have almost destroyed it. In the old time whome under Gregory the keepers of the goods of the church, did take possession of the lands which they reckoned to belong to the Church, & after the maner of the taking to the use of the Prince did set titles upon them for token of claimes, Gregory assembling a councell of bishops, inuying fore against that prophane manner, asked whether they did not judge that Cleire accused which did of his owne will by writing of any title attempt to enter upon any possession. They all pronounced, accused. If to claim a piece of ground by writing of a title be in a clarke an offence worthie of accusing: when whole two hundred yeeres together Popes do practive nothing els but battels, shedding of blood, destrucitons of armes, sackings of som cities, racings of other ouerthrows of nations, waftings of kingdomes, only that they might catch holde of other mens possessions: what curings can be enough to punishe such examples? Truely it is very plaine that they seeke nothing lesse than the gonne of Christ. For if they of their owne will do wholy resigne all the secular power that they have, therein is no danger to the glory of God, no danger to sound doctrine, no danger to the sacret of the Church: but they are caryed blind and headlong with only greediness of dominion: because they thinke nothing safe, vndlie they may beare rule with rigoroussnec (as the Prophet saith) and with power.

15 To jurisdiction is annexed immunity, which the Romish Clergie tooke to themselves. For they thinke it against their dignitie, if they anfwere in personall caufes, before a temporall judge: and therein they thinke both the libertie and dignitie of the Church to confift, if they be exempt from common judgement and lawes. But the old bishops, which otherwise were most rigorous in defending the right of the Church, judged themselves and their order to be nothing hurt, if they were subject to them. And the godlie Emperours, without gaining any of any man, did always call Clarke to theiur judgement feates so oft as neede required. For thus faith Constantine in his Epifle to the Nicomedians: If any of the bishops fhal vninterrely disorder himselfe, his boldnes fhall be reftraigned by the execution of the minister of God, that is by my execution. And Valentinian faith: Good bishops do not speake against the power of the Emperour, but do fincerely both keepe the commandements of God the great king, and also obey our lawes. At that time all men were persuaded of this without controversy. But Ecclesiasticall caufes were referred to the judgement of the Bishof. As if any Clerke had offended nothing againft the lawes, but only was accused by the Canons: he was not cited to the common judgement feate, but in that case had the bishope for his judge. Likewise if there were a queftion of Faith in controversy, or fuch a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the judgement thereof was committed to the Church. So is that to be understood, which Ambrose writeth to Valentinian: Your father of honourable memorie, not only answered in word, but alfo decreed by lawes, that in a caufe of Faith he ought to be judge, that is neither visit in office nor unlike in right. Againe: If we have regard to the Scriptures or olde examples, who is there that can deny that in a caufe of Faith, in a caufe (I fay) of Faith, bishops are wont to judge of Christian Emperors, and not Emperors or bishops? Againe: I would have come, O Emperour, to your confitorie, if either the bishops or the people would have suffred me to go: faying, that the caufe of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a spiritual cause, that is to fay the caufe of religion, ought not to be drawn into the temporall court where profane caufes are pleaded. Worthy do all men praise his constancie in this behalfe. And yet in a good caufe he proceeded but this farre, that if it come to violence and strong hand, he faith that he will give place. Willingly (faith he) I will not forsake the place committed unto me: but when I am enforced, I know not how to refift: for our armour are prayers and teares. Let vs note the singular modestie and widome of the holy man, joyned with fortitude of courage and boldnesse.

Infera the Emperours mother, because she could not drawe him to the Arrtans side, practisit to drive him from the government of the Church. And so should it haue come to pafs, if he had come when he was called to the palace to pleade his caufe. Therefore he denieth the Emperour to be a competent judge of to great a controversy. Which manner of doing both the necessitie of that time, and the continual nature of the matter required. For he judged that he ought rather to die, than that fuch an example should by his consent be given to posteritie; and yet if violence be offered, he thinke not of refistance. For he denieth it to be bishoppke, to defend the faith and right of the Church with armes. But in other caufes he sheweth himselfe ready to do whatsoever the Emperour shall command him. If he demand tribut, (faith he) we denieth not: the lands of the Church do pay tribute. If he ask landes, he hath power to chaime them, none of vs refitheth. After the fame manner alio speaketh Gregorius: I am not ignorant (faith he) of the mind of our most noble soueraigne Lord, Lord, that he wist not to intermeddle in causes pertaining to Priests, least he should in anything be burdened with our sins. He doth not generally exclude the Emperor from judging of Priests: but he saith that there be certain causes, which he ought to leave to the judgment of the Church.

And by this very exception the holy men fought nothing else, but that Princes being zealous of religion should not with tyrannous violence and wilfulness interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they disallow, if Princes sometime did use their authority in Ecclesiastical matters, so that it were done to preferre the order of the Church, not to trouble it, to stabilize discipline, not to disturb it. For if the Church hath not the power of compelling, nor ought to require it (I speak of civil constraining:) it is the office of godly Kings and Princes to maintain religion with laws, proclamations, and judicial proceedings. After this manner, when the Emperor Maurice had commanded certain bishops that they should receive their fellow bishops that were their neighbours and driven out by the barbarous nations: Gregori confirmineth that commandement, and exhorteth them to obey it. And when he himselfe is admonished by the same Emperor to come to atonement with John the Bishop of Constantinople, he doeth in deed render a reason why he ought not to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunitie from the secular court, but rather promiseth that he will be obedient, so farre as his conscience will give him leave; and therewithall he faith this, that Maurice did as became a godlie Prince, when he gave such commandements to the Priests.

The xiij. Chapter.

Of the discipline of the Church, whereof the chiefest use is in the censure and excommunication.

The discipline of the Church, the entreaty whereof we have deferred unto this place, is briefly to be declared, that we may at length passe over to the rest. But that same for the most part hangeth upon the power of the keys and spirituall jurisdiction. That this may be the more easily understood, let vs divide the Church into two principal degrees, that is, the Clergy, and the people. Clearkes I call by the usual name tho:se that execute publicke ministration in the Church. First we will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to be subject: then we will come to the Clergy, which behinde that common discipline, have a seuerall discipline by themselves. But because many for hatred of discipline do abhorre the very name thereof, let them heare this: If no fellowship, yea no house though it have but a small household, can be kept in right state without discipline, the same is much more necessary in the Church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth salvation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in seede of sinnes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the body hang together every one in his fit place. Wherefore whosoever do either desire to have discipline taken away, or hinder the restoring thereof, whether they do it of pet purpose or by vnkindnesse, verily they seeke the extreme disfigurement of the Church. For what shall betide, if what is lutfull be lawfull to every man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preaching of doctrine adowne private admonitions, corrections, and such other helps which sustaine doctrine and discipline not to be idle: discipline therefore is as it were a bridle wherewith they may be holden backe and tamed which comlywise resist against Christ: or as it were a pricky, whereby they who are not willing enough may be thred vp: and sometime, as a fatherly rod, wherewith they which have more grievously fallen may be chastised mercifully and according to the mildnesse of the spirit of Christ. Sith therefore we do now see at hand certaine beginnings of a horrible waft ices in the Church, because there is no care:
Cap. 12. Of the outward means care not order to keepe the people in awe, very necessitie crieth out that there is neede of remedie. But this is the onely remedie, which both Christ hath command"d, and hath alway been vied among the godlie.

2 The first foundation of discipline is, that private monitions should haue place: that is to say, that if any man of his owne accord doe not his dutie, if he be not hath himself licentioulsy, or lie not honestly, or have committed any thing worthie of blame, he should fuffer himselfe to bee admonished: and that every man should dudge to admonish his brother when occasion shall require. But specially let the Pastor and Priests be watchfull to doe this, whose office is not onely to preach to the people, but in every house to admonish and exhort if at any time they doe not sufficiently prove their generall doctrine: as Paul teacheth, when he rehearced that he taught privately and in houses, and protesteth that he is cleane from the bloud of all men, because he hath not cea\n
3 But becaufe he speaketh here onely of secret faults, we must make this diuision: that some sinnes be private, and some publike or openly manifeft. Of the first fote Christ faith to every private man, Reproue him betweene thee and him alone. Of manifest sinnes Paul faith to Timothee. Reproue him before all men, that the rest may haue feare. For Christ had saide before, If thy brother haue offended against thee, Which words (against thee) vnlesse thou wilt be contentious, thou canst not otherwise understand than vnder thine owne secret knowledge, for that there bee no more private to it. But the same thing, which the Apostle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that sinne openly, he himselfe followed in Peter. For when Peter sinned euent to publike offence, he did not admonish him apart by himselfe, but brought him foorth into the right of the Church. Therefore this shall be the right order of doing, if in secrete sinnes we goe forward according to those degrees that Christ hath set: but in manifest sinnes, wee immediately proceede to the Churches solemn rebuking, if the offence be publike.

4 Let this also be another distinction: that of sinnes some be defaultes, other sin be wicked doings, or haines offences. To the correcting of this latter for, not only admonishment or rebuking is to be vied, but also a severer remedie: as Paul theweth which not openly chaffed with words the Corinthian that had committed incest, but also punished him with excommunication, so soone as he was certifie\n consenting voices of the faithful: the Lord hath testified, that the same is nothing else but a pronouncing of his own sentence, and that whatsoever they do in earth is confirmed in heaven. For they have the word of the Lord, whereby they may condemn the sower; they have the word, whereby they may receive the repentant into fiscalour. They say that truth that without this bond of discipline Churches may long stand, are deceived in opinion: unless perhaps we may want that help which the Lord forewarned that it should be necessitated for vs. And truly how great is the necessary thereof, shall be better perceived by the manifold vse of it.

5 There be three ends which the Church hath respect unto in such corrections and excommunication. The first is, that they should not, to the dishonour of God, be named among Christians, that lead a filthy and sinful life, as though his holy Church were a conspiracie of naughtie and wicked men. For if the Church is the body of Christ, it cannot be defiled with such filthie and rotten members, but that some shame must come to the head. Therefore that there should not be any such thing in the Church, whereby his holy name may be spotted with any reproach, they are to be driven out of her household, by whose dishonestie any slander might redound to the name of Christians. And herein also is consideration to be had of the Supper of the Lord, that it be not profaned with giving it to all without choice. For it is most true, that he to whom the distribution of it is committed, if he wittingly and willingly admit an unworthy man whom he might lawfully put back, is as guilty of Sacrilege, as if he did give abroad the Lords body to dogs. Wherefore Chrysostome grievously inveighed against the priests, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debarre no man. The blood (faith he) shalbe required at your hands. If ye feare man, he shall laugh you to scorn: but if ye fear God, ye shall be reverenced also among men. Let vs not feare maces, nor purple, nor crownes: we have here a greater power. Eternally will rather deluther mine owne bodie to death, and suffer my blood to be shed, than I will be made partaker of this defiling. Therefore least this most holy mysterie be spotted with slander, in the distributing thereof choice is greatly requisite: which yet cannot be had but by the jurisdiction of the church. The second end is, least (as it is wont to come to passe) with the continuall company of the uell, the good should be corrupted. For (such is our ready inclination to go out of the way) there is nothing easier than for vs to be led by uell examples from the right course of life. This vse the Apostle touched, when he commanded the Corinthians to put the incefluous man out of their comparte. A little leaven (faith he) corrupteth the whole lump of dough. And before lay herein so great danger, that he forbade him even from all fellowship. If any brother (faith he) among you be named either a whoremonger, or a courtesou man, or a worshipphe of idols, or a dronkard, or an uell speaker, with such a one I grant you not leaue so much as to cate. The third end is, that they themselves confounded with shame may begin to repent of their filthinesse. So it is probable for them also to have their owne wickednesse chastised, with that feeling of the rod they may be awaked, which otherwise by tender bearing with them would have become more obstinate. The same thing doth the Apostle meane when he faith thus: If any do not obey our doctrine, make him, and keepe no company with him, that he may be ashamed. Again in another place, when he writeth that he hath delivered the Corinthian to Satan, that his spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord: that is (as I expound it) that he went into a damnation for a time, that he might be saved for ever. But he therefore faith that he declereth him to Satan, because the diuell is out of the Church as Christ is in the Church. For whereas some do referre it to a certaine vexing of the flesh, I thinke that to be very vn certaine.

6 When these endes be fet forth, now it remaineth to see how the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in jurisdiction. First let vs keepe the division aboue set, that of limes some be publike, and other some be private or more.

more secret. Publicke are those that have not only one or two witnesses, but are committed openly and with the offence of the whole Church. Secret I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of hypocrites, for those come not into the judgment of the Church, but those of the meane kind which are not without witnesses, and yet are not publicke. The first kind requireth not those degrees which Christ rehearseth: but wher any such thing appeareth, the Church ought to doe her duete in calling the sinner and correcting him according to the proportion of the offence. In the second kind according to the rule of Christ, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacie added. When it is once come to knowledge, then is that other duation to be noted between wicked doings and defaults. For in lighter sins there is not to be so great sententious, nor chaitiment of words sufficient, and the same gentle and fatherly, which may not harden nor confound the sinner, but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more rejoice than he for that he was corrected. But it is meete that hainous offences be chastised with sharper remedie. For it is not enough, if he that by doing a wicked deed of evil example hath grievously offended the Church, should be chastised only with words, but he ought for a time to be deprived of the communion of the supper, till he have given assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthians Paul vseth not only rebuke of words but drieth him out of the church, and blameth the Corinthians that it had so long borne him. The old and better Church kept this order, when rightfull government flourished. For if any man had done any wicked deed whereupon was grown offence, first he was commanded to abstaine from partaking of the holy supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, and to testify his repentance before the church. There were also certain solemnne visages, which were enjoyned to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had done, that the Church was satisfied, then by laying of hands he was received into favour. Which receiving is oftentimes called of Cyprian peace, who also briefly describeth this visage. They doe penance (faith he) in a certaine full time: then they come to confession, and by the laying of hands of the Bishop and the Cleargie they receive power to come to the communion. Howebeit the Bishop and his Clergie had to the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therewithall require the content of the people: as he sheweth in another place.

7 From this discipline there was no man exempted, that even the Princes together with the common people did submit themselves to bear it. And rightfully, saith it was evident that it was the discipline of Christ, to whom it is meete that all secters and Crownes of Kings be submitted. So when Theodosius was depraved by Ambrose of power to come to the communion because of the slaughter committed at Thesalonica, he threw down all the royal ornament wherewith he was clothed: he openly in the Church bewailed his sinne, which had crept upon him by frailty of other men: he craved pardon with groining and teares. For great Kings ought not to thinke this to be any dishonor to them, if they humbly throw downe theeles before Christ the King of Kings, neither ought it to displeaue them that they be judged by the Church. For sith in their court they heare nothing else but meere flatteries, it is more then necessarie for them to be rebuked of the Lord by the mouth of the priests. But rather they ought to with, that the Priests should not spare the, that the Lord may spare them. In this place I omit to speake by whom this indignity is to be exercis’d, because it is spoken of in another place. This onely I adde that is the lawfull manner of proceeding in excommunicating a man which Paul sheweth: if the Elders doe it not only by themselves, but with the Church knowing and allowing it: that is, in such sort that the multitude of the people may not governe the doing, but may make it as a witnesses & a keeper that nothing should be done of a few by wilfull affection. But the whole manner of doing, beside the calling vp the name of God, ought ought to have such severity, as may resemble the presence of Christ, that it may be undoubted that the there sitteth for ruler of his owne judgement.

8. But this ought not to be passed over, that such severity be commeth the church as is joyned with the spirit of mildenes. For we must alway diligently beware (as Paul teacheth) that he which is punished be not swallowed up of sorrow: for to shoul of a remedy be made a destruction. But out of the ende better may be gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the sinner should be brought to repentance, and such examples taken away, lest either the name of Christ should be evil spoken of, or other men be provoked to follow them: if we shall have an eye to these things, we shall be able easilie to judge howe farre severity ought to proceed, and where it ought to end. Therefore when the sinner gueseth a te-stimonic of his repentance, and doth by his teystimony, as much as in him lieth, blot out the offence: he is not to be enforced any further: but if he be enforced, rigorouness doth then exceed measure. In which behalfe the immeasurable severity of the old fathers cannot be excused, which both disagreed from the prescribed order of the Lord, & also was maulinously dangerous. For when they charged a sinner with solemn penance, & deprivation from the holy communion somtyme for seven yeeres, somtyme four yeeres, somtyme three yeeres, for their whole life: what other thing could follow thereof but either great hypocritie or most great desperation? Likewise whereas no man that had fallen the second time was admitted to second pennance, but was cast out of the Church even to the ende of his life: that was neither profitable nor agreeing to reason. Therefore altogether shall weigh the matter with sound judgement, shall herein perceive want of their discretion. Howbeit I doe here rather disallow the publike maner, than accuse all them that vied it, whereas it is certaine that many of them misliked it: but they did therefore suffer it, because they could not amend it. Truly, Cyprian declareth, how much beside his owne will he was so rigorous. Our patience (faith he) and easiness and gentleness is ready to them that come. I will with all to returne into the Church: I will with all our fellow soldiers to be enclosed within the tents of Christ and in the houses of God the father. I forgive al things, I dissemble many things, for zeale and desire to gather brotherhood together, I examine not with full judgement those things that are committed against God, in pardonning defaults more than I ought, I am my selfe almost in default, I doe with readie and full loue embrace them that returne with repentance, confessing their sins with humble and plaine satisfaction. Chrysostome is somewhat harder, and yet he faith thus:
If God be so kinde, why will his priest seeme so rigorous? Moreover we knowe what gentleness Augustine vied toward the Donatistes, in somuch that hee thrice set to receiue into bishoprake those that had returned from schisme, even immediately after their repentance. But because a contrary order had grown in force, they were compelled to leave their owne judgement to follow it.

9. But as this mildenes is required in the whole body of the church, that it should punish them that are fallen, mercifully & not to the extreme of rigour, but rather according to the precept of Paul, should continue christie towards them: so euery private man for himselfe ought to temper himselfe to this mercifulnes & gentleness.
Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the elect such as are driven out of the Church, or to despair of them as though they were already lost. We may indeed judge them strangers from the Church, & therefore strangers from Christ: but that is onlyere the time that they abide in diuorce. But if then also they shew a greater resemblerance of stubbornnes than of gentleness, yet let vs commit them to the judgement of the Lorde, hoping better of them in time to come than we see in time present: and let vs not therefore cease to pray to God for them: and (to comprehend all in one word) let vs not condenme to death the person it selfe, which is in the hand and judgement of God alone: but let vs rather weigh by the lawe of the Lorde of Men favored from the Church by excommunication or rashly to be condemned in the judgement of men.

Cap. 12. Of the outward means what every man's work is. Which rule while we follow, we rather stand to the judgement of God than pronouncing our own. Let us not take to our selves more li bertie in judging, vntill we wil bindle the power of God within bounds, & appoint a law to his mercy, at whose pleasure when he thinketh it good, very euill men are turned into very good, strangers are graftet and forrenes are choset into the Church. And this the Lorde doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, and rebate their raftnes : which if it be not restrai ned, presumeth to take to it selfe power ofudging more than it ought.

10 For whereas Christ promiseth that that shall be bound in heaven, which they that be his shall bind in earth, he limiteth the power of binding, to the Cenfure of the Church: by which they that are excommunicate, are not thrown into euell hill age and damnation: but hearing their liues and maners to be condemned, they are also certified of their owne euell hill age and condemnation, vnles they repent. For excommunication hecrein differeth from accursing, that accursing taking away all pardon doth condemn a man and adudge him to etemal destruction: excommunication rather reuengeth and punifheth maners. And though the fame do also punifh the man, yet it doth not punish him, but in forewarning him of his damnation to come, it doth call him backe to salvation. If that be obtained, reconciliation and restoring to the communion is readie. But accursing is either very seldom or never in vfe. Therefore, although ecclesiasticall discipline, perimeteth not to be used familiarly, or to have friendly conversation with them that be excommunicate: yet we ought to en deavour by such means as we may, that returning to amendment, they may returne to the fellowship and vnitie of the church: as the Apostle also teacheth. Do not (faith he) think them as enemies but correct them as brethren. Vnles this gentlenes be kept as well privately as in common, there is danger least from discipline wee footh with fall to butcherie.

11 This also is principally required to the moderation of discipline, which Augu stein entreateth of in disputing against the Donatistes: that neither of men, if they see faultes not diligently enough corrected by the Counsell of elders, should therefore by and by depart from the Church: nor the pastors themselves, if they cannot according to their harts desire purge all things that neede amendment, shoulde therefore throw away the ministrie, or with vnwoanted rigorousne trouble the whole Church. For it is most true which he wrieth: that hee is free and discharged from curse, whoseuer hee be that either by rebuking amendeth what hee can: or what he cannot amend, excludeth, faining the bond of peace: or what he cannot exclude, faining the bond of peace, he doth disallow with equity, & bear with fedfastnes.

He rendereth a reason thereof in another place: because all godly order & maner of ecclesiasticall discipline ought alway to have respect vnto the vnitie of the spirite in the bond of peace: which the apostle commandeth to be kept by our bearing one with another, & when it is not kept, the medicine of punishment beginneth to be not onely superfluous, but also hurtfull, and therefore caufeth to be a medicine. He that (faith he) doth diligently thinke upon these things doth neither in preferring of vnitie neglect the feueritie of discipline, nor doth with immeasureablenes of correction breake the bond of fellowhip. He grangeth in deed that not onely the pastors ought to trauaile to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church, but also that every man ought to his power to endewartur unto: & he plainly declareth that he which neglecteth to monith, rebuke, & correct the euill, although he do not favour them, nor sin with them, yet is guilty before the Lord. But if he be in such degree, that hee may also feuer them from the partaking of Sacraments, and doth it not, nowe he sinneth not by an others euill, but by his owne. Onely hee willeth it to bee done, with vning of discretion, which the Lorde also requireth, least while the tares be in rooting out, the corne be hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Cyprian, Let a man therefore mercifull correct

correct what he can; and what he cannot, let him patiently suffer, and with love, groan and lament it.

12. This he faith because of the precifeneffe of the Donatiftes, who when they sawe faultes in the Churches which the Bishops did in deede rebuke with words, but not with excommunication, (because they thought that they could this way nothing preside) did sharply truey against the Bishops as betrayers of discipline, and did with an vngodly schisme divide themselves from the flock of Christ. As the Ana-baptists do at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to be of Christ, vnselde it, doe in every point thine with Angelike perfection, doe under pretence of their zeal overthrow all edification. Such (laith Augustine) not for hatred of others mens wickednesse, but for desire to maintaine their owne contentions, doe count either wholly to drawe away, or at least to divide the weake people inared with the boasting of their name: they dwelling with pride, mad with stubbornesse, traitorous with flanders, troublesome with feotions, least it should openly appeare that they want the light of truth, doe pretend a shadowe of rigorous seueritie: and those things which in Scripture are commanded to be done with moderate healing for correcting the faultes of brethren, preferring the sincerenesse of love, and keeping the vnction of peace, they abuse to seueritie and occasion of cutting off. So doth Satan transforme himself into an Angell of light, when by occasion as it were of just seueritie he pretendeth vnmercifull crueltie, ouetting nothing else but to corrupt and breake the bond of peace and vnitie: which bond remaining fast among Christians, all his forces are made weake to hurt, his traps of treasons are broken, and his counsels of overthrowing doe vanish away.

13. This one thing he chieffely commendeth, that if the infection of sinne have entered into the whole multitude, then the seuer mercie of liuely discipline is necessarie. For (laith he) the deuises of separation are vaine, and hurtrfull and full of facrilege, because they are vngodly and proud, and doe more trouble the weak good ones, than they amend the fiute culle ones. And that which hee there teacheth other, hee himselfe also faithfully followed. For writing to Ancren Bishope of Carthage, he complaineth that drunkennesse which is so fore condemned in scriptures, doth range vn-punished in Africa: and he aduisth him, that assembling a Councell of Bishops he should provide remedie for it. He addeth by and by after. These thinges (as I think) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, nor after an impetuous manner, but more by teaching than by commanding, more by admonishing than by threatening. For so must we deal with a multitude of sinners, but seueritie is to be exercised upon the sinnes of few. Yet he doth not meane that Bishops should therefore winke or hold their peace at publike faultes, because they cannot severely punish them: as he humselfe afterward expoundeth it: But he will that the measure of correction be so tempered, that so farre as may be, it may rather bring health than destruction to the bodie. And therefore at length hee concludes thus: Wherefore both this commandement of the Apostle is in no wise to be neglected, to scour the cul, when it may be done without pe-rill of breaking of peace: and this is also to be kept, that bearing one with another, we should endeavour to preserve vnitie of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

14. That part that remaineth of discipline, which properly is not contained in the power of keies, standeth in this, that according to the necessitie of times the preachers should exhort the people either to setting downe, or to common supplications, or to other exercises of humility, repentance, and faith, of which thinges there is neither time, nor measure, norforme prescribed by the word of God, but is left in the judgement of the Church. The obseruing of this in partie, as it is profitable, so hath alway been vied of the olde Church even from the very Apostles. Howbeit the Apostles themselves were not the first authors of them, but they tooke example out of the lawe & the Prophets. For we see that there so oft as any weights businesse happened, the people were called...
Cap. 12. Of the outward means called together, common praies enioyned, and fasting commanded. Therefore the Apostles followed that which both was not new to the people of God, and they fore-sew that it should be profitable. Likewise is to be thought of other exercises, wherewith the people may either be stirred vp to their dutie, or be kept in awe and obedience.
There are examples each where in holy histories, which we need not to gather together. In summe this is to be holden, that so oft as there happeneth any con-trouersie of religion, which must be determined either by a Synode or by ecclesiastical judgements, so oft as they be about choosing of a minister, finally, so oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doing: againe, when there appeare tokens of the wrath of God, as pestillence, and warre, and famine: this is a holy ordinance and profitable for all ages, that the Pastors should exhort the people to common fasting, and to extraordinarie praiers. If any man doe not allow the testimonies which may be alleaged out of the olde Testament, as though they were not meete for the Christian Church, it is certaine that the Apostles also did the same. Howbeit of praiers I think there will scarcely any be found that will moue any question. Therefore let vs lay somewhat of fasting: because many when they understand not what profit it hath, do judge it not to necessarie: some also doe utterly refuse it as superfluos: and when the vsie of it is not well known, it is easie to slide into superstitio.

15 Holy and true fasting hath three ends: for vs, it, either to make leane and subdue the flesh, that it should not waxe wanton, or that we may be better disposed to praiers and holy meditations, or that it should be a testimonie of our humbling before God, when we be willing to confess our guiltineffe before him. The first ende hath not so often place in common fasting, because all men haue not like estate of bodie, or like health: therefore it rather agreeth with private fasting. The second ende is common to both, for as well the whole Church as every one of the faithful hath need of such preparation to praiers. The third also is likewise common. For it shall sometime befall that God shall strike one nation with warre, or pestilence, or with some calamitie. In such a common scourge the whole people must accuse themselves, and openly confess their owne guiltineffe. But if the hand of the Lord doe strike any private man, he ought to doe the same, either alone, or with his owne familie. That it standeth chiefly in the affection of the minde. But when the minde is affected as it ought to be, it is scarcely possible, but that it will breake out into outward testifying:
and then chiefly if it turne to common edifying, that altogether in openly confessing their sinne should yeeld prais of rightcousnesse to God, and every one mutually exhort other with their example.

16 Wherefore fasting, as it is a signe of humiliation, hath more often vs pribi.
likely, than among private men, howsoever it be common, as is already saide. Therefore as touching the discipline whereof we now intreate: so oft as we must make supplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to commaund fasting together with praiers. So when the Antiochians laide hands vpon Paul and Barnabas, that they might the better commend to God their ministerie which was of so great importance, they ioyned fasting with praiers: So both they afterward, when they made ministers over churches, were wont to pray with fasting. In this kind of fasting they had garde to none other thing, but that they might be made fresher and more vncombered to pray. Verily this we finde by experience, that when the belly is full, the mind is not so lifted vp to God, that it can both with harte and fervent affection be carried to praiers, and continue in it. So is that to bee vnderstoode which Luke rehearseth of Anna, that sheeuer the Lorde in fastings and praiers. For hee doth not let the worshipping of God in fastings: but signifieth that the holy woman did after that manner exercise her selfe to continuance of praiers. Such was the fasting of Nebemas when he did with carnestly bent zeal pray to God for the deliverance of his people. For this cause Paul faith that the faithfull doe well, if they abstaine for a time from from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply prayer & fasting. Where ioyning fasting to prayer in steede of a helpe, he putthth vs in minde that it is of no value but to farre as it is referred to this end. Againe, when in the same place he giueth a rule to married folkes, that they shoulde mutually render good will one to another, it is plaine that hee doth not speake of daily prayers, but of such prayers as require a more earnest intentiuenes.

17 Againe, if either pestilence, or famine, or warre begin to rage abroad, or if any calamitie otherwise come to hang ouer any country and people: then also it is the dutie of pastors to exhort the Church to fasting, that they may humblie beseech the Lord to turn away his wrath. For he giueth warning that he is prepared and in a maner armed to reuenge, when he maketh any danger to appear. Therefore as ac cused men in time past with long hanging beard, with vncobed hair, with black array, were wont humbly to abase themselues, to procure the mercy of the judges: so when we are accused before the judgement seate of God, it behoueth both for his glorie, and for common edification, and also is profitable and healthfull for vs, that wee shoulde in pitious arraie ecape to escape his severitie. And that this was vfed among the people of Israel, it is easie to gather by the wordes of Joel. For when hee com-mandeth a trumpet to be sounded, the congregation to be gathered together, fasting to be appointed, & the rest that follow, he speaketh of things receiued in common cus tome. He had a little before saide, that examination is appointed of the wicked deeds of the people, and had declared that the day of judgement was now at hende: and had summoned them being accused to pleade their cause: then hee crieth out that they shoulde haste to sacke-cloth and athes, to weeping and fasting: that is, that they shoulde also with outward testificationes throwe themselves downe before the Lorde. Sacke-cloth and athes peraduenture did more agree with those times: but there is no doubt that the calling together, and weeping, and fasting and such like do likewise pertaine also to our age, so oft as the state of our thinges doth do require. For such it is a holy exercise, both to humble men, & to confesse humilitie, why should we lesse vse it than the olde people did in like necessitie? We readeth that not only the peo ple of Israel, which were informed and instructed by the wordes of God, but also the Ninevites which had no doctrine, but the preaching of Jonas, fasted in token of for rowe. What cause is there therefore why we shoulde not doe the same? But it is an outward ceremonie, which was with the rest ended in Christ. Yea rather even at this day it is, as it alway hath been, a very good helpe to the faithfulfull, and a profita ble admonition, to stirre vp themselues, that they should not with too great careles nes and sluggishlye more and more prouoke God when they are chalstis with his scourges. Therefore Christ when he excuseth his apostles for that they fast not, doth not say that fasting is abrogate: but he appointeth it to times of calamitie, and ioy neth it with mourning. The time shal come (faith he) when the bridegrome shall be taken away from them.

18 But that there shoulde be no errore in the name, let vs define what fasting is.
For we do not heere understand by it onely abstinence and sparing in meat & drink, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godlie ought in deed to be tempered with honest sparing & sobriety, that so neer as is possible it may in the whole course ther of beare a certaine resemblance of fasting. But beside this there is another fasting for a time, when we withdraw any thing of our wonted diet, either for one day or for a certaine time, and doe charge our selues with a stricter and feuerer abstinence in diet than ordinarie. This consisteth in three thinges, in time, in qualitie of meates, and in finalnes of quantitie. I meane by time, that we shoulde vse those doings fasting, for which fasting is ordered. As for example, if a man fast for common prayer: that he come empie vnsto it. Qualitie handeth in this, that all daintines should be absent, and being content with common & bafer meeres, we should not stir vp appetite with delicates.
Cap. 12. Of the outward means delicates. The rule of quantitie is in this, that we eat more sparingly and lea than we be wont only for necessitate, and not also for pleasure.

19 But we must always principally beware, that no superstition creep uppon us, as it hath heretofore happened to the great hurt of the church. For it were much better that there were no vse at all of fasting then that it should be diligently kept, and in the mean time be corrupted with false and hurtfull opinions, whereto the world sometime falleth, vnlesse the Pastors do with great faithfulness and usehelome prevent it. The first point therefore is, that they should alwayes enforce that which is teacheth, that they should cut their hearts & not their garments. That is, that they should admonish the people, that God doth not greatly effect fasting of it selfe, vnlesse there be inward affection of the heart, a true multiplicity of sinne and of humbles true humbling, & true sorrow through the fear of God: yea that fasting is profitable for no other cause, but for that it is joined to these as an inferiour helpe. For God abhorreth nothing more than when men in setting signes and an outward show in stead of innocencie of heart, do labour with false colour to deceive themselves. Therefore Ezra might sharply inueryth against this hypocritie, that the Jewes thought they had satisfied God, when they had onely fasted, howouer they did nourish vngodlines and vnclidean thoughts in their heart. Is it (saith he) such a fasting which the Lord required? and so forth as followeth. Therefore the hypocriticall fasting is not onely an unprofitable and superfluous wearyng, but also a great abomination. An other civil necesse into this is chiefly to be taken heed of, that it be not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worshipping God. For if it is a thing of it selfe indifferent, and hath no value but by reason of those ends which it ought to have respect vnto, it is a most hurtful superstition, to confound it with the workes commanded of God and necessarie of themselves without other respect. Such was in old time the docto-the Maniches: whom when Augustine confuted, he doth plainly enough teach, that fasting is to be judged by no other ends then those which I have spoken of, and is no otherwise allowed of God, vnlesse it be referred to the same. The third error is indeed not so vnGodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keeping of it more precificly and rigorously as it were one of the chief duties, and to base it with immeasurable praifes, that men should thinke they have done some excellent thing when they have fasted. In which behalf I dare not altogether excuse the old fathers, but that they have larded some seeds of superstition, and given occasion to the tyrannie which hath risen since. There are found in deed fontsimes in them found and wife sentences of fasting, but afterward we now and then meete with immeasurable praifes of fasting which advance it among the chiefe vertues.

20 And at that time the superflous oversepping of Lent was each where grown in vse; because both the common people thought that they therin did some notable ser-cice to God, and the Pastors did commend it for a holy following of Christ: whereas it is plain, that Christ did not fast to prevent any example to other, but that in beginning the præaching of the Gospell, he might in very deed prove that it was not a doctrine of men, but descended from heaven. And it is maruellous, that so grosse an error, which is contayned with so many and so evident reasons, could crepe into men of so sharpe judgement. For Christ did not fast off (which he must needs have done if he would have set forth a law of yeerely fasting) but only once when he prepared himselfe to the præaching of the Gospell. And he fasted not after the manner of men, as it was necessarie he should have done if he would have prouked men to follow him, but rather he them with an example, whereby he may rather draw men to committ him than force them up to follow him. Finally there is none other cause of this fasting, than of that which Moses fasted when he received the lawe at the hand of the Lord. For if that miracle was shewed in Moses to establish the au-thoritie of the Lawe, it ought not to have beene omitted in Christ, lest the Gospell should should seem to give place to the law. But since that time it never came in any man's mind to follow the colour of fasting of Moses to require such a form of fasting in the people of Israel. Neither did any of the holy Prophets and Fathers follow it, when yet they had minde and zeal enough to godly exercises. For, that which is said of Helias, that he passed forty days without meat and drink, tended to no other end but that the people should know that he was stirred up to be a restorer of the law from which almost all the law had departed. Therefore it was a meane wrongfull zeal and full of superstition, that they did set forth fasting with the title and color of following of Christ. Howbeit in the manner of fasting there was then great diversitie, as Cai- sor s had heareth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his historie. For the Romans (youth he) had but three weekes, but in these three there was a continuall fasting, except on the Sunday, and Saturday. The Slavensians and Grecians had six weekes: other had stuen: but their fasting was by divided times. And they disagreed no leffe in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: some added herbs: some did not forbearish and fowles: some had no difference in meates. Of this diversitie Augustine also made mention in the latter Epistle to Januarian.

21. Then followed worse times, and to the preposterous zeal of the people was added both ignorance and rudeness of the Bishops, and a lust to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked laws, which straine confinements with pernicious bonds. The eating of flesh was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of sacrilege one upon another, till they came to the bottome of all errors. And that no purerlenesse should be omitted, they began with a most fond pretence of abstinence to mocke with God. For in the most exquisitie dainties of fare is sought the praise of fasting: no delicats do then suffice, there is no greater plentie, or diversitie or sweetenes of meates. In such and so gorgious preparation they think that they serve God rightly. I speake not how they neuer more fowly glut themselves, than when they would be counted most holy men. Briefly, they count it the greatest worshipping of God to abstinence from flesh, and (of these excepted) to flow full of all kinds of delicacies. On the other side they thinke this the extreme of vn godliness, and such as scarcely may be recompensed with death, if a man tast never so little a piece of bacon or vnfauoritie flesh with brownie bread: Hieronymus telleth, that euery in his time were some that with such follies did mocke with God: which because they would not eate oyle, caused most dainty meates from every place to be brought them: yet to oppresse nature by violence, they abstinence from drinking of water, but caused sweete and costly suppers to be made for them, which they did not drink out of a cup, but out of a phial. Which fault was then in a few, at this day it is a common fault among all rich men that they fast to no other end but that they may bankeet more sumptuously and destitly. But I will not wait many wordes in a matter not doubtfull. Onele this I say, that both in fasting and in all other partes of discipline, the Papists so haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing well framed and orderly, whereby they may have any occasion to be proud, as though there were any thing remaining among them worrth of praise.

22. There followed another part of discipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the Cleargie. That is containes in the Canons, which the olde Bishops haue made over themselfes and their order. As these be: that no Cleark should give himselfe to hunting, to diving, nor to bancketing: that none should occupy viuere, or merchandize: that none should be present at wanton dauncings: and such other ordinances. There were also added penaltys whereby the authoritie of the Canons was established, that none should break them unpunished. For this end to euery Bishop was committed the governement of his own Cleargie, that they should rule their clearkes according to the canons, and hold them in their dutie. For this ende were ordained yearly overseeings and Synodes, that if any were neglygent in his duty, he should... be admonished: if any had offended, he should be punished according to the measure of his offence. The bishops also themselves had yeerly their provincial Synodes, and in the olde time yeerly two Synodes, by which they were judged if they had done any thing beside their duty. For if any Bishop were too hard or violent against his clergie, they might appeale to those Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The seuerest punishment was that he which had offended should be remoued from his office, and for a time be deigned of the communion. And because that fame was a continual order, they never vied to dismisfe any Synode, but that they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Council, pertained to the Emperor only, as all the olde summonings of Councils do testifye. So long as this seueritie flourished, the clerks did require in word no more of the people, than themselfes did performe in example and deed. Yea they were much more rigorous to themselves than to the people. And verily so it is meete, that the people should be ruled with a gentler and looser discipline, as I may so terme it: but the clerks should vse sharper judgements among themselves, and should leffe bear with themselfes, than with other men. How all this is grown out of vs, it is no need to rehearse, when at this day nothing can bee imagined more vnbridled and dissolute than the clergie, and they are broken forth to so great licentiousnes, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie should not seeme to be vertuely buried among them, I grant indeed that they do with certaine shadowes deceive the eyes of the simple: but those are such as come no noerer to the auncient manners, than the counterfeiting of an ape approcheth to that which men do by reason and advice. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth how fouly the Periaks had swarowed from the ordinances of their Elders, and were fallen from the rigorous kinde of life, to foines and dainties, that yet they cowered this shame, saying that they diligently kept the ancient viges. For when in the time of Cyrus libriete and temperance so far flourished that men needed not to wepe, yea and it was accounted a shame: with posteritie this continued a religious observation, that no man should draw not out of his nostrils, but it was lawfull to sucke it vp, and feede within even till they were rotten the stinking humour which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the old order it is unlawfull to bring winepots to the boorde: but to swill in wine that they need to be carried away drunken is tolerable. It was ordained to eate but once in a day: this thefe good succesors hauent not abrogated, but they gaue leaue to continue their surettings from mid day to midnight. The custome was that men should make an end of their daies journey fasting. But it was at libertie and vilely the custome, for avoiding of weares to shorten their journey to two hours. Whenoever the Papes shall pretend their bastard rules, to shew themselves to be like to the holy fathers: this example shall sufficiently reprooue their fond counterfeiting, that no painter can more luyly express it.

23 In one thing they bee too rigorous and vnentreatable, that they gie not leaue to Prieftes to marry. But how great libertie there is among them to vie where-dome unpunished, is not needfull to be spoken: and bearing them bolde upon their stinking vnmaried life, they have hardened themselfes to all wicked doings: But this forbidding doth plainly shew, how pestilent all their traditions are, for as much as it hath not onely spoiled the Church of good and sitt Pasters, but also hath brought in a horrible fincke of mirthches, and thrown many soules into the gulf of desperation. Truely whereas marriage hath beene forbidden to Prieftes, that same hath beene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely against the word of God, but also against aluequitie. First to forbid that which the Lord had left at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againe, that God hath expressly pronounced by his wordes that this libertie should not be broken, is so evident that it needeth no long demonstration. I speake not how Paul in many places willeth a Bishoppe to be the husband husband of one wife. But what could be more vehemently spoken, than where he pronouned by the holy Ghost, that there shall be in the last times wicked men that shall forbid marriage: and he calleth them not only deceivers, but Diuels? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holy Oracle of the holy Ghost, wherewith he willed to arm the Church aforehand against dangers, that the forbidding of marriage is the doctrine of diuels. But they think that they have gayly escaped when they wrote this sentence to Montanus, the Tatians, Eusebites, and other oldie heretikes. They only (say they) condemned marriage: but we do not condemn it, but debarre the Clergie from it, for whom we think it not to be convenient. As though albeit this prophecy was first fulfilled in those aforesaid men, it might not also be applied to these: or as though this childish fond suitlicie were woorrth the hearing, that they say that they forbid it not, because they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a tyrant would affirm that it is not an vnuiust law, with vnuiustice whereof one part alone of the Crie is oppressed.

24. They object, that the Priest doth by some marke differ from the people. As though the Lord did not also foresee this, with what ornaments Priests ought to excell. So they accuse the Apostle of troubling the order and confounding the ceme-lineffe of the Church, which when he portrayed out the absutlur frome of a good Bishop durst set marriage among the other gifts which he required in him. I know how they expound this, namely that none is to be chosen that hath a second wife. And I grant that this is not a new exposition: but that it is a false exposition, appeareth by the text itself, because he by and by after fetteth out of what qualities the wiuues of Bishops and Deacons ought to be. Paul reckeneth marriage among the virtues of a bishop, these men teach that it is an intollerable fault in the order of the Clergie. And, on Gods name, not contented with this generall dispraise they call it in their Canons vncleneffe and defiling of the flesh. Let every man think with himself of what wekehop these things be come: Christ vouchsaith in honor of marriage that he willeth it to be an image of his holy coniouynge with the church. What could be spoken more honorably to set out the dignitie of Marriage? With what face therefore shall that be called vnclene or defiled wherein shineth a likenes of the spiritual grace of Christ?

25. But now when their forbidding so evidently fightheth with the word of God, yet they finde in the Scriptures wherewith to defend it. The Leuiticall Priests were bound to he a sunder from their wiuues, so oft as it came to their tunes to minifter, that they might handle the holy things pure and vndefiled. Therefore it were very vncomely, that our holy things, feth they be both much more noble and daily, should be handled of married men. As though there were all one person of the minifter of the Gospell, as was of the Leuiticall Priesthood. For they, as figures, represented Christ, which being the mediator of God & men shoulde with most absolute purenes reconcile the Father unto vs. But when sinners could not in euery behalfe expresse the figure of his holinesse, yet that they might with certaine grofsie draughts yeild a fhardowe of him, they were commanded to purifie themuelles beyond the manner of men, when they came to the Sancturie: namely because they then properly figured Christ, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the tabernacle the image of the heavenly judgement featre. Forasmuch as the Pastors of the Church doe not bare this person in this vs, therefore they are vaine compared with them. Wherefore the Apostle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that marriage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers, and adulterers abideth the judgement of God. And the Apostles themselves did with their own example approve that marriage is not vnmeete for the holinesse of any office be it never so excellent. For Paul wittnesseth that they did not onley kepee wiuues, but also caried them about with them.
26 Againe it was a marvellous shamelesnesse that they darst fett out this sometymes chaste for a necesarie thing, to the great reproch of the old Church: which being abounded with singular learning of God, yet excelled more in holines. For if they passe not upon the Apostles, as they are wont sometime stoutly to defile them what I beseech you will they doe to all the old fathers, whom it is certaine to haue not onely suffered but also allowed marriage in the order of Bishops? They forsooth did nourish a sithilie prophaning of holy things, for so much as to the mysteries of the Lord were not rightly reverence among them. It was mowed indeed in the Nycrene Synode to haue unmarried life commanded: as there alway want not some superstitious men, which do euer invent some new thing, to bring themselves in admiration. But what was decreed? The sentence of Paphnutius was asserted, which pronounced that a man lying with his owne wife is chaste. Thereafter marriage remained holy among them: neither did it turne them to any shame nor was thought to spot the ministrie.

27 Then followed times, in which too superstitious observation of single life grew in force. Hereupon came those often and vnmeasurable advanced praises of virginitie, so that scarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to be compared with it. And although marriage was not condemned for vnclene, yet the dignitie thereof was so diminished, and the holines of it obscured, that he seemd not to aspire with a courage strong enough to perfection, that did not restrain himselfe from it. Hereupon came those canons whereby it was full forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Priesthood should not contract marriage: then, that none should be taken into that order but unmarried men, or such as didnd forake marriage together with their wives. These things, because they seemed to procure reverence to Priesthood, were (I graunt) even from antiquitie received with great well liking. But if the aduerteries object antiquitie against me, first I anwre that this libertie remained both under the Apostles and in certaine ages after them, that bishops might be married: that the Apostles themselves, and other Pastors of great autortic which succeeded in their places, vnd the fame without sticking at it. The example of that ancienter Church ought woorthily to be of greater weight with vs, than that we should thinke that to be either vnlawfull or vncomelie for vs which was then with praffe received and vfed. Secondly I say that that age which for immeasurable affectiow to virginitie began to be parrtial against marriage, did not so laye upon Priestls the law of unmarried life, as though it were a thing necessary of it selfe, but because they preferred unmarried men above the married. Finally I anwre that they did not so require it that they did with force and necessitie constraine them to continence which were not fitte to keepe it. For when they punished whoredoms with most severe laws, of them that contracted marriage they decreed no more but that they should give ouer the execution of their office.

28 Therefore whensoever the defenders of this new tyranny shall fecke the presence of antiquitie to defende their unmarried life: so oft we shall answer them with requiring them, that they restore the old chaste in their Priestls: that they remov adulterers and whoremongers: that they suffer not those in whom they suffer not honeschaste and chastitie of marriage bed, to run vnpunished into all kindes of lust: that they call againe the discontinued discipline, whereby all wantonnesse may be restrained: that they deliver the Church from this so wicked filthine, whereby with it hath beene long deformed. When they have graunted this, then they must againe bee put in minde that they boaste not that thing for necessitie, which lyeth of it selfe at libertie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I say not this for that I thinke that in any condition place is to be given to those canons which ly the bond of unmarried life vpon the order of Priestls: but that the wiser sort may understand with what face our enemies doe slander holy marriage in Priestls by obiecting the name of antiquitie.
The xij. Chapter.

Of vows, by rash promising whereof each man hath miserably entangled himself.

It is verily a thing to be lamented, that the Church, for whom libertie was purchased with the inestimable price of the blood of Christ, hath been so oppressed with cruel tyrannie, and almost overwelled with a huge heape of traditions, but in the mean time every mans private madness sheareth, that not without most just cause there hath beene so much permitted of God to Satan and his ministers. For they thought it not enough, neglecting the commandement of Christ, to bare any burdens whatsoever were laide upon them by false teachers, unless they did also each man procure to himselfe severall burdens of his owne, and so with digging pits for themselves should drowne themselves deeper. This was done while they strived in devising of vows, by which there might be added to the common bondes a greater & straigher binding. Sith therefore we have taught, that by their boldnes whiche have borne rule under the title of pastors in the Church, the worshipping of God hath bin corrupted, when they feared lilly confences with their vnjust lawes: here it shall not bee out of season to adoinie another cuill which is neere vnto it, that it may appeare that the world according to the peruersenes of his owne disposition, hath alway, with such stops as it could, put away the helpe whereby it should have bene brought to God. Nowe, that it may the better appeare that verie grievous hurt hath bene brought in by vows, let the readers keepe in minde the principles aboue set. For first we have taught, that whatsoever may be required to the framing of life godlylie and holily, is comprehended in the law. Againe, we haue taught that the Lorde, that he might thereby the better call vs away from devising of in vs works, hath enclosed the whole prafie of righteousnes in the simple obedience of his will. If these things be true, it is easie to judge that all famed worshippinges, which wee invent to our selves to defentre the favoure of God, are not acceptable to him howe much focuer they please vs. And truly the Lorde himselfe in many places doth not onelie openlie refuse them, but also grievously abhorre them. Hereupon ariseth a doubt of those vows which are made beside the express wordes of God, what account is to bee made of them, whether they may rightly be vowed of Christian men, and howe faire they binde them. For the same which among men is called a promisse, in respect of God is called a vowe. But to men we promise those things either which we thinke will be pleasent vnto them, or which we owe of dutie. Therefore there ought to bee a much greater heedfull obseruation in vows which are directed to God himselfe, with whom wee ought to doe more earnestly. In this point superstition hath in all ages maruellously ranged, so that men without judgment, without chaise, did by and by vowe vnto God whatsoever came in their minde, or into their mouth. Hereupon came those follies, yea monstrous absurdities of vows among the heathen, wherewith they did too insolently mocke with their Gods. And I woulde to God that Christians also had not followed this their boldnes. It ought not indeed to have bene so: but wee see that in certaine ages past nothing hath bene more vsual than this wickednesse, that the people each where despising the lawe of
Cap. 13. Of the outward meanes

God did wholly burne with mad greedinesse to vow whatsoever had pleased them in their dreams. I will not hastily enforce, nor particularly reheare how hainously and how many waies herein men have offended: But I thought good to say this by the way, that it may the better appeare that we do not more question of a needelesse matter, when we intreate of vowes.

2 Now if we will not erre in judging which vowes be lawfull, and which be wrongfull, it bhoueeth to weigh three things: that is to say, who it is to whom the vow is made: who we be that make the vow: last of all, with what mind we vowe. The first point hath respect to this, that we shoule thinke that we haue to do with God, whom our obedience so much delighteth, that he pronounceth all wilworships to be accursed, how gay and glorious soever they bee in the eyes of men. If all voluntarie worships, which we ouerleues deserve without commandement, be abominable to God, it followeth that no worship can be acceptable to him, but that which is allowed by his word. Therefore let vs not take so great libertie to our selues that we dare vowe to God that which hath no testimonie how it is esteemed of him. For whereas that which Paul teacheth, that it is saine whatsoever is done without Faith, extendeth to all doings, then verily it chiefly hath place, when thou directest thy thought the straight way to God. But if we fall and erre euen in the smalllest things, (as Paul there disputeth of the difference of meates) where certaine of faith thineth not before vs: how much more modestie is to be vsed, when we attempt a thing of greatest weight? For nothing ought to be more earnest vnto vs than the duties of religion. Let this therefore be the first consideracion in vowes, that we neuer come to the vowing of any thing, but that conscience haue first certainly determined that it attempteth nothing rashly. But it shall then be free from dauner of rashnesse, when it shall haue God going before it, and as it were enforcing it by his word what is good or unprofitable to be done.

3 In the other thing which we have said to be here to be considered, this is contained, that we measure our owne strengthes, that we haue an eye to our vocation, that we neglect not the benefite of libertie which God hath giuen vs. For he that voveth that which either is not in his power, or disagreeth with his vocation, is rash: and he that despiseth the bountifullnes of God, whereby he is appointed Lord of all things, is vnthankfull. When I say thus, I doe not meane that any thing is so set in our owne hand, that standing uppon confidence of our owne strength we may promisse the same to God. For it was most truely decreed in the Counsell at Arausin, that nothing is rightly vowed to God but that which we haue receiued of his hand, forasmuch as all things that are offered are his meere gifts. But if some things are by Gods goodnes giuen vs, and other some things by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paul commandeth) haue respect to the measure of grace giuen vnto him. Therefore I do here meane nothing els, but that vowes must be tempered to that measure which the Lord prescribeth there in his giuing: least if thou attempt further than he permitted, thou throw thy selue doone headlong with taking too much vpon thee. As for example. When those murthers of whom mention is made in Luke, vowed that they would taffe of no meate till Paul were slaine: although the dueife had not beeone wicked, yet the rashnesse if selue was not to be suffered, that they made the life and death of a man subiect to their power. So Jepth the suffered punishment for his folly, when with headlong heate he conceived an vnoadiese vowe. In which kinde vnmarried life hath the cheefe place of mad boldnesse. For sacrificing Priests, Monkes, and Nunnes, forgetting their owne weakenesse, thinke themselves able to keepe vnmarried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they shall haue chastitie throughout all their life, to the verie ende whereof they vowe it? They heare the word of God concerning the vnierfall state of men. It is not good for man to be alone. They understand, and would to God that they did.
did not seele, that sinne remaining in vs is not without most sharp prickes. With what confidence dare they shake off that generall calling for all their life long; whereas the gift of continencie is ofter granted for a certaine time as opportunitie requireth? In such stubbornesse let them not looke to God to be their helper: but let them rather remember that which is said. Thou shalt not tempt the Lorde thy God. And this is to tempt God, to endeavour against the nature put in vs by him, and to despise his present gifts as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely doe: but also marriage of selfe, which God thought it not against his maiestie to institute, which he hath pronounced honourable in all men, which Christ our Lorde hath sanctified with his presence, which he vouchsafed to humour with his first miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduance with maruellous commendations a certain vnmarried life of what fort foucer it be. As though they themselves did shew a cleare example in their life, that vnmarried state is one thing, and virginitie another: which their life yet they most shamelessly call Angellike, doing herein verily too great injustice to the Angels of God, to whom they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and somewhat else much worse and filther. And truely here neede no arguments when they are openly confuted by the thing it self. For we plainly see, with how horrible paines the Lord doth commonly take vengeance of such arrogancie, and contempt of his gifts by too much trust in themselves. I spare for shame to speake of the more secret faults, of which even this that is already persecuted is too much. It is out of controversie that we ought to vowe nothing, that may hinder vs from serving of our vocation. As if a householder shoulde vowe, that he will leave his wife and his children and take other charges in hand; or if he that is fitt to beare office, when he is chosen do vowe that he will be a priuare man. But what is meant by this, that our libertinie should not be despised, hath some difficultie if it be not declared. Therefore thus in few words I express it. Sith God hath made vs Lords of all things, and hath so made them subject vnto vs that we should vse them all for our commoditie: there is no cause why we should hope that it shalbe an acceptable work to God if we yeeld our selves into bondage to the outward things which ought to be a help vnto vs. I say this for this purpose, because many do hereby seek praise of humilitie, if they shew themselves with many obseruations, from which God not without caufe willed vs to be free and discharged. Therefore if we will escape this danger, let vs alway remember that we ought not to depart from that order which the Lorde hath ordained in the Christian Church.

4 Now I come to that which I did set in the third place: that it is much material with what minde thou makest a vow if thou wilt have it allowed of God. For if the Lord regardeth the heart, not the outward frow, it commeth to passe that the selfe same thing, by changing the purpose of the mind, doth sometime please him and is acceptable vnto him, and sometime highly displeaseth him. If thou so vowe the abstaining from wine, as though there were any holinesse in it, thou art superfluous; if thou have respect to any other end which is not euill, no man can disallow it. But in my judgement there be foure ends, to which our vowes shalbe rightly directed: of which for teachings sake I referre two to the time past, and the other two to the time to come. To the time past belong those vowes, whereby we do either testifie our thankfulnesse to God for benefices received: or to crave the turning away of his wrath, we ourselves do punish ourselves for the offences that we have committed. Let vs call the first, if you will, the exercises of thanksgiving, the other of repentance. Of the first kind we have an example in the tithes which Jacob vowed, if the Lord did bring him home safe out of banishment into his countrey. Againe in the old Sacrifices of the peace offerings, which godlie kings and captaines, when they tooke in hand righteous warre, did vowe that they would pay if they had obtained

The third thing to be respeected in a vow is the mind of the vower, which in vowe that have relation to the time past hath two ends to be directed by.

Cap. 13. Of the outward meanes obtained the victorie, or at least when they were oppressed with any great distress, if the Lord had delivered them. So are all those places in the Psalms to be understand which speak of vows. Such vows may at this day also be in use among vs, so oft as the Lord hath delivered vs either out of any calamity, or from a hard sickness, or from any other danger. For it is then not against the duty of a godly man, to concerate to God his vowed obligation, as a solemn token of his reknowledging, least he should seem unthankfull toward his goodnesse. Of what sorts the seconde kinde is, it shall suffice to shewe with one annoy familiar example. If any by the vice of glutonie be fallen into any offence, nothing withstandeth but that to chastifie his intemperance he may for a time forake all dainty meats, and may doe the same with a vow adjoynd, that he may binde himselfe with the straiter bondes. Yet I doe not so make a perpetuall lawe to them that have likewise offended: but I shewe what is lawfull for them to doe, which shal thinke such a vow profitable for themselves. I doe therefore so make such a vow lawfull, that in the meanes time I leue it at libertie.

5. The vowes that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we have already sai'd) doe tend to this end that we may be made the warer: and partly that as it were by certaine spurre we may be pricked forward to our dutie. Some man seeth himselfe to be so inclined to some certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwise is not euill he cannot temper himselfe from falling forthwith into an euill: he hath doe nothing inconueniently if he doe for a time by vow cut off from himselfe the euill of that thing.
As if a man knowe that this or that apparell of body is perillous vnto him, and yet entiseth with desye he earnestly count it, what can he doe better, than if in putting a bridle upon himselfe, that is in charging himselfe with necessitie of abstaining from it, he deliver himselfe from all doubting? Likewise if a man be forgetfull or slowe to necessarie duties of godliness, why may he not by taking a vow vpon him both awake his memorie and shewe his slothfullnesse? In both I grant that there is a forme of childish schooling; but even in this that they are helpers of weeknesse, they are not without profite vsced of the rawe and vnperfect. Therefore wee shall say that these vows are lawfull which have respect to one of these ends, specially in outward things, if they both be upheld with the allowance of God, and doe agree with our vocation, and be measured by the power of grace giuen us of God.

6. Now also it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes.
There is one common vow of all the faithfull, which being made in baptism we doe conforme and as it were establishe by Catechisme and receiuing of the Supper. For the Sacraments are as charters, by which the Lord deliuereth vs his mercy and thereby euerlafting life, and we againe on our behalves doe promise him obedience.
But this is the forme or verily the soume of the vow, that forsaking Satan we yeeld ourselues into sucrue to God, to obey his holy commandements, and not to followe the peruerser deires of our flees. It ough not to be doubted but that this vow,fish it hath testimonie of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to saluation. And it maketh not to the contrarie, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the lawe which God requireth of vs. For if this forme of covenanteing is comprised within the covenante of grace, ynder which is contained both forgivingnesse of sinnes and the Spirit of sanctification: the promise which we there makke is joyned both with breveching of pardon and with craving of helpe. In juding of particular vowes, it is necessarie to keep in minde the three forenamed rules, whereby we may safely weigh of what for everie vow is. Neither yet thinke that I doe commend the very same vowes which I affirme to be holy, that I would haue them to be daily. For though I dare teach no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my counsell he shall take vpon him none but sober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake soorth into making of manie vowes, all religiones will with verie continuance growe out of estimacion with the, and thou shalt come to a bending readinesse to fall into superstition. If thou bind thy selfe with a perpetuall vowe, either for great paine and tediousnesse thou shalt vndo it, or being wearied with long continuance thou shalt at one time or other be bold to breake it.

7 Now also it is plaine with how great superstition in this behalfe the world hath in certaine ages past bin pollust. One man vowed that he would abstaine from wine: as though abstaining from wine were of it selfe a worship acceptable to God. An other bound himselfe to fasting, an other to abstaining from flesh for certaine daies, in which he had with vaine opinion fained to be a singular holiness aboue the rest. And some things also were vowed much more childish, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wisdome, to take vpon them vowed pilgrinages to holier places, and sometime either to go all their journey on foot, or with their body half naked, that by their weariness the more merite might be gotten. These and such other, with incredible zealke whereof the world hath a while swelled, if they be examined by those rules, which we have above fet, shall be found not onely vaine and trifling, but full of manifest vngodlines. For howsoever the fith judge, God abhorret nothing more than fained worshippings. There are besides the those pernicious and damned opinions, that hypocrits when they haue such trifles thinke that they haue gotten no small rightcounses: they repose the sum of godliness in outward obseruations, they despise all other that are lefte carfull of such things.

8 To reekon vp all the particular formes, is nothing to purpose. But forasmuch as the monkish vowes are had in greater reverence, because they seeme allowed by the common judgement of the Church: of those it is good to speake briefely. First least any should by prescription of long time defend monikerie, such as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in monasteries a far other order of living. Such as were disposed to exercise themselves to greatest lustrie and patience, went thither. For what manner of discipline they say that the Lacedemonians had under the lawes of Lycurges, such was at that time among the monks, yea and much more rigorous. They slept vpon the ground: their drinks was water: their meate was bread, herbs, and rootes: their chiefe dainties were in oyle and ciches. They abstained from all delicate diet and trimming of body. These things might seeme about truch, if they were not written by witneses that sawe & proved them, as Gregorie Na-

Rinus Zene, Eulippe, and Chrysizime. But with such introductions they prepared thesclues to great offices. For, that the colleges of monks were then as it were the seedplots of the order of minifters of the Church, both those whom we have now named are a proofe plaine enough (for they were all brought vp in monasteries and from thence called to the office of bishops) and also many other singular and excellent men in their time. And Augustine thoweth that this was also vied in his time, that monasteries yeolded clerkes to the Church. For he speake citevth to the monkes of the Ile of Capraeae: But you brethren we exhort in the Lord, that ye kepe your purpose & continue to the end: and if at any time our mother the Church shall require your travaile, do ye neither with greedy pride take it vpon you, nor with flattering foolishnes refuse it: but with a meeker heart obey to God. Neither prefer ye your owne quiet leasure above the necessities of the church: to whom if no good men would have ministred in her travaile, you should not have found how you should have beene borne. He speake citevth there of the minifterie, by which the faithful are spiritually borne againe, Also to Aurelius. There is both occasion of falling given to themselves, and most haynous wrong done to the order of the Clergy, if forakers of monasteries be chosen to the fellowship of the Clergy: when euue of those that remaine in the monASTERIE, we vse to take into the Clergy none but the most approoved and best. Unless perhaps as the common people say, he is an euill piper, but a good fiddler: so it shal also be.
Cap. 13. Of the outwarde meanes

lestingly fade of vs, he is an euill Monke, but a good Clerke. It is too much to be lamented, if we lift vp Monkes into such a ruinous pride, and thinke Clearkes woorthy of so great reproch, whereas sometime evne a good monke maketh not a good clerke, if he haue sufficient continence and yet want necessary learning. By these places it apareth, that godly men were wont with the discipline of Monks to prepare themselves to the government of the Church, that they might the fitter and better instructed take to great an office upon them. Not that they all attained to this ende, or yet tended toward it, when for the moft part they were vnlearned men: but such were chosen out as were meete for it.

9  But chiefly in two places he painteth out vs the forme of the old mon-erie. In the booke of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he setteth the holiness of that profesison against the schaunders of the Manichees: and in another booke which he entiteld the worke of Monkes, where he inueth against certaine degendred Monkes, which began to corrupt that order. I will here so gather a summe of those things which he faith, that so neree as I may I will vs his owne words. Despising (faith he) the intimes of this world, gathered into one moft chaft and holy life, they spend their time together, liuing in prayers, readings, and disputations, not dwelling with pride, not troublesome with stubbornesse, not wannne with enuiousnesse. None possifeth any thing of his owne, none is burdenous to any man.
They get by working with their hands those things wherewith both their body may be fed, and their minde may not be hindered from God. Their worke they deliver to them whom they call Deanes. Those Deanes disposing all things with great carefulnes make account thereof to one whom they call Father. These Fathers not onely most holy in manners, but also most excellent in godlie doctrine, high in all things, doe with no pride proide for them whom they call children, with great authoritie of them in commandig, and great willingnes of the other in obeying: They come together at the very last time of the day, every one from his dwelling, while they be yet fattig, to heare that Father, and there meete together to every one of these fathers at the leaft three thousand men, (he speaketh chiefly of Egypt, and of the East) then they refresh their body, so much as sufficeth for life and healthfulnesse, every man restraining his desire, not to take largely even of those things that they have present very spare and vile. So they do not onely abstinence from flesh and wine, so much that they may be able to tame their lustes, but from such things which doe so much more greedily provoke appetite of the belly and thoroe, how much they fecom to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour wherof the filthy desire of exquisite meates, which is not in flesh, is wont to be fondly and fowly defended. Whatsoever remaineth above necessarie foode (as there remaineth onetime much of the workes of their handes and pinching of their fare) is with greater care distributed to the poore, than it was gotten by them that distribute it. For they doe in no wise traualle that they may have abundance of these things, but they by all meanes endeavour that that which they have abounding may not remaine with them. Afterward when he hath rehearsed the hardnes, whereof he himselfe had scene examples both at Miltaine and elde where:

among these things (faith he) no man is enforced to harde thinges which he cannot beare: no man is charged with that which he refuseth: neither is he therefore condemned of the rest, because he confesseth himselfe to want strength in following of them: for they remember how much charitie is commended: they remember that all things are cleane to the cleane. Therefore all their diligence watch-eth, not to the refusing of kindes of meate as vniclense, but to tame lust, and to retain the loue of brethren. They remember, meate for the belly, and the bellie for meates, &c. Yet many strong doe abstaine for the weakes sake. Many of them haue no neede to doe thus: but because it please them to sustaine themselves with safier diet and nothing fumptuous. Therefore they themselfes, which being in health doe forbeare, if consideration of their health compell, when they are sick doe take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, and yet they thinke not themselues defiled with it: for they most gently caufe it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that cannot gethe the health of their bodie without it: and some which foolishly refuse it, they doe brotheily admonish, that they be not with vaine superstition sooner made weaker than holie. So they diligently exercise godlineffe: but they know that the exercising of the body pertaineth but to a short time. Charity is chiefly kept: to charity the diet, to charity the speech, to charity the apparell, to charity the countenance is fitted. They meeete and conspire into one charity. To offend it, is accounted as hainous as to offend God. If any refift charity, he is call out and thunnde. If any offend charity, he is not suffered to abide one day. For as much as in these worde, as in a painted table, that holy man feemeth to have set out what manner of life monkerie was in olde time, although they were somewhat long, yet I was content to interlace them here: because I knew that I should have been somewhat longer if I had gathered the same things out of divers, how much soever I studied for brefiennes.

10 But my purpose here is not to go through this whole matter, but onely by the way to point out, not onely what manner of monkes the olde Church had, but what manner of thing the profession of monkes was at that time: so as the sounde witted readers may judge by the comparison, what face they haue which alleage antiquitie to maintaine the present monkerie. Augustime when he depainteth vs vs a holy and true monkerie, would haue to be abstent all rigorous exacting of those things which by the word of the Lorde are left vs at libertie. But there is nothing that is at this day more severely required. For they count it a mischief that can never be purged, if any doe not so little svarue from the prescribed rule in colour or fashion of garment, in kinde of meate, or in other trifling and cold ceremonies. Augustime stoutly maintaineth, that it is not lawfull for monks to live idle vpon other mens. He denieth that there was ever in his time any such example of a well ordered monasterie. Our men set the chief parte of their holines in idlenes. If you take idlenes from them, there shall be that contemplauetall life whereby they boast that they excell all other men, and approache neere vnto Angels? Finally Augustine requireth such a monkerie, as should be nothing but an exercisce & help to the duties of godlines which are commended to al christians. What when he maketh charity the chief, yea & almost only rule thereof, do we thinke that he praiseth a conspiring, whereby a fewe men being bound together, are seuered from the whole body of the church? But rather he will eth them with their example to giue light to other to keepe the vnitie of the Church. In both these points there is so much difference of the monkerie at this present, that a man can scarce see any thing more vnlike, I wil not say contrarie. For our monks not contented with that godlines, to the studie of which alone Christ commandeth them that are his continually to apply, do imagine I wont not what new godlines, by meditation whereof they may be perfecter than other.

18 If they denie this, I would know of them why they vouchsafe to giue to their order alone the title of perfection, & take away the same from all the callings of god. Neither am I ignorant of that sophisticall solution, that it is not therefore so called because it doth contenye perfection init, but because it is the best of all other to attaine perfection. When they are disposed to boast themselues before the people, when to saire vnskilfull and vnware yong men, when to maintaine their privilages, when to aduancetheir owne dignitie to the reproch of other, then they boast that they are in the state of perfection. When they are so nigh druen that they cannot defende this vaine arroganctie, then they flee to this starting hole, that they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the same state wherein they aspire vnto it about other. In the mean time that admiration among the people remaineth, as though the onely monkes life were angelike, perfect, and cleane from all fault. By this this pretence they make most gainfull markets, but that same moderation lieth buried in a fewe books. Who doth not see that this is an intollerable mockerie? But let vs so reason with them, as though they gave no more to their profession than to call it a state of attaining perfection. Verily in gning it this name, they do as by a special mark make it differing from other kinds of life. And who can abide this, that so great honor should be gien away to an ordinance that is no where by any one syllable allowed: and that by the same all other callings of God, which are by his owne holy mouth not only commanded, but also commended with notable titles of praise, are by the same accounted vnworthie? And how great wrong (I beseech you) is done to God, when I wot not what new found thing is preferred above all the kinde of life ordained by himselfe, and praised by his owne testimony?

12 But go to, let them say that it is a slander which I haue before saide, that they are not contented with the rule prescribed of God. Yet though I hold my peace, they themselves do more then enough accuse themselues. For they openly teach, that they take vpon them more burden than Christ laid vpon his: because forsooth they promise to kepe the counsels of the Gospell concerning loving their enemies, not coveting of revenge, nor swearing, &c. To which things Christians are not generallie bound. Herein what antiquitie will they shew forth against vs? This newer came in any of the old fathers minde. They all crye out with one voice that there was no one little worde at all vterted of Christ, which ought not necessarily to be obeyed. And without any doubting they doe everywhere teach, that these very saies by name were commandements, which these good expounders trillingly lay, that Christ did but counsel. But forasmuch as we haue before taught that this is a most pestilent error, let it suffice here to haue breefely noted that the monikerie which is at this daie, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthy to abhorre: which is, that there should be imagined some perfecte rule of life, than this common rule which is gien of God to the whole church. Whatsoever is builded vpon this foundation, cannot be but abominable.

13 But they bring another prooue of their perfection, which they thinke to bee most strong for them. For the Lord said to the young man that asked him of the perfection of righteounesse, if thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou haist and give it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I do not yet dispute: but grant them that for this present. Therefore they boast that they are made perfect by forsaking all theirs. If the sum of perfection stand in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth, that he which hath distributed all his goods to the poore, vnselle he have charitie, is nothing? What manner of perfection is this, which if charitie bee absent, is brought with man to nothing? Here they must needs answer, that this is the chiefest in deed, but not the onely worke of perfection. But here also Paul crieth against them, which stinke not to make charitie the bond of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it bee certaine that betweene the master and the disciple is no disagreement, and the one of them cleere denyeth the perfection of man to consist in this that he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see how that saying of Christ is to be taken. If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou haist. Now, it shall be no darke sense, if we weigh (which we ought alway to marke in all the preachings of Christ) to whom these wordes be directed. A young man asketh, by what works he shall enter into everlafting life. Christ, because lie was asked of worke, sendeth him to the lawe, and rightfully: for it is the way of everlafting life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bring salvation vnto vs but by our owne permesseffe. By this answere Christ declareth, that he taught no other rule to frame life by, than the same that had in olde time beene taught in the lawe of the Lorde. So did he both giue witness to the lawe of God, that it was the doctrine of perfectrighteounesse: and therewithall did meeke with flaunders, that he should not seeme by a newe rule rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the law. The young man being in deed not of an euill minde, but dwelling with vaine confidence, answered that he had from his childhood kept all the commandements of the lawe. It is most certaine that he was an infinite space distant from that to which he boasted that he had attained. And if his boasting had beene true, he had wanted nothing to the highest perfection. For we haue before shewed, that the law containeth in it selfe perfect righteousesse: and the same appeareth thereby that the keeping of it is called the way of eternall salvation. That he might be taught to knowe how little he had profited in that righteousesse, which he had so boldly answered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake ouf a familiar fault of his. When he aboundeth in riches, he had his hart fastened vpon them. Therefore because he felt not this secret wound, Christ shewed him. Go (sainth he) fell all that thou hast. If he had beene so good a keeper of the lawe as he thought he was, he woulde not have gone away sorrowfull when he hearde this word. For who so loueth God with all his hart, whatsoever disagreeeth with the loue of him, he not onely taketh it for dung, but abhorreth as bringing destruction. Therefore whereas Christ commanded the courteous rich man to leave all that he hath, it is all one, as if he should command the ambitious man to forsake all honours, the voluptuous man all delights, and the enchafted man all the instruments of lust. So conffences that are toucht with no feeling of genetall admonition, must bee called backe to the particular feeling of their owne euill. Therefore they doe in vaine draw this speciall case to generall exposition, as though Christ did set the perfection of a man in forsaking of goodes, whereas he meant nothing else by this laying, than to drive the young man that tooke too much in his owne conceit, to feele his owne euile, that he might understand that he was yet a great way distant from perfect obedience of the lawe, which otherwise he did falsely take vpon him. I grant that this place hath bene euill understood of some of the fathers, and that thereupon grewe this courting of wilful povertie, whereby they onely were thought to bee blessed, which forsaking all earthly things, did dedicate themselves naked to Christ. But I trall that all the good and not contentious men will be satisfied with this my exposition, so that they shall no more doubt of the meaning of Christ.

14 Howbeit the fathers thought nothing lesse than to stablish such perfection, as hath since beene framed by the cowled iopistles, thereby to raise vp a double Christia-nitie. For that doctrine full of scruple was not yet borne, which compariseth the profission of monkerie to baptism, yet and openly affirmeth, that it is a forme of second baptism. Who can doubt that the fathers with all their hart abhorred this blaspheemie? Now as touching that last thing, which Augusetine faith to have beene among the old monks, that is, that they applied themselves wholly to Chrystie: what neede I to shew in words that it is most fit from this new profession? The thing it selfe spake-thethat al they that go into Monasteries, depart from the Church. For why? Do not they feuer themselves from the lawfull fellowship of the faithful in taking to themselves a peculiar ministrie and private ministration of Sacraments? What is it to disolute the communion of the Church, if this be not it? And (that I may follow the comparison which I began to make, and may once conclude it) what have they in this behalfe like to the old monks? They although they dwelt severally from other men, yet not a feueral Church: they did partake of the sacraments together with other: they appeared at solemn assemblies: there they were a part of the people. These men in erecting to themselfes a private altar, what have they else done but broken the bond of vnitie? For they have both excommunicate themselves from the whole body of the Church, and have despited the ordinare ministrie, whereby the Lord willed to have peace and chrystie kept among his. Therefore how many ministries there be at this day, I say that there be so many assemblies of schismatics, which troubling the order of the Church, are cut off from the lawfull fellowship of the faithful.
And that this departing should not be secrete, they haue given to themselves diuers names of sectes. Neither were they ashamed to boast of that, which Paul doth so distinctly declare that he cannot sufficiently amplifie the harmousnesse of it. Unlesse perhaps we thinke that Christ was divided of the Corinthians, when one gloried of one teacher, and another of another: and that now it is done without any injurie to Christ, that in stead of Christians we heare some called Benedictines, some Franciscanes, some Dominicans: and that they are so called, that they themselues when they couet to be severally known from the common sort of Christians, doe with great pride take these titles to them for the profession of their religion.

15. These differences which I haue hitherto rehearsed betweene the old monkes and the monkes of our age, are not differences in manneres, but in the profession it selfe. Therefore let the reader remember that I haue rather spoked of monkerie then of monkes, and haue touched those faults, not which stick in the life of a few of them, but which cannot be severed from their every order of living it selfe. But what difference is in their manneres, what neede I particularly to declare? This is certaine, that there is no degree of men more defiled with all filthinesse of vices, then where are factions, hatreds, affections of parties, ambitions hotter than among them. In deed in a few monasteries they lie unduly chaffily, if it be to be called chaffitie where lust is so farre kept downe that it be not openly euill spoken of: yet a man shall scarcely finde every tenth monasterie which is not rather a several holy house of chaffitie. But what honest sparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwise fatted in flies. Earleast they should complain that I handle them too vigently, I go no further. Howbeit in those few things which I haue touched, who soever knoweth the thing it selfe will confesse that there is nothing spoken a cruel-like, Augustine, when according to his testimonie monkes excelled in greater chaffitie, yet complaineth that there were many vagabonds, which with euill crafts and deceits wiped simple men from their mony, which with carrying about the relics of martyrs did use filthy marchandizings, yes and in Reede of the relics of martyrs did sew thofew the bones of any other dead men, and which with many such wicked doings flaunted the order. As he reporteth that he saw no better men then them which haue profited in monasteries, so he lamenteth that he hath seene no worse men than those that disprofited in monasteries. What would he say if at this day he saw all monasteries to swell, and in a manner to burst with so many and so dispaired vices? I speake nothing but that which is well known to all men. Yet doth not this dispraise pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule and discipline of living so holyly established in monasteries, but that there remained some drones much unlike thereunto: so I doe not so that monkes are at this day so run out of kinde from that holy antiquitie, but that they have yet some good men in their flocke. But they lie hidden a few and scattered in that huge multitude of naughtie & wicked men: and they are not only despiseth, but often most cruelly handled of other, which (as the Milefian proverbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any honest man among them.

16. By this comparison of the olde and present monkerie, I trust I haue brought to passe that which I purposed, that it may appeare that our cowled men do falsly pretend the example of the first Church for defence of their profession: for as much as they no lesse differ from them than apes from men. In the mean time I stick not to declare, that even in that olde forme which Augustine commendeth, there is somewhat which little pleaceth me. I grant that they were not superfluous in exacting the outward exercises of rougher discipline, but I say that there wanted not too much affectation and wrongful zeale. It was a goodly thing, forsaking their goods, to be without all earthly carenesse: but God more effectuall care to rule a household godly, when a holy householder being loose and free from all croucenesse, ambition, and other diuers of the flesh, travelleth to this purpose to serve God in a certaine vocation. It is a godly thing to play the Philosopher in wildernesse fare from the companie of men but it agreeth not with Christian gentlenes as it were for hatred of mankind to flie into defett and solitarines, and therewithall to forsake those duties which the Lord hath chiefly commanded. Although we grant that there was no other cuill in that profession, yet this verily was no small cuill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perilous example into the Church.

17 Now therefore let vs see what manner of vowes they be, wherewith monks at this day are professed into this gudly order. First, because their minde is to institute a new & fained worshipping to defteue Gods fauour: I concluded by the things afore spoken that whatsoever they vowe is abominable before God. Secondlie without any regard of Gods calling, without any his allowance, they invent for them such a kinde of liuing, as pleaseth themselves. I faiue that it is a rash, and therefore an unlawfull enterprize: because their conscience hath nothing whereupon it may vpholde it selue before God, and whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. Moreover when they binde themselves to manie pervertse and wicked worships, which the monerike at this day containeth in it, I affirme that they bee not consecrate to God, but to the duell. For why was it lawfull for the Prophet to say, that the Israelites offered their children to duels and not to God onely for this that they had corrupted the true worshipping of God with profane Ceremonies: and shall it not be lawfull for vs to faie the fame of monks, which with their owle do put vpon themselves a inure of a thousand wicked superstitions? Now what sorts of vowes are there? They promise to God perpetuall virginitie, as though they had bargained with God before, that he shoulde deliver them from need of marriage. There is no cause why they shoulde alledge, that they doe not make this vowe but trufting vpon the grace of God. For he pronounceseth that he giueth it notto all, men, it is not in vs to conceive a confidence of a speciall gift. Let them that haue it, vsue it. If at any time they feele themselves to be troubled of their flesh, let them flee to this helpe by whose onely power they may resiue. If they preuayle not, let them not despise the remedie that is offered them. For them by the certaine worde of God are called to mariage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not whereby the bodie is onely kept cleane from whoredome, but whereby the minde keepeth chastitie undefiled. For Paul commandeth not onely outward wantonnesse, but also the burning of the minde, to be avoided. This (as they) hath from furthest time of memorie been observed, that they which would dedicate themselves wholly to the Lord, should bind themselves to the vowe of continence. I grant indeed that this manner hath also been of ancient time receued: but I doe not grant that that age was so free from all fault, that whatsoever was then done must be taken for a rule. And by little & little this snappable seuerity crept in, that after a vowe made there was no roome for repentance. Which is evident by Cyprians. If virgins haue of faith dedicated themselves to God, let them continue shamefully, and chastely without any faining. So being strong and stedfast, let them look for the reward of virginitie But if they will not or cannot continue, it is better that they should marrie than with their delights fall into the fire. What reproches would they now spare to teare him withall, that would with such equitie temper the vowe of continence? Therefore they are departed farre from that ancient maner, which will not onely admit no moderation or pardon if any be found vnable to performe his vow: but they do without all shame pronounce that he finneth more greeuously if he remedi the intemperance of the flesh with taking a wife, than if he defehe both his body and soule with whoredome.

18 But they still enforce the matter, and go about to shew that such a vowe was vied in the Apostles time: because Paul faith that the widowes which haue beene once receued into the publike ministerie did marrie, denied their first faith. But I do not denie to them, that the widowes, which bound themselves and their

The vowes where-with monks at this day enter into that order: as first perpetuall virginitie.

Cap. 13. Of the outward meanes

services to the Church, did therewithall take upon them the bond of continual unmarried life: not because they repose any religion therein, as it afterward began to be used: but because they could not beare that office but being at their owne libertie and loose from yoke of marriage. But if, when they had once giuen their faith, they looked backe to newe marriages, what was this else but to shake off the calling of God? Therefore it is no maruell that with such desires he faith that they waxe wanton against Christ. Afterward to amplifie the matter he faith, that they do so not performe that which they haue promised to the Church, that they do also brake and make voide their first Faith giuen in Baptisme: in which this is comprehended, that every man should answer his calling. Vnlesse perhaps you had rather understand it thus, that hauing as it were lost all blame, they did from hence foorth cast away all care of honestie, did giue foorth themselves to all wantonnesse and vnauctoritie, and did in licentious and dissolute life resemble nothing lesse than Christian women: which sense I like very well. Therefore we answere, that those widdowes which were then received to publike ministrerie, did lay upon themselves a bond to continue unmarried: if they afterward married, we safely perceive that that happened to them which Paul spake of, that casting away shame they became more wanton than be seemed Christian women. That to they not only sinned, in breaking their faith giuen to the Church, but swarowed from the common lawe of godly women. But first I deme that they did professe unmarried life for any other reason, but because marriage agreed not with that ministrerie which they tooke in hand: and I deme that they did bind themselves at all to singe life, but so farre as the necessite of their vocation did beare. Againe I do not grant that they were so bound, but that it was then also better for them to marry, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the flesh, or to fall into any vnleannes. Thirdly I say that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commonly out of danger: specially fith he commandeth them onely to be chosen, which contented with one marriage have already shewed a token of their continence. And we do for no other reason disallow the vow of unmarried life, but because it is wrongfully taken for a service of God, and it is rashly vowed of them to whom power of continence is not giuen.

19 But how was it lawfull to draw this place of Paul to Nunnes? For there were created deaconesses, not to delight God with singing and with murmuring not understanded, and liue the rest of their time idle: but that they should execute publike ministratio toward the poore, that they should with all study, earnestnes and diligence, endeavour themselves with the duties of charitie. They did not vow unmarried life, to yeeld thereby any worship to God because they abstained from marriage: but onely because they were thereby the more uncommed to execute their office. Finally they did not vow it, either in the beginning of their youth, or yet in the midst of their flowing age, that they might afterward learn too late by experience in to how great a headlong downfall they had thrown themselves: but when they seemed to have passed al danger, then they vowed a no lesse safe than holy vow. But (not to enforce their first two points) I say it was not lawfull to have women received to vow continence before the age of threescore yeeres: forasmuch as the Apostle admitted onely women of fixtie yeeres old, and commandeth the younger to marry and bring forth children. Therefore, neither that release made of twelue yeeres, and then twentie, and afterward of thirtie yeeres can be any way excused: and much lesse is it tolerable, that fillie maides, before that they can by age knowe themselves, or haue any experience of themselves, are not onely trained by fraude, but constrained by force and threatnings to put on those cursed smares. I will not raise upon confusing the other two vows. Onely this I saye: besides this that they bee intangled with not a fewe superstitions, (as the matter is nowe a dajies) they seeme to be made to this purpose, that they which vowe them should mocke both God and men, men. But lest we should seeme too maliciously to shake vp every small parcel, we will be content with that generall confutiation which is above.

20 What manner of vowe$es$ be lawfull and acceptabele to God, I thinke is sufficiently declared. Yet because sometime vnskilfull and fearefull confences, even when they mislike or disallow any vowe, doe nevertheless doubt of the binding, and are greuously tormented, when they both dread to breake their Faith gien to God, and on the other side they feare leaft they should more finne in keeping it: here they are to be succoured, that they may winde themselves out of this diftresse. But, to take away all doubt at once: I say that all vowe$es$ being not lawfull, nor rightly made, as they are nothing wortthe before God, so ought to be voide to vs. For if in contraries of men those promises ouely doe bind, in which he with whom we contract, would have vs bound: it is an absurditie, that we should be driven to the keeping of those things which God doth not require of vs: specially if our worke is no otherwise right, but when they please God, and when confences have this testimonie that they pleafe him. For this remaineth certaine, whatsoever is not of Faith, is finne. Whereby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hand with doubting, is therefore faultie, because Faith is the roote of all good worke$es$, by which we are assured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it be lawfull for a Christian man to goe about nothing without this assurednes: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hand, why should they not afterward give it ouer when they bee deliuered from errors? Sith vowe$es$ vnaduisedly made are fuch, they doe not only nothing bind, but are necessarily to bee vndone. Yea, what if they are not onely nothing esteemed, but also are abominable in the sight of God, as is aboue shewed? It is needes to discoure any longer of a matter not needesfull. This one argument seemeth to mee to be enough to pacifie godly confences & deliuer them of all doubt: that whatsoever works do not flow out of the pure fountaine & be not directed to the lawful end, are refuted of God: & so refuted that he no les forbiddeth vs to goe forward in the, than to begin the. For hereupon foloweth, that those vowe$es$ which proceed of error and superstition, are both of no value before God, and to bee forsaken of vs.

21 Morcouer he that shall know this solutio$en$, shall haue wherewith he may defend against the fraudles$es$ of the wicked, them that depart from Monkerie to fome honest kinde of life. They are grievously accused of breach of Faith and perjuriue, because they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the intoluble bonde wherewith they were bound to God and to the Church. But I say that there was no bond where God doth abrogate that which man confirmeth. Morcouer, admitting that they were bound, when they were holden intangled with not knowing of God, and with error: now since they are lightened with the knowledge of the truth, I say that they are therewithall free by the grace of Chrift. For if the croffe of Chrift haue to great effectualitie, that it loofeth vs from the curse of the law of God, wherewith we were holden bound, how much more shall it deliuer vs from foreine bonds, which are nothing but the snaring netts of Satan? To whomsoever therefore Chrift thineth with the light of his Gospe$ell$, it is no doubt that he loofeth them from all staires which they had put vpon them$e$themselves by superstition. Howbeit they want not yet another defence, if they were not firt to bee vnmarrie$ed$. For if an impossible vow be a sure destruction of the Soule, whom the Lord would have saved and not deftroyed: it followeth that we ought not to continue therein. But how impossible is the vow of continence to them that are not indued with a singular gift, we haue alreadie taught, and experience speake$eth$ it though I hold my peace. For neither is it unknovens with how great silthins$e$ almost all monakerie$es$ doe swarme. And if any of them feme hone$fter$, and more saine$e$falso than the rest, yet they are not therefore chaft because they suppress it and keepe in the fault of vnchaftitie. So verily God doth with horible examples take vengeance on the boldnes of men, which forgetting their own weake-

Of the outwärde meanes nece, do against nature courte that which is denied them, and despying the remedies which the Lord had given them at hand, do stuff that they can with stubbornnes and obstenacie overcome the disease of incontinence. For what else shall wee call it but stubbornnes, when one being warned that he needeth marriage, & that the same is given him of the Lord for a remedie, doth not only despise it, but also bindeth himselfe with an oath to the despying of it.

The xiii. Chapter.

Of Sacraments.

The definition of a Sacrament.

Because the preaching of the Gospell, another helpe of like sort is in the Sacraments: of which to have some certaine doctrine taught, is much behoefeful for vs; whereby we may learn to what end they were ordained, and what is nowe the vs of them. First it is meet to consider what is a Sacrament. It seemeth to me that this shall be a plaine and proper definition, if we say that it is an outward signe, whereby with the Lord saileth to our conscience the promis o his good will toward vs, to sustaine the weaknesses of our faith, and we againe on our behalfe do testifye our godlines toward him as well before him & the Angels as before men. We may also with more briefenes define it otherwife: as to call it a testimonie of Gods saufour toward vs confirmed by an outward signe, with a mutuall testifying of our godlines toward him. Whethersoever you choose of these definitions, it differeth nothing in sense from that definition of Augustine, which teacheth that a Sacrament is a visble signe of a holy thing, or a visble forme of invisible grace: but it dooth better and more certainly expresse the thing it selfe. For whereas in that briefenes there is some darkness, wherein many of the vnskillfuller sort are deceived: it thought good in more wordes to give a fuller sentence, that there should remaine no doubt.

2 For what reason the old writers vsed this worde in that sense, it is not hard to see. For so oft as the old translator would render in Latine this Greeke worde Mystereion mysterie, specially when divine matters were intreated of, he translated it Sacrament. So to the Ephesians, that he might make knowne vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Again, if ye yet vse haue heard the distribution of the grace of God, which is given to me in you, because according to reclamation the Sacrament was made known to me. To the Coloffians, The Mystere which hath been hidden from ages and generations, but now is manifested to his Saints, to whom the Lord woulde make known the riches of this Sacrament, &c. Again, to Timothie, A great Sacrament of godlines: God is openly shewed in the flesh. He would not say a secret, lest he should seeme to say somwhat under the greatnes of the things. Therefore he hath put Sacrament in stead of Secret, but of a holy thing. In that signification it is sometyme found among the ecclesiastical writers. And it is well known, that those which in Latine are called Sacramentes, in Greeke are Mysteries: which expressing of one thing in two severall words endeth all the contention. And hereby it came to passe that it was drawn to those signes which had a reuerend representation of high and spiritual things. Which Augustine also noteith in one place. It were long (that he) to diuerte the diuersitie of signes, which when they pertaine to divine things, are called Sacraments.

3 Now of this definition which we haue fet, we understand that a Sacrament is never without a promis going before it, but rather is adioyned as a certaine addition hanging to it, to this ende that it should confirm and seale the promisse it selfe, and make it more approv'd vnto vs, yea after a certaine maner ratified. Which mean the Lord forefeeth to bee needfull, first for our ignorance and dullnes, and then for our weaknesses: and yet (to speake properly) not so much to confirme his holy word, as to stablith vs in the Faith thereof. For the truth of God is by it selfe found and certaine enough, and cannot from any other where receive better confirmation than from it selfe: But our Faith, as it is small and weake, vnlesse it be stayed on every side, and be by all meanes vpheelden, is by and by shaken, wavereth, flaggeth, yea, and fainteth. And hcrein vundy the mercifull Lord according to his great tender kindnesse tempereth himselfe to our capacitie: that whereas we be naturally men, which alwaye creeping vpon the ground, and tikiing fait in the fleth, doe not thinke nor so much as conclude any spiritual things, he vouchsaeth euyn by these earthly elements to guide vs vnto himselfe, and in the fleth it selfe to set foorth a mirror of spirtual good things. For if we were vnbodyly (as Chrysofomone faith) he would have gven vs the very same things naked and vnbodyly. Now because we have Soules put within bodies, he giueth spirtuall things vnder visible things. Not because there are such giiftes planted in the natures of the things which are set foorth to vs in the Sacraments: but because they were signified by God to this signification.

4 And this is it which they commonly say, that a Sacrament consists of the word and the outward signe. For we must understand the word to be, not that which being whispered without meaning and Faith, with only noisye as it were with a magicall enchantment hath power to consecrate the element: but which being preacheth maketh vs to understand what the visible signe meaneth. Therefore that which was vniuely done vnder the tyrannie of the Pope, was not without a great profuining of the mysteries. For they thought it enouogh, if the Priest, while the people floode amasedly gazin at it without understanding, did mumble vs the forme of consecration. Yea, they of sence purpose provided this, that no whit of doctrine shoule thereof come to the people: for they spake all things in Latine before vnlearned men. Afterward superstition brake out so farre, that they beleued that the consecration was not formally made, vnlesse it were with a hoarse whispering found which fewe might heare. But Augustine teacheth forawe of the Sacramentall worde. Let the word (faith hee) be added to the element, and there shall be made a Sacrament. For whence commeth this so great strength to the water, to touch the bodie and wash the soule, but by the worde making it? not because it is spoken, but because it is beleued. For in the vnde word itselfe the founde which passeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is another. This is the word of Faith which wee preach, faith the Apostle, Whereupon in the Acts of the Apostles it is faide, by faith cleansing their hearts. And Peter the Apostle faith, So baptism also saueth vs: not the putting away of the filthines of the flesh, but the examination of a good conference. This is the word of Faith which we preach: by which without doubt, that it may be able to cleanse, Baptisme is also hallowed You see how it requireth preaching, whereupon faith may grow. And we neede not to trauell much in proufe hereof, forasmuch as it is cleare what Christ did, what he commanded vs to do, what the Apostles followed, what the purer Church obferued. Yea even from the beginning of the world it is known, that so oft as God offered any signe to the holy fathers, there was added an vnseparable knot of doctrine, without which our signes should be made amazed with bare beholding. Therefore when we heare mention made of the Sacramentall word, let vs understand the promife, which being with a loude voice preached of the minister, may lead the people thither as it were by the hand, whether the signe tendeth and directeth vs.

5 Neither are sone to be heard which trauell to fight against this, with a double horned argument rather fudle than found. Either (say they) we knowe, or we know not, that the word of God which goeth before the Sacrament, is the true will of God. If we know it, then we learne no new thing of the Sacrament which followeth after. If we know it not, then neither will the Sacrament teach it: whole whole force standeth in the worde. Whereunto let this briefly be for an answer: that the scales..
which are hanged at patents and other publike instruments, taken by themselfes are nothing, for as much as they should be hanged in vaine if the parchment had nothing written in it: yet they do not therefore not conforme and scale that which is written when they be added to writings. Neither can they say that this similitude is lately fauned by vs, which Paul himselfe vfed, calling circumcision a scale, where he purposely trauelleth to prove, that circumcision was not righteousness to Abraham, but a sealing of that covenant, by faith whereof he had already beene justified before. And what, I beseech you is there that may much offend any man, if we teach that the promise is sealed with Sacraments, when of the promises themselves it is evident that one is confirmed with another? For as euer one is manifester, so is it more fit to upheld faith. But the Sacraments do both bring most clear promises, and have this peculiar more than the word, that they lively represent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that distinction any thing to move vs, which is wont to be objected betweene Sacraments and scales of patents: that whereas both consist of carnall elements of this world, those cannot suffice or be meeke to scale the promises of God, which are spirituall and everlastinge, as these are wont to be hanged to, for sealing of the grants of Princes concerning fading and scale things. For a faithful man, when the Sacraments are present before his eyes, sticketh not in that fleshly sight, but by those degrees of proportion, which I have spoken of, he refeth vp with godly consideration to the high mysteries which lie hidden in the Sacraments.

6 And faith the Lord calleth his promises, couenants: and his Sacraments, scales of couenants: a similitude may well be brought from the couenants of men. What can a bow killed worke, if wordes were not vfed, yea vnselues they went before: For bowes are many times killed without any more inward or higher mysterie. What can the gloying of a mans right hand do, if oftentimes hands are marred with emmities? But when words have gone before, by such signes the lawes of leagues are established, although they were suff conceiued, made, and decreed in words. Therefore Sacraments are exercisies which make the credit of the word of God certaine vnto vs: and because we are carnall, they are deluered ynder carnall things that so they shold instruct vs according to the capacity of our dullest, and guide vs by the hand as schoolmasters guide children. For this reason Anuysime calleth a Sacrament, a visible word: because it representeth the promises of God as it were painted in a table, and seteth them before our sight cunningly expressed and as in an image. Other similitudes also may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly set out, as if we call them pillers of our Faith. For as a building standeth and resteth vpon the foundation: yet by setting ynder of pillers, it is more surely stablished: so, Faith resteth vpon the word of God, as vpon a foundation: but when Sacraments are added, it stayeth yet more soundly vpon them as vpon pillers. Or if we call them looking glasse, in which we may behold the riches of the grace of God, which he gieth vs. For (as we have already said) he doth in them manifester shew himselfe to vs, so much as is given to our dullest to know, and doth more expressly testifie his good will and loue towards vs than by his word.

7 Neither do they reason fitly enough to the purpose, when they labour to prove hereby that they are not testimonies of the grace of God, because they are also given to the wicked, which yet do thereby feele God nothing more fauourable to them, but rather procure to themselves more grievous damnation. For by the same argument neither should the Gospell, which is heard and delified of many, be the testimonie of the grace of God: nor yet Christ himselfe, which was scene and knowen of many, of whom very feve receueth him. The like we may also fee in patents: For a great parte of the multitude laugheth at and scorneth that authentike scale, bowsoever they know that it proceeded from the Prince to scale his will withall; some regard it not, as a thing not pertaining to them: some also abhorre it: so that considering considering this so equal relation of both, that fame similitude which I have above said, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certain that the Lord doth offer unto vs mercy & a pledge of his grace both in his holy word & in the Sacramentes: but the same is not receaved but of them which receive the word & Sacramentes with true faith: like as Christ is offered of the Father unto salvation, to all, yet he is not acknowledged and receaved of all. Augustine in one place minding to declare the same, saith that the effectualness of the word is shewed forth in the Sacraments: not because it is spoken, but because it is beleued. Therefore Paul, when he spake to the faithfull, so entreat of Sacraments that he included the communion of Christ in them, as when hee faith: all yee that are baptised, have put on Christ. Againe, we are all one body and one spirit, which are baptised in Christ. But when he spake of the wrongfull vs of the Sacramentes, hee gueht no more to it than to colde and voide figures. Whereby he signifieth, that howsoeuer the wicked and hypocrites with their pervert enselesse do either oppresse or darken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraments, yet that withholdeth not but that where and so oft as it pleaseth God, both they may bring a true testamonie of the communicating of Christ, and the Spirit of God himselfe may deluer and performe that which they promise. We determine therefore that Sacramentes are truly called testimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine seals of the good will which hee beareth toward vs: which by sealings unto vs, doe by this meanes luftaine, nortly, confirm, and encreas our faith. As for the reasons which some are wont to object against this sentence, they are too trifling and weak. They say that if our faith bee good, it cannot be made better: for they say that it is no faith, but which without shakin, stedfastly, and without withdrawing, resteth upon the mercie of God. It had bin better for such to pray with the Apostles that the Lorde would encreas their faith, then carelessly to pretende such a perfection of faith, which never any of the sons of men hath obtained, nor any shall obtaine in this life. Let them answer, what manner of faith they thynke that he had which saith: I beleue Lorde, help me my vnbelieuynge. For even that faith, howsoeuer it was but a begun faith, was a good faith, and might be made better when vnbelieuynge were taken away. But they are confuted by no certaine argumente than by their owne confesse. For if they confesse themselves sinners, (which whether they will or no they cannot deny) they must needs impute the same to the imperfection of their faith.

But (say they) Philip answerd the Eunuch, that he might be baptized, if he beleued with all his hart. What place heere hath the comfirmation of Baptisme, where faith filleth the whole hart? Againe, I ask them whether they do not seeke a good part of their hart void of faith: whether they do not daily acknowledge newe encreas. The heathen man gloried that he waxed old with learning. Therefore we Christians be the worke of the holy Gost, to begin, maintaine and make perfect faith, yet are not the Sacramentes hereby proved vn-effectuall to the increase of faith.

Although wee beleued with all our hart, & although it be the worke of Christ, to begin, maintaine and make perfect faith, yet are not the Sacramentes hereby proved vn-effectuall to the increase of faith.
Cap. 14. Of the outward meanes

nothing, so senseless, that it can smell nothing of spirituall things. But for one benefitt of God which they set forth, we consider three. For first the Lord teacheth and instructeth vs with his word: then he strengtheneth vs with Sacraments: last of all he shineth into our minde with the light of his holy spirit, and openeth an entry for the word and sacraments into our heartes, which otherwise should but strike our eares, and be present before our eies, and nothing moue the inward parts.

9 Wherefore as touching the confirmation and encreafe of faith, I would have the reader warned (which I think I have already in plaine words expressed) that I do so assigne that ministerie to the sacraments, nor as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wore not what secret force, by which they may of themselves be able to further or confirm faith: but because they are ordaine of the Lord to this end, that they should serve to the stablisshing and encreaing of faith. But then onely they do truely performe their office, when that inward schoolemaster the spirit is come to them, with whose onely power both the heartes are pereaded, and affections are moued, and the entry is fet open for the sacraments into our soules. If he be absent, Sacraments can do no more to our minds, than if either the brightnesse of the sunne should shine vpon blind eyes, or a voyce found to deaf eares. Therefore I doe make division betweene the spirit and sacraments, that the power of working remaine with the spirit, and to the sacraments be left onely the ministration, yea, and the fame voide and trifling without the working of the spirit: but of much effectuallnesse, when he inwardly worketh and putteth forth his force. Now it is plaine in what sort according to this sentence, a godly minde is confirmed in the faith by sacraments: that is to say, even as the eyes fee by the brightnesse of the Sunne, and the eares hear by the sound of a voyce: of which neither the eies should antwight perceive any light, vnlesse they had a sight in themselves that might naturally be enlightened, and the eares shoule in vaine be knocked at with anie crying whatsoever it were, vnlesse they were naturally made and fit to heare. But if it be true, which ought at once to be determined among vs, that what the sight worketh in our eies to seeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiving of a voyce, the fame is the worke of the holy Ghost in our heartes, both to the conceiving, and sustaining, and cherishing and stablisshing of faith: then both these things doe likewise follow: that the sacraments doe nothing at all profite without the power of the holy Ghost: and that nothing withstandeth but that in heartes already taught of that schoolmaster, they may make faith both stronger and more encræased. Onely this difference there is, that the power of hearing and feeing is naturally fet in our eares and eies: but Christ bevide the measure of nature doth by speciall grace worke the fame in our minde.

10 Whereby those objections also, which comber some men, are dissolue: That if we ascribe to creatures either the increase or confirmation of faith, there is wrong done to the Spirit of God, whom we ought to acknowledge the onely author thereof. For neither do we in the meanes time take from him either the præife or confirming or increasing it: but rather we affirme, that even this that he encræseth and confirmeth faith, is nothing else but with his inward enlightening to prepare our minde to receiue that confirming which is fet forth by the sacraments. But if it be yet too darkely spoken, it shall be made very cleare by a similitude which I will bring. If thou purpose with words to perfwade a man to do any thing, thou wilt search out all the reasons, whereby he may be drawn to thy opinion, and may be in a manner subdued to obey thy counsell. But thou haft hitherto nothing preuailed, vnlesse he likewise haue a piercing and sharpe judgement, whereby he may weigh what pith in thy reasons, vnlesse also he have a tractable wit and readie to harken to teaching: finally vnlesse he haue conceived such an opinion of thy faithfullnesse and wisedome, as may be to him like a certaine forejudgement to cause him to subscrib.
For both there are manie stubborne heads, which a man can never bowe with any reasons: and also where credite is suspected, where auttoritie is defpised, little good is done even with the willing to learne. On the other side let all those things be present, they will truly bring to passe that the hearer, to whom thou giuest counsell, will obey the selfe same counsels which otherwise he would have laughed to scorn.

The same worke also the spirite worketh in vs. For least the word should beeate our cares in vaine, least the Sacraments should breake our eyes in vaine, he sheweth vs that it is God which speaketh therein, he softeneth the stubborneenes of our heart, and frameth it to the obedience which is due to the word of the Lord. Finally he conuеueth thofe outward words and sacraments from the cares into the soule. Therefore both the word and the Sacraments doe confirm our faith, when they set before our eies the good will of the heauenly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole fœdralnes of our faith standeth fast, and the strength of it encreaseth: the spirite confirmeth it, when in engraving the fame confirmation in our minds he maketh it effectuall. In the meane time the father of lights can not be forbidden, but as he enlighteth the bodily eies with the beames of the sunne, so he may enlighten our minds with sacraments, as with a brightenelle for meane betwenee.

11 Which propertie the Lord taught that there was in his outward word, when in the parable he calleth it seede. For as seede, if it fall vpone a desert and untilled piece of ground, will do nothing but die: but if it be thrown vpone arable land well manured and tilled, it will bring forth her fruit with very good encreas: so the word of God, if it light vpone a stiffe necke, it will grow barren as that which is sowne vpone land: but if it light vpone a soule manured with the hand of the heauenly spirite, it will be most fruitfull. But if there be like reason of seede and of the word: as we say that out of seede come both springeth and encreaseth, and growth vp to ripenesse: why may we not say that faith takeeth out of the word of God both beginning, encrease, and perfection? Paul verie well expresseth both these things in sundry places. For when he goeth about to put the Corinthians in remembrance how effectuall God vsed his traualie, he glorieth that he hath the ministrie of the Spiuere, as though the power of the holic Ghost were with a vnseparable knot ionued with his preaching, to enlighten and thoroughly move the minde. But in another place when he min-eth to admonish them, of what force the word of God is of it selfe being preached by man, he compareth the ministres them selues to husbandmen, which when they haue bellowed their labour and traualie in tilling the earth haue no more to do. But what should tilling, and fowing, and watering profit vnlike that which is sowne should receive Lucielit by heauenly benefite? Therefore he concludes, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing: but that all things are to be ascriped to God, which alone giuen the encreas. Therefore the Apollies do in their preaching vttre the power of the spirite, so far as God vttre the instruments ordered by himselfe to the setting forth of his spiritual grace. Yet we must kepe still that distinction, that we remember, what man is able to do by himselfe, and what is proper to God.

12 Sacraments are so confirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lord meaneth to take away the confidence of the very things that are by him promis'd in the Sacraments, he taketh away the sacraments themselves. When he spoyleth and thursteth away Adam from the gift of immortalitie, he faith: Let him not eate of the fruite of life, lest he dye for euer. What faith he? Could that fruite restore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he was now fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had saide: Least he should enjoy a vaine confidence if he kepeeth all the signe of my promise, let that be shakon away from him which might bring him some hope of immortalitie. After this manner when the Apollie exhorteth the Ephesians to remember that they were forin geists of the testamentes, strangers from the fellowship of

of Israel, without God, without Christ, he faith, that they were not partakers of Circumcision. Whereby he doth (by figure of transfiguration) signify that they were excluded from the promise it selfe, which had not received the signe of the promise. To their other objection, that the glory of God is conveyed to creatures, to whom so much power is ascribed, & that thereby it is so far diminished, we have in readiness to answer that we set no power in creatures. Only we say, that God vseth means and instruments, which he himselfe seeth to be expedient: that all things may serve his glory, forasmuch as he is Lord and Judge of all. Therefore as by bread and other nourishments he feedeth our bodie: As by the Sunne he enlightneth the world: As by fire he warmeth; yet neither Bread, nor the Sunne, nor Fire, are any thing but so farre as by those instruments he doth distribute his blessings unto vs: So spiritually he nouriseth Faith by the Sacraments, whose only office is to set his promises before our eies to be looked upon, yea to be pledges unto vs of them. And as it is our duty to fasten none of our affiance in other creatures, which by the liberalitie and bountisfulness of God are ordained to our uses, and by the minifterie whereof he giueth vs his gifts, not to have them in admiration, and praise them as causes of our good: So neither ought our confidence to sticke fast in the Sacraments, nor the glory of God to be removed unto them; but leaving all things, both our faith and confession ought to rise vp to him the Author both of the Sacraments and of all things.

13 Whereas some bring an argument out of the very name of a Sacrament, it is nothing strong. A Sacrament (say they) whereas it hath among allowed Authors many significations, yet it hath but one which agreeith with the signes: that is, whereby it signifies that solemn oath which the Souldier maketh to his Captaine when he entrench into profession of a Souldier. For as by that oath of warfare new souldiers doe binde their Faith to the Captaine, and profess to be his souldiers: So by our signes we profess Christs faith to our Captaine, and doe testify that we serue under his banner. They add similitudes to make thersby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romanes feuerally known from the Grecians which did wearke cloches: as the very degrees of men at Rome were discerned by their severall signes: the degree of Senators from the degree of Knightes, by purple coat and picked shoos: againe a Knight from a Commoner, by a ring: So we bear our signes that may make vs feuerally known from prophane men. But by the things above said it is evident enough that the old writers, which gave to the signes the name of Sacraments, had no regard how this word was vseth among Latine writers, but for their owne purpose framed this new signification, whereby they signified onely holy signes. But if we will search the matter more deeply, it may seeme that they haue with the same relation applied this word to such a signification, wherewith they haue removed the name of Faith to that sense wherein it is now vseth. For whereas Faith is a truth in performing promises: yet they have called Faith an asserednes, or sure preservation which is had of the truth it selfe. Likewise whereas a Sacrament is the Souldiers part whereby he voweth himselfe to his Captaine: they have made it the Captaines part, whereby he receiveth souldiers into rooms of seruice. For by the Sacrament the Lord doth promise that he will be our God, and that we shall be his people. But we passe over such smallities: for alimuch as I think I have prooved with arguments plaine enough, that they had respect to nothing else but to signify that there are signes of holy and spiritual things. We receive in deede the similitudes which they bring of outward tokens: but we allow not that that which is the last point in the Sacraments, is by them set for the chiefe, yea and onely thing. But this is the first point, that they should seuer our faith before God: the latter point that they should testify our confession before men. According to this latter consideration those similitudes have place. But in the meantime let that first point remaine: because otherwise (as we haue alreadie prooved the the mysteries should be but colde, vnlesse they were helps to our faith, and additions to doctrine ordened to the same vs and end.

14. Againe we must be warned, that as these men do weaken the force, and vterly overthrow the vs of sacraments: so on the contrarie side there be some, which vaine to sacraments I wot not what secret vertues, which are no where read to be put in them by God. By which error the simple and vnskillful are dangerously deceived, while they are both taught to seeke the gifts of God where they cannot be found, and are by little and little drawn away from God, to embrace more vanitie instead of his veritie. For the Sophistical schooles have taught with great content, that the Sacraments of the new lawe, that is to say thofe which are now in vs in the Christian Church, do inuifie and give grace, so that we do not lay a stop of deadly sinne. It cannot be expressed how pernicious and pestilent this opinion is, and so much the more, because in many ages heretofore, to the great losse of the Church, it hath prevailed in a great part of the world. Truely it is vterly diuulish. For when it promiseth righteousnes without faith, it driueth soules headlong into destrucion: then because it fetcheth the cause of righteousnes from the sacraments, it bindeth the miserable minde of men alreadye of their owne accord to much bending to the earth, with this superstition that they rather rest in the sight of a bodily thing than of God himselfe. Which two things I would to God we had not so proued in experience, so little neede they any long prooue. But what is a sacrament taken without faith, but the most certaine destrucion of the Church? For whereas nothing is to be looked for thereof without the promis, and the promis doeth no leffe threaten wrath to the vnfaithfull, than it oftenest grace to the faithfull: he is deceived that thinketh that there is any more givn to him by the sacraments, than that which being offerd by the word of God, he receiueth by faith. Whereupon another thing also is gathered, that the assistance of salvation hangeth not upon the partaking of the sacrament, as though lutiification consisted therein: which we know to be repose in Christ only, and to be communicated into vs by the preaching of the Gospel, than by the sealing of the sacrament: and that withouthe that it cannot wholy stand.

So true is that which Augustine also writeth, that invisible sanctification may be without a visible signe, and againe that a visible signe may be without true sanctification. For he also writeth in another place that men do put on Christ sometime vntil the receiuing of a sacramet, sometime eué vntil the sanctification of life. And that first point may be comon both to good and to euill: but this other is proper to the good & godly.

15. Hereupon commeth that distinction if it be well understood, which the same Augustine hath oftener noted, betwene a sacrament, and the thing of the sacrament. For it not only signifieth, that the figure and truth are there contained, but that they do not so hang together, but that they may be seuered: and that even in the veb conscionyng the thing must alway be discerned from the signe, that we give not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He speaketh of the separation, when he writeth that the sacraments do worke in the onely effect that they which figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the sacraments were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the sacraments. So now also the walking of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it selfe, whereby the members of Christ are regenerate with their head, is not common to all. Againe, in another place of the Supper of the Lord, We also at this day receive visible meate. But the sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament another thing. What is this, that many receive of the altar and dye, and receiuing do dye? For the Lords morst was poyfon to Iudas: not because he receiued an euill thing, but because he being euill receiued a good thing euillie. A little after, The sacrament of this thing, that is of the vnitie of the bodie and bloud of Christ, is somewhere prepared on the Lords table dayly, some where by certaine distances of dayes: and thereof is received into life to some, & into destruction to some. But the thing it self whereof it is a sacrament, is received into life to all men, but into destruction to no man, who soever is partaker of it. And a little before he had said, He shall not die which eateth: but he which partaketh to the power of the sacrament, not to the visible sacrament: which eateth within, nor without: which eateth with heart, not he which preteth with tooth. Thus you hear every where, that a sacrament is so sever'd from his owne truth by the unworthiness of the receiver, that there remaineth nothing but a vain and unprofitable figure. But that thou maist have not a signe void of truth, but the thing with the signe, thou must conceive by faith the word which is there enclosed. So how much thou hast by the sacraments profit in communicating of Christ, so much profit shalt thou take of them.

16 If this be somewhat dark because of the shortness, I will set it out in more words. I say that Christ is the matter, or (if thou wilt) the substance of all sacraments: for as much as in him they have all their perfection, and do promise nothing without him. So much leffer tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expressly make them causes of righteousness and salvation, whereof they are parts. Therefore bidding all causes farewell which maketh doth faigne to it selfe, we ought to stays in this one cause. Therefore how much we be by their ministerie holpen to the nourishing, confirming, & encreasing of the true knowledge of Christ in vs, and to the professing of him more fully, and to the enjoying of his richness, so much effectualnitie they have with vs. But that is done when we doe with true faith receive that which is there offered. Do the wicked then (wilt thou say) bring to passe by their unthankfullnes, that the ordinances of God be voided and turned to nothing? I answer that that which I have faide, is not so to be taken, as though the force and truth of the sacrament did hang upon the state or will of him that receiveth it. For that which God hath ordained remaineth steadfast and keepeth still his nature, howsoever men do vary.

But faith is one thing to offer, another to receive: nothing withstandeth but that the signe hallowed by the word of God may be indeed that which it is called, and keepeth his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profit to an euill doer and wicked man. But Augustine doth in few words well assoile this question. If (saith he) thou receivest carnally, it ceaseth not to be spiritual: but it is not to thee. But as Augustine hath in the aforesaid places shewed that a sacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be feuered from the truth thereof: so in another place he giueth warning that eu'n in the verie comming together a distinction, least we steele too much in the outward signe. As (saith he) to follow the letter, and to take the signes in stead of the things, is a pointe of sutile weakness; so to expounde the signes unprofitable is a point of euill wandering error. He nameth two faults which are here to be avoided: The one when we so take the signes as though they were giuen in vaine, and when with abacing or diminishing their secret significations by our enviousnesse, we bring to passe that they bring vs no profit at all. The other, when in raising our minds beyond the visible signe, we giue away to the sacrament the praise of all those good things which are not giuen vs but of Christ onely, and that by the holy Ghost, which maketh vs partakers of Christ himselfe: and in deed by the helpe of the outward signes: which if they allure vs to Christ, when they be wrested an other way, the whole profit of them is vnworthily overthrown.

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the sacraments than of the word of God: which is to offer and set forth Christ unto vs, and in him the treasures of heavenly grace: but they annie or profit nothing, but being received by faith: eu'en as wine, or oyle, or any other liquor, though you pour it on largely, yet it will run beside and perish, vnlesse the vessels mouth be open to receive it, and the vessele thought be wet round about on the outside, shall nevertheless remaine emptie and voide within. Beside this we must beware, lest those things which which have been written by the olde writers somewhat too gloriouly to amplifie the dignitie of sacraments, which lead vs away into an error neere to this: namely that we should thinke that there is some secret power knitt and fastned to the sacraments, that they may of themselves giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost, like as wine is giuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to testify and stabblith to vs the good will of God toward vs, and doe profite no further vnlesse the holy Ghost ioyne himselfe to them, which may open our minde and hartes, and make vs partakers of this testimonie, whereino also doe cleere ly appeare diuers and seuerall graces of God. For the sacraments, as we have aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are messengers of joyful full things, or earneftes in stabblishing of bargaines: which doe not of themselues giue any grace, but doe tell and shew vs, and (as they be earneftes and tokens,) doe ratifie vnto vs those things that are giuen vs by the liberalitie of God. The holy Ghost (whom the sacraments doe not in common without difference bring to all men, but whom the Lord peculiarly giueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of God with him, which giueth to the sacraments place in vs, which maketh them to bring forth fruites. But although we doe not deny that God himselfe with the most present power of his Spirit is present with his owne infraction, leaft the ministiration which he hath ordained of the sacraments should be fruitlese and vaine; yet we affirme that the inwarde grace of the Spirit, as it is fanned from the outward ministrie, so ought to be seuerally weighed and considered. God therefore truly performeth in deed whatsoeuer he promiseth and figureth in signes: neither doe the signes want effect, that the author of them may be proved true and faithfull. The question here is onely whether God worketh by his owne and by inward power (as they call it) or do refigne his office to outward signes. But we affirme, that whatsoeuer instruments he vse, his original working is nothing hindered thereby. When this is taught concerning the sacraments, both their dignitie is honorably sett out, & their vse is plainly shewed, & their profitablenesse is abundantly resoued, and the best mane in all these things is retained, that neither any thing be giuen to them which ought not, nor again anything be taken from them which is not convenient to be taken from them. In the same time that fained deuise is taken away, whereby the cause of iustification and power of the holy Ghost is inclosed in elements as in vesseles or waggons, and that principall force which hath bin omitted of other is expressly set out. Herefore also it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh that which the minister figureth and testifieth by outward doing: leaft that be drawn to a mortal man, which God claimeth to himselfe alone. The same thing also doth Augustine wisely touch. How (faith he) doth both Moses sanctifie, and God not Moses for God: but Moses with visible sacraments by his minifterie, but God with invisible grace by his holy Spirit: where also is the whole fruites of visible sacraments. For without this sanctification of invisible grace, what doe those visible sacraments profite?

18. The name of Sacrament, as we have hitherto entretied of the nature of it, doth generally contenne all the signes that euery God gave to men, to certify and assure them of the truth of his promises. Those he sometime willed to remaine in natural things, sometime he deliered them in miracles. Of the first kind these be examples, as when he gave to Adam and Eve, the tree of life for an earnest of immortalitie, that they might assure themselves of it, so long as they did eate of the fruites thereof. And when he did set the heavenly bowe for a monument to Noe and his pofterites, that he would no more from thence forth destroy the earth with overflowing of water. These Adam and Noe had for sacraments. Not that the tree did giue them immortalitie, which it could not giue to it selfe: nor that the bowe (which is but a flinking backe of a sunbeame upon the clouds against it) was of force to holde in the waters: but because they had a marke grauen in them by the word of God, that they shoulde... should be examples and seales of his testamentes. And the tree was a tree before, and the bowe a bowe. When they were written vpon with the worde of God, then a new forme was put into them, that they should begin to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these things spoken without cause, the bowe it selfe is at this daie also a wittnesse of that covenant, which God made with Noe: which bowe so oft as we behold, we read this promis of God written in it, that the earth shall never be destroyed with overflowing of waters. Therefore if any fond Philosopher, to scorne the simplicitie of our faith, doe affirme that such varietye of coloures doth naturally arise of reflected beams and a cloudie fret against them: let us grant it indeede, but let vs laugh to scorne his senselesse folly, which doth not acknowledge God the Lorde and governour of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elements to the service of his owne glorie. If he had imprinted such tokens in the sunne, the farrases, the earth, stones, and fuch like, they should all haue bene sacramentes to vs. Why are not vncoyned and coyned sluer both of one value, fith they are both one metall? even because the one hath nothing but nature; when it is striken with a common marke, it is made money, and receiued a newe valuation. And shall not God be able to marke his creatures with his wordes, that they may be made sacraments, which before were naked elements? Of the second kinde there were examples, when he shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when he watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining drye: againe he watered the earth, the fleece being untouched, to promise victorie to Gideon: when he drew the shadowe of the diall ix. lines backewarde, to promise pietie to Ezechias. These things, when they were done to relieue and stabulie the weaknesses of their faith, were then also sacraments.

19 But our present purpose is, to discourse peculiariely of those sacramentes, which the Lorde willed to be ordinarie in his Church, to nourish his worshippers and seruants into one faith and the continuance of one faith. For (to vs the wordes of Auguster) men can bee congealed together into no name of religion either true or false, vnshe the be bounde together with some fellowship of visible signes and sacraments. Sith therefore the moit good father foresawe this necessitie, he did from the beginning ordaine certaine exercises of godlinesse for his seruants, which afterward Satan by turning them to wicked and superstitious worshippings, hath manie waies depraued and corrupted. Hereupon came those solemn professions of the the Gentiles into their holy orders, and other baftarde vsages: which although they were full of errour and superstition, yet they also were therewith a proofoe that men could not in profession of religion bee without such outward signes. But because they neither were grounded vpon the word of God, nor were referred to that truth whereunto all signes ought to be directed, they are vnwoorthie to be rehearsed where mention is made of the holy signes which are ordained of God, and haue not swarued from their foundation, that is, that they should be helpe of true godlines: They consist not of bare signes, as were the bowe and the tree, but vpon ceremonies: or rather the signes that be here given are ceremonies. But as it is aboute saide, that they be on the Lords behalfe testimonies of grace and salvation: So they bee againe on our behalfe marks of profession, by which we openly seare to the name of God, for our partes binding our faith vnto him. Therefore Chrysostome in one place fisely calleth them covenantings whereby God bindeth himselfe in league with vs, & we be bound to pureness and holinesse of life, because heere is made a mutuall forme of covenanting betweene God and vs. For as the Lorde therein promiseth that hee will cancell and blote out whatsoever guiltinesse and penalitie we haue gathered by offending, and doth reconcile vs to himselfe in his onely begotten sonne: so we againe on our behalfe doe by this profession bind our felues vnto him to the following of godlinesse and innocencie: so that a man may rightly saie that such sacraments are ceremonies, ceremonies, by which God will exercise his people first to the nourishing, stirring up, and strengthening of faith inwardly; then to the testifying of religion before men.

20 And even these sacraments also were divers, after the divers order of time, according to the distribution whereby it pleased the Lord to give himselfe after this or that manner to men. For to Abraham and his posteritie Circumcision was commanded whereunto afterward purifyinges and Sacrifices, and other Ceremonies were added out of the lawe of Moses. These were the Sacraments of the Iewes vs.-till the comming of Christ: at which comming those being abrogate, two Sacraments were ordained, which now the Christian Church vseth, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lorde. I speake of those that were ordained for the use of the whole Church. For as for the laying on of hands, whereby the ministers of the Church are entred into their office, as I do not unwilingly suffer it to be called a Sacrament, so I do not recckn it among the ordinary Sacraments. As for the rest, which are commonly called Sacraments, what they are to be accounted, we shall see by and by. Howbeit the other Sacraments also had respect to the same markes, whereunto ours do tende, that is, to direct and in a maner lead by the hand to Christ: or rather as images to represent him, and shew him forth to be known. For whereas we have already taught, that they are certaine signes whereby the promises of God are sealed: and where it is most certaine, that there was never offered any promise of God to men but in Christ: that they may teach vs of some promise of God, they must needs shew Christ. Whereunto pertaineth that heavenly pattern of the tabernacle and of the worshipping in the lawe, which was given to Moses in the mount. One onely difference there is, that those did shadow out Christ being promised, when he was yet looked for: these doe testifie him alreadie given and deliver'd.

21 Where these things shall all be particularly and each one severally declared, they shall be made much plainer. Circumcision was to the Iewes a signe, whereby they were put in minde, that whatsoever commeth of the seede of man, that is to say the whole nature of man is corrupt, and hath neede of proyning. Moreover it was a teaching, and token of remembrance whereby they shoulde confirme themselves in the promise given to Abraham, concerning that blessed seede in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, from whom they had their owne blessing to bee looked for. Nowe that healthfull seede (as we are taught of Paul) was Christ, in whom alone they hoped that they should recover that which they had lost in Adam. Wherefore Circumcision was to them the same thing which Paul faith that it was to Abraham, namely the scale of the righteounnes of faith: that is to say, the scale whereby they should be more certainly assured, that their faith whereby they looked for that seede, should be accounted to them of God for righteounnes. But we shall upon a better occasion in another place go through with the comparison of Circumcision and Baptisme. Baptisinges and purifyinges did first before their eyes their owne un-cleanness, filthinesse, and pollution, whereunto they were de-siled in their owne nature: but they promised another washing, whereby all their filthinesses should be wiped and washed away. And this washing was Christ, with whose blood we being washed do bring his cleanness into the sight of God, that it may hide all our defilements. Their sacrifices did accuse them of their owne wickednes, and therewithal did teach, that it was necessary that there should be some satisfaction which should be paid to the judgement of God. That therefore there should be some one chief bishop, a mediatour betwixt God and men, which should satisfie God by the shedding of his bloud, and by offering of a sacrifice which should suffice for the forgivinges of sins. This chiefest Priest was Christ: he humfelfe shed his owne bloud: he humfelfe was the Sacrifice: for hee offered himselfe obedient to his father vnto death: by which obedience he tooke away the disobedience of man, which had provoked the displeasure of God.
Cap. 14. Of the outward means

The sacraments of the new testament. 22 As for our sacraments, they doe so much more clearly present Christ unto vs, as he was more nerely shewed to men, since he hath beene truly delivered of his father such as he had beene promised. For baptism doth signify vnto vs that we are cleansed and washed, the supper of thanksgiving signifieth that we are redeemed. In water, is signified washing: in blood, satisfaction. These two things are found in Christ, which (as John faith) came in water and bloud, that is to say that hee might cleanse and redeeme. Of which thing the Spirit of God also is a wittnes. Ye there are three wittnesse in one, Water, Bloud, and Spirit. In water and bloud we have a testimonie of cleansing and redeeming: but the Spirit the principal wittnesse bringeth vnto vs assured crede of such wittnes. This high mysterie hath notably well beene shewed vs in the crosse of Christ, when water and bloud flowed out of his holy side: which side for that cause Augustine righteously called the fountain of our Sacraments: of which yet we must intreate somewhat more at large. There is no doubt but that more plentifull grace alfo of the Spirit doth here shew foorth it selfe if you compare time with time. For that pertained to the glory of the kingdom of Christ, as we gather out of many places, but specially our of the 7. Chapter of John. in which sentence we must take that sayeing of Paul, that vnder the law were shadowes, but in Christ is the body. Neither is it his meaning to spoile of their effect the testimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the olde time to proue himselfe to the Fathers a true speaker, even as at this day he doth vsto vs in Baptisme and in the holy Supper. But onely his purpoe was by way of comparison to magnifie that which was gien vs, least any should thinke it maruells, that the Ceremonies of the law were abolished by the comming of Christ.

Too great a difference made by Schoolemen betweene the Sacraments of the law and ours. 23 But that same Schoole doctrine (as I may also briefly touch this by the way) is vterly to be hissed out, whereby there is noted so great a difference betweene the Sacraments of the old and new law, as though those did nothing but shadow out the grace of God, and these doe presently give it. For the Apostle speakeoth no lesse honorably of those than of these, when he teacheth that the Fathers did eate the same spirituall meate, which we eate, and expoundeth that same meate to be Christ. Who dare make that an emptie signe, which deliuere to the Iews a true companion of Christ? And the grounde of the cause which the Apostle there handeleth, doth plainly fight on our side: For, that no man trustynge upon a colde knowledge of Christ, and emptie title of Christianitie, and outward tokens, should presume to despise the judgoment of God: hee sheweth fourth examples of Gods feuerite to bee scene in the Iews: that we shoule know that the same pains which they have suffered, hang ouer vs, if we follow the same faults. Now that the comparison may be fit, it behooved that he should shew that there is no unequalitie betweene vs and them in those good things whereof he did forbid vs to boast falsely. Therefore first hee maketh vs equall in the Sacraments, and leaueth to vs not so much as any small peace of prerogative, that might encourage vs to hope of escaping unpunished. Neither verily is it lawfull to give any more to our Baptisme, than he in another place giuen to circumcision, when he calleth it the feale of the righteousnesse of faith. Whatsoever therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacraments, the same thing the Iews in olde time received in theirs, that is to say, Christ with his spirituall riches. What power our Sacraments haue, the same they also felt in theirs: that is to say, that they were to them scales of Gods good will tawarde them, into the hope of eternall salvation. If they had bene apt expostors of the Epistle to the Hebrues, they would not have so beene blinded. But when they reade there, that sinnes were not cleansed by the Ceremonies of the law, yea that the old shadowes had no assuising force to righteousnesse: they neglecting the comparison which is there handled, while they tooke holde of this one thing, that the lawe of it selfe nothing profited the followers of it, thoughtsimpile that the figures were voice of truth. But the Apostles meaning is to brinu the ceremonial lawe to nothing, vntill it come to Christ, vpon whom alone hangeth all the effectualnes of it.

24 But they will object those things which are read in Paul concerning the circumcision of the letter, that it is in no effimation with God, that it giveth nothing, that it is vain. For such sayings seeme to presse it downe farre beneath Baptisme. Nor so. For the same might rightfully be said of Baptisme. Ye and also the same is said, first of Paul himselfe, where he sheweth that God regardeth not the outward washing whereby we enter into profession of religion, unless the minde within be both clensed and continue in cleanenesse to the ende: againe of Peter, when he testifieth that the truth of Baptisme standeth not in the outward washing, but in a good witnessing of conscience. But he seemeth also in another place utterly to dispute the circumcision made with hand, when he compareth it with the circumcision of Christ. I answere that even in this place nothing is abated of the dignitie of it. Paul there disputeth against them, which required it as necessarie when it was nowe abrogate. Therefore he warneth the faithfull, that leaving the old shadowes they should stand fast in the truth. These maisters (faith he) instantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circumcised. But yee are spiritually circumcised according to the soule and body. Yee have therefore the deliverance of the thing indeed, which is much better than the shadow. A man might take exception to the contrary and say that the figure is not therefore to be despised because they had the thing in deede: forasmuch as the putting off of the olde man, of which he there spake, was also among the fathers, to whom yet outward circumcision had not bin superfluous: He preuenteth this objection, when he by and by addeth, that the Coloffians were buried with Christ by Baptisme. Wherby he signifieth that at this day baptism is the same to Christians, which circumcision was to the old people: and therefore that circumcision cannot bee enjoyed to Christians without wrong done to Christ.

25 But that which followeth, and which I seen now alleged, is harder to assiile, that all the Iewish ceremonies were shadowes of things to come, and that in Christ is the body: but most of all is that which is intreated in many Chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrues, that the blood of beasts, attained not to conferences: that the law had a shadow of good things to come, not an image of things: that the followers of it obtained no perfection of the Ceremonies of Moses and such other. I goe backe to that which I have alreadie touched, that Paul doth not therefore make the ceremonies shadowy, because they had no soundeth in them: but because the fulfilling of them was after a certaine manner hanged in silence vntill the delivering of Christ. Againe I say that this is to be understood not of the effectualnes, but rather of the manner of signifying. For all Christ was manifestly shewed in the flesh, all the signes did shewe him out as absent, howsoeuer he did inwardly vter to the faithfull the presence of his power and of himself. But this we ought cheefely to mark, that in all those places Paul doth not speake simple, but by way of contention. Because he strusted with the false Apostles, which would have godlines to confitt in the ceremonies onely without any respect of Christ: to confute them, it sufficeth onelie to intreate of what value ceremonies are by themselues. This maketh also the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues followed. Let vs therefore remember that there is disputed of ceremonies, not as they be taken in their owne and natural signification, but as they be wrested to a false and wrongfull exposition: not of the lawfull use of them, but of the abuse of superstition. What marual is it therefore if ceremonies being seuered from Christ, are uncloathed of all force? For all signes whatsoever they bee, are brought to nought, when the thing signified is taken away. So when Christ had to doe with them which thought that Mania was nothing else but meate for the belly, he applieth his speech to their grosse opinion, and faith that he ministreth better meate, which may feede soules to hope of immortality. But if you require a plainer solution, the summe of all tendeth to this: First, that all that furniture of ceremonies, which was in the law of Moses, is a vanishing thing and of no value, vnslee it be directed to Christ. Secondly, that they so had respect to Christ, that when hee at length was manifestly shewed in the flesh, they had their fulfiling. Finally that it behooved that they should be taken away by his comming, even as a shadow vanishe away in the cleare light of the sun. But because I do yet defer longer discourse of that matter unto that place where I have purposed to compare baptism with circumcision, therefore I do now more sparingly touch it.
Cap. 15. Of the outward means

Perhaps also those immeasurable praises of sacraments, which are read in old writers concerning our signes, deceived those miserable Sophisters. As this of Augustine. That the Sacraments of the old law did onely promise the Sauiour, but ours do give salvation. When they marked not that these and such other forms of speaking were spoke: they also published their excellest doctrines, but in a cleane contrarie sense from the writing of the old fathers. For Augustine meet no other thing in that place, than as the same Augustine wrieth in another place. That the Sacraments of the law of Moses did foretell of Christ, but ours do tell of him present. And against Faustus. That those were promises of such things to be fulfilled, there were tokens of things fulfilled: as if he should say, that those figured him when he was looked for, but ours do as it were shew him present which hath beene already delivered. Moreover he speakeith of the manner of signifying, as also he sheweth in another place. The law (faith he) and the Prophets had Sacraments, foretelling of a thing to come: but the Sacraments of our time do testifie that that is alreadie come, which those did declare to be to come. But what he thought of the thing and effectualitie, he expoundeth in many places: as when hee saith, that the Sacraments of the Lewes were in signes, divers: but in the thing signified, equal with ours: divers in visible forme, but equal in spirituall power. Againe: in divers signes is all one faith: so in divers signes, as in divers words: because words change their soundes by times: and truely wordes are nothing but signes. The Fathers did drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they drinke not the same bodily drinke. See ye therefore, faith remaining one, the signes varied. To them the rocke was Christ: to vs that is Christ which is set upon the altar. And they drinke for a great Sacrament, the water flowing out of the rocke: what we drinke, the faithfull know. If thou consider the visible forme they drinke an other thing: if an understandable signification they drinke the same spirituall drinke. In an other place, in the mysterie the same is their meate and drinke which is ours: but the same in signification, not in forme: because the false name Christ was figured to them in the rocke, and shewed to vs in the flesh. Howbeit in this behalfe also we grant that there is some difference. For both sacraments do testifie that the fatherly good wil of God and the graces of the holy Ghost are offered vs in Christ: but our sacraments testifie it more clearly and brightly. In both is a delyvering of Christ: but in these more plenteous & fuller, namely as that difference of the old & new Testament beareth, of which we have intreated before. And this is it that the same Augustine meant (whom we more ofteyn all eage as the best and faithfully left wittes of all the old writers) where he teacheth that when Christ was revealed, sacraments were ordained both in number fewer, in signification higher, in forme more excellent. Of this thing also it is expedient that the reader be warned, that whatsoever the sophisters have triply taught concerning the worke wrought, is not only false, but disagreeth with the nature of the Sacraments, which God hath ordained, that the faithful being void and needie of all good things should bring nothing thither but beggarie. Whereupon followeth that in receiving them, these men do nothing whereby they may deforme prais: or that in doing (which in this their respect is morely passiu) no worke can be ascribed unto them.

Of Baptism.

Baptisme is a signe of the entring wherewith we are receiued into fellowship of the Church, that being graffed into Christ, wee may be reckened among the children of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I have taught to be common to all the mysteries) first, that it should serue to our Faith with him, and to our confession before men. We will orderly declare the manner of both purposes. Baptisme bringeth three things to our Faith, which also must be seuerally intreated of. This is the first which the Lord feteth out vnto vs, that it should be a token & proofe of our cleansing: or (to expresse my minde better) it is like to a certaine sealed charter, whereby he confirmeth vnto vs, that all our sinnes are so defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that they may never come in his sight, nor be reheard, nor be imputed. For he willeth that all they that beleue, should be baptised into forgiveness of sinnes. Therefore they which thought that baptismse is nothing else but a marke and token whereby we professe our religion before men, as souldiers beare the conuance of their Capitaine for a marke of their profession, weigh not that which was the cheefe thing in Baptisme. That is this, that we should receive it with this promise, that who soever beleue and are baptised, shall be saved.

2 In this senfe is that to be vnderstood which Paul writeth, that the Church is sanctified of Christ her Spoule, and cleansed with washing of water in the worde of life. And in another place, that we are saued according to his mercie by the washing of regeneration and of the renewing of the holy Ghost. And that which Peter writeth, that baptismse faueth vs. For Pauls will was not to signifie, that our washing and saluation is perfectly made by water; or that water containeth in it selfe the power to cleanse, regenerate and renuie. Neither did Peter meane the cause of saluation, but onely the knowledge and certaine office of such gifts to be receiued in this Sacrament: which is cuendly enough expressed in the words themselves. For Paul kniwteth together the worde of life, and baptismse of water: as if he had said, that by the Gospel the messaige of washing and sanctifying is brought vs, that by baptismse such messaige is sealed. And Peter immediately adioynteth, that that baptismse is not the putting away of the filthynes of the flesh, but a good conscience before God, which is of faith. Yea baptismse promiseth vs no other cleansing, but by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ: which is figured by water, for the likeness of cleansing and washing. Who therefore can say that we be cleansed by this water, which certainely testifieth that the blood of Christ is our true and onely washing? So that from no where else can be fetched a furer reaason to confute their blinde errore which referre all things to the power of the water, than from the significacion of Baptisme it selfe: which doth withdraw vs as wel from that visible element which is set before our eyes, as from all other meanes, that it may bind our minde to Christ alone.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptisme is applied onely to the time past, that for now fallinge, into which we fall backe after Baptisme, we must secke new remedies of cleansing in I wote not what other Sacramentes, as though the force of Baptisme were worene out of vfe. By this errour it came to passe in olde time, that some would not be baptised but in the vertemost peril of life, and at their last galspings, so that they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Against which wayward luttle proviufion the olde Bishops so oft innuehee in their wrties. But thus we ought to thinke, that at that time fower we be Baptised, we are at once washed and cleansed for all our life. Therefore so oft as we fall we must goe backe to the remembrance of baptismse, and therewith we must arme our minde, that it may be alway certaine and affured of the forgiveness of sinnes. For though when it is once ministred, it seemeth to be past, yet by later sines it is not abolished. For the cleanness of Christ is therein offered vs: that alway flourisheth, is oppressed with no spots, but overwhelmeth and wipeth away all our sithines: yet thought we not to take thereof a libertie to sifie in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to such boldnes) but this doctrine is giuen onely to them, whenhich they haue sinned, do groane wearied and oppressed vnder their sines, that they may haue wherewith they may haie vp and comfort themselves, lesth they should fall into confusion and desperation. So Paul saith, that Christ was made to vs a propitiator, vnto the forgiuens of faults going before. Wherein he denieth not that therein is obtained perpetuall and continual forguienes of sines even vnto death: but he meaneoth that it was giuen of the father, only to poore sinners, which wounded with the feareng iron of conscience, do sigh to the plution. To these the mercie of God is offered. They which by etaping of punishment do hate for matter and libertie to sin, do nothing but prouoke to themselfes the wrath and judgment of God.

Rom. 3.25.

4. I know in deede that it is commonly thought otherwise: that by the benefite of repentance and of the keies we do after Baptisme obtaine forguienes, whilst our first regeneration is giuen vs by onely Baptisme. But they which deiue this do err herein that they do not remember that the power of the keies, whereof they speake, doth so hang vpon bapisme that it ought in no wise to be seuered. The sinner receiueth forguienes by the ministerie of the Church, namely not without the preaching of the Gospel: But what manner of preaching is that? That we be cleansed from sines by the blood of Christ. But what signe and testmonie is there of that washing, but Baptisme? We see therefore how that absolution is referred to Baptisme. And this error hath bred vs the saine Sacrament of penance: of which I have touched somwhat before, and the residue I will make an end of in place fit for it. But it is no maruel if men, which according to the grossnes of their wit were immeasurable fast tied to outward things, haue in this behalfe alfoe bewrayed that fault, that not conented with the pure institution of God, they did thrust in newe helps saine of themselves. As though Baptisme it selfe were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force alfo of Baptisme ought to be extended to the same bounds. Wherefore it is also no doubt but that all the godly throughout all their life long, so oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conscience of their owne sins, dare call back themselves to the remembrance of Baptisme, that therefore they may confirme themselves in the affiance of that only and continual washing which we haue in the blood of Christ.

A second use of Baptisme to shew vs our mortification & newnes of life.
Rom. 6.3.

5. It bringeth also another fruit, because it sheweth vs our mortification in Christ, and new life in him. For (as the Apostle saith) we are baptised into his death; being buried together with him into death, that we may walke in newnes of life. By which words he doth not onely exhorte vs to the following of him (as though he did say, that we are by Baptisme put in minde, that after a certaine example of the death of Christ, we should die to our lustes: and after the example of his resurrection, we should be raised vp to righteousness,) but he setheth the matter much deeper: that is to say, that by Baptisme Christ hath made vs partakers of his death, that we may be graffed into it. And as the graffe receiueth substance and nourishment of the roote into which it is graffed: so they that receive Baptisme with such faith as they ought, do truely see the effectuallnesse of the death of Christ in the mortifying of their flesh; and therewithall also they see the effect of his resurrection in the quickening of the Spirit. Hereupon he gathereth manner of exhortation: that if we be Christian, wee ought to be dead to sifie, and to live to righteousness. This false same argument he vieth in another place that we bee circumcised, and haue put of the old man, since that we bee buried in Christ by Baptisme. And in this sense, in the same place which we haue before alleaged, hee called it the washing of regeneration and of renewing.

Col. 2.12.
Tit. 3.5.
...Therefore first free forgiving of sins and imputation of righteousness is promised vs, and then the grace of the holy Ghost, which may reform vs into newenes of life.

6 Last of all our faith receiuent also this profite of Baptisme, that it certainly terneth vs to that we are not onlye grafted into the death and life of Christ, but that we are so united to Christ himselfe, that are partakers of all his good things. For therefore he hath dedicated and hallowed Baptisme in his owne boide, that he might haue it in common with vs, as a moste strong bonde of the unitie and fellowship, which he vouchsafe to enter into with vs: so that Paul proueeth thereby that we be the children of God, because we haue put on Christ in Baptisme. So wee see that the fulfilling of Baptisme is in Christ, whom also for this reason we call the proper object of Baptisme. Therefore it is no mannifell if it be reported that the Apostles baptised into his name, which yet were commanded to baptise into the name of the Father also and of the holy Ghost. For whatsoever gifts of God are set forth in baptisme, are found in Christ alone. And yet it cannot be but that he which baptizeth into Christ, doth therewith call upon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghost. For we are therefore clensed with his bloud, because the mercifull father according to his incomparable kindnes, willing to receiue vs into favor, hath set him a mediatour in the midst to procure vs favor with him. But regeneration we so onely obtaine, by his death and resurrection, if being sanctified by the spirite we be endowed with a new and spirituall nature. Wherefore both of our clensing and regeneration we obtaine and after a certaine manner distinctly perceive the causie in the Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the holy Ghost. So John first baptised, so afterwarde the Apostles, with the baptisme of repentance into the forgiving of sins: meaning by this word repentance, such regeneration: and by forgiveing of sins, washing.

7 Whereby also it is made most certain, that the ministrerie of John was altogether the same which was afterward committed to the Apostles. For the diuers hands wherewith it is ministred, make not the baptisme diuers: but the same doctrine diueth it to be the same baptisme. John and the Apostles agreed into one doctrine: both baptised into repentance, both into the forgiving of sins, both into the name of Christ, from whom was both repentance and forgiveing of sins. John saide that he was the lamb of God, by whom the sins of the worlde should be taken away; where he made him the sacrifice acceptable to the father, the Propitiator of rightoufnesse, the author of salvation. What could the Apostles adde to this confession? Wherefore let it trouble no man, that the olde writers labour to feuer the one from the other, whose voice we ought not so much to esteeme that it may make the certaintie of the Scripture. For who will rather harken to Christofoime denying that forgiveing of sins was comprehended in the baptisme of John, than to Luke contrairemente affirming that John preached the baptisme of repentance into the forgiving of sins? Neither is that senatorie of Augustine to be receiued, that in the baptisme of John sins were forgiveining in hope, but in the baptisme of Christ they are forgiveining in deed. For whereas the Evangelist plainly testifieth, that John in his baptisme promisef the forgiveing of sins: what neede we to abate this title of commendation, when no necessitie compelleth vs vs into it? But if any man secke for a difference out of the word of God, he shall finde none other but this, that John baptised into him that was to come, the Apostles into him that had already presented himselfe.

8 As for this that more abundant graces of the Spirite were powerd out since the resurrection of Christ, it maketh nothing to establish a diueritie of baptisme. For the baptisme which the Apostles ministred while he was yet continuant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifulnesse of the spirite, than the baptisme of John. Yea, enu after his ascension, the Spirite was not gien to the Samartians aboute the common measure of the faithfull before the ascension, although they were baptised into into the name of Jesus, till Peter and John were sent unto them to lay their hands upon them. This onely thing, as I think, deceived the olde writers, that they faide that the baptism of John was but a preparation to the baptism of Christ, because they reade, that they were baptised againe of Paul, which had once receiued the baptism of John. But how much they were herein deceived, shall els where be plainly declared in place suit for it. What is it therefore that John said, that he baptised in deed with water, but that Christ shoulde come which should baptise with the holy Ghost, and with fire? This may in fewe wordes be fooyled. For hee meant not to put difference betweene the one baptism, and the other, but hee compared his owne person with the person of Christ, saying that himselfe was a minister of water, but that Christ was the gier of the holy Ghost, and shoulde declare his power by visible miracle the same day that hee shoulde sende the holy Ghost to the Apostles under syrie tongue. What could the Apostles boast of more than this? What more could they also that baptize at this day? For they be onely ministers of the outward signe, and Christ is the author of the inward grace: as the same old writers themselues doe cueerie where teach, and specially Augustine, whose principall stay against the Diuines was this, that what a one souer he be that baptizeth, yet onely Christ is ruler of it.

9 These things which we have spoken both of mortification and of washing, are shadowed out in the people of Israel, whom for the same cause the Apostle faith to have bee baptised in the cloud and in the sea. Mortifying was figured, when the Lorde deliuered them out of the hande of Pharaoh and from cruel bondage, made for them a way through the red sea, and drowned Pharaoh himself, and the Egyptians their enemies, that followed them hard at their backes, and were eaten in their neckes to overtake them. For after the same manner also hee promiseth to vs in baptism, and by a signe giuen theweth vs, that we are by his power brought forth and deliuered out of the thrallome of Egypt, that is to saye out of the bondage of sinne: that our Pharaoh is drowned, that is to say the diuell, although euen so alio he ceaseth not to exercise and weare vs. But as that Egyptian was not throwen downe into the bottome of the sea, but being overthrown on the shore, did yet with terrible fight make the Israelites afrade, but could not hurt them: so this our enimie yet in deed threatneth, theweth his weapons, is felt, but cannot overcome. In the cloud was a signe of cleansing. For as then the Lord covered them with a cloud cast over them, and gave them refreshing cold, lest they should faint and pine away with too cruel burning of the sunne: so in baptism we acknowledge our fathers covered and defended with the blood of Christ, leaft the severitie of God, which is in deede an intollerable flame, should be upon vs. But although this mysterie was then darke and known to fewe: yet because there is none other way to obtaine salvation, but in those two graces, God would not take away the signe of them both from the old fathers, whom he had adopted to be heires.

To now it is cleare, how false that is which some have lately taught, and where in some yet continue, that by baptisme wee be loosed and deliuered from original sinne, and from the corruption which was from Adam spread abroad into his whole posterity, and that we be restored into the same righteousnes and purenes of nature, which Adam should have obtained, if he hadstand fast in the same vertues wherein he was first created. For such kindes of teachers never understand what was original sin, nor what was original righteousnes, nor what was the grace of baptisme. But we have already prooved, that original sinne is the perversenes and corruption of our nature, which first maketh vs guilty of the wrath of God, and then also bringeth forth works in vs, which the Scripture calleth the works of the flesh. Therefore these two points are generally to be marked, namely that we being in all partes of our nature defiled and corrupted are already for such corruption oulye, helden worthyly condemned and contemned before God, to whom nothing is acceptable but righteousnes, 5.
righteousnes, innocentie and cleannes. Yea, and very infants themselves bring their owne damnation with them from their mothers wombe. Who, although they have not yet brought forth the fruits of their iniquity, yet have the seed thereof enclosed within them. Yea, their whole nature is certaine seede of sinne, therefore it cannot but be hatefull and abominable to God. The Faithfull are certified by Baptisme that this damnation is taken away, and drawn out from them: forasmuch (as we have already said) the Lord doth by this signe promiss vs that full and perfect forgivnesse is granted both of the fault which should have beene imputed to vs, and of the paine which we should have suffred for the fault: they take hold also of rightoulines, but such as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to say by imputation only: because the Lord of his owne mercie taketh them for righteous and innocent.

11 The other point is, that this perueftifcfie never ceaseth in vs, but continuallly bringeth forth new fruits, namely those works of the flesh which we have before described: none otherwise than a burning forraine continually bloweth out flame and sparkles, or as a spring infinitely casteth out water. For lust never vitally dieth and is quenched in men, vnder being by death delivered out of the body of death, they have vitally put off themselves. Baptisme in deed promiseth vs that the Pharras is drowned, and the mortification of sin; yet not so that it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but onely that it may not overcome vs. For so long as we live enclosed within this prison of our body, the remnants of sinne shall dwell in vs: but if we hold faith by Faith the promise giue vs of God in Baptisme, they shall not beare rule nor reigne. But let no man deceiue himselce: Let no man flatter himselfe in his owne cuil, when he heareth that sinne alway dwelleth in vs. These things are not spoken to this end, that they should carelesly sleepe upon their sins, which are otherwise too much inclined to sinne: but onely, that they should not faile and be discouragd, which are tickled and pricked of their flesh. Let them rather thinke that they are yet in the way, and let them beleue that they have much profited, when they feele that there is daily somewhat diminished of their luft, till they have attained thereunto whether they travaile, namely to the last death of their flesh, which shall be ended in the dying of this mortall life. In the meantime let them not cease both to strive valiantly, and to encourage them to goe forward and to furre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeavours, that they see that after that they have long travailed, they have yet no small businesse remayinge. This we ought to holde: we are baptised into the mortifying of our flesh, which is begon by baptism in vs, which we dayly follow: but it shall be made perfect when we shall remoue out of this life to the Lord.

12 Here we say no other thing, than the Apostle Paul in the seuenth Chapter to the Romanes most clearly setteeth out. For after that he had disputed of free rightoulines, because some wicked men did thereof gather, that we might live after our owne luft, because we should not be acceptable to God by the deservings of works: he addeth, that all they that are clothed with the rightoulines of Christ, are there with regenerate in Spirit, and that of this regeneration we have an earnest in Baptisme. Hereupon he exhorteth the faithful, that they suffer not sin to haue dominion in their members. Now because he knew that there is alway some weakenesse in the faithfull: that they should not therefore be discouraged, he adiouneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the law. Because againe it might semse, that Christians might grow infolent, because they are not vnder the yoke of the law, he entreated what manner of abrogating that is, and therewithall what is the fle of the law: which question he had now the secondd time differed. The signe is, that we be delivered from the rigor of the law, that we should cleave to Christ: but that the office of the law is, that we being convinced of our peruerseines should confess our owne weakenesse and miserie. Now forasmuch as that peruerseine of nature doth not so easilie appear.

Rom. 6.14.
Of the outwarde meanes

appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his owne lust without feare of God: he setteth an example in a man regenerate, namely in himselfe. He faith therefore that he hath a continual wraftling with the remains of his flesh, and that he is holden bounde with miserable bondage, that he cannot consecrate himselfe wholly to the obedience of the law of God. Therefore he is compelled with groaning to criе our.

Unhappy am I. Who shall deliver me out of this body subject to death? If the children of God be holden captue in prison so long as they live, they must needs be much carefully gricued with thinking upon their owne peril, vnlesse this feare be met withall. Therefore he adioyneth to this vse a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Christ Iefu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lord hath once received into favour, engrafted into the communion of his Christ, hath by baptisme admitted into the fellowship of his Church, while they continue in the faith of Christ, although they be besieged of sinne, yea and carrie sinne about within them, yet are acquitted from guiltines and condemnation. If this be the simple and natural expostition of Paul, there is no cause why we should seeme to teach any new vnwonted thing.

But Baptisme so seereth our confession before men. For it is a mark, whereby we openly profess that we should be accounted among the people of God: whereby we testify that we agree with all Christians into the worshipp of one God and into one religion: finally whereby we openly affirme our Faith: that not only our harts should breath out the praise of God, but also our tong, and all the members of our body should found it out with such utterances as they be able. For so, as we ought, all our things are employed to the service of the glorious of God, whenof nothing ought to be void, and other may by our example be spurred vp to the same endeavours. Hereunto Paul had respect, when he asked the Corinthians whether they had not beene baptised into the name of Christ: meaning verily, that even in this that they were baptised into his name, they auowed themselves unto him, swore to his name, and bound their Faith to him before men, that they could no more confesse any other, but Christ alone, vnlesse they would forfaie the confession which they had made in Baptisme.

Now fith it is declared what our Lord had regard vnto in the institution of Baptisme: it is plaine to judge what is the way for vs to vse and receive it. For so far as it is given to the raising, nourishing and confirming of our Faith, it is to be taken as from the hand of the Author himselfe: we ought to hold it certaine and fully perswaded, that it is he which speaketh to vs by the signe, that is he which cleanseth vs, washeth vs, and putteth away the remembrance of our sinnes, that is he which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdom, which feeblieth the forces of our lust, yea which growth into one with vs, that being cloathed with him we may be reckoned the children of God: that these things, I say, he doth inwardly so truely and certainly performe to our Soule, as we certainly see our body outwardly to be washed, dipped, and cloathed. For this either relation, or similitude, is the most sure rule of Sacraments: that in bodily things we should hold spirituall things, as if they were presently set before our eyes, forasmuch as it hath pleased the Lord to represent them by such figures: not for that such graces are bound and enclosed in the Sacrament, that they should be given us by the force thereof: but onely because the Lord doth by this token testify his will vnto vs, that is, that he will giue vs all these things. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked sight, but he bringeth vs to the thing present, and together fulfilleth that which it figureth.

Hereof let Cornelius the Captaine be an example, which was baptised, having before received forgiuenesse of sinnes and visible graces of the holy Ghoft: feeling not by baptism a larger forgiuenesse but a more certaine exercisiting of faith,...
yea an increase of confidence by a pledge. Peraduenture some man will object: why therefore did Ananias say to Paul, that he should wash away his sins by baptism? If sins be not washed away by the power of baptism it selfe? I answer: We are said to receive, to obtain, to get that which so far as concerneth the feeling of our faith, is given vs of the Lord, whether he do then first testify it, or being testified doth more and certaine confirm it. This therefore only was the meaning of Ananias: that thou maist bee affliued Paul, that thy sins are forgiven thee, bee baptised. For the Lord doth in baptisme promise forgiveness of sins: receive this, and be out of care. Howbeit I made not to diminish the force of baptisme, but that the thing and the truth is present with the signe, so far as God worketh by outward meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of al other, we obtain nothing but so much as we receiveth by faith. If we want faith, shall be for a witness of our unthankfulnes, whereby we may be declared guilty before God, because we have not beleueth so promisse therein gienen. But so far as it is a signe of our confession, we ought to to testify that our affiance is in the merity of God, and our cleaneenes is in the forgiveness of sins, which is gotten vs by Iesus Christ: and that by it we enter into the Church of Christ, that we may with one content of faith and charitate live of one minde with all the faithfull. This last point did Paul meane, when he saith that we are all baptised in one Spirit, that we may be one body.

16 Now if this be true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be waiied according to his hande of whom it is ministred, but as of the vere hand of God, from whom without doubt it proceeded: hereupon we may gather that nothing is added to it not taken from it by the worthynesse of him by whose hand it is delievered. And even as among men, if a letter be rent, so that the hand and the scale be well knowen, it maketh no matter who or what maner of man be the carrier: so it ought to suffice to acknowledge the hand and scale of the Lord in his Sacraments, by what carrer souer they be brought. Hereby the error of the Donatists is very well confirmed, which measured the force & value of the Sacrament by the worthynesse of the ministre. Such at this day are our Carabaptists, which deny that we be rightly baptised, because we were baptised by wicked men and idolaters in the Popish kingdome: therefore they furiously call vs to be baptised againe. Against whose follies we shall be armed with a reason strong enough, if we thinke that we were professedd by baptisme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost, and that therefore it is not the baptisme of man, but of God, of whom soever it be ministred. Although they were never so much ignorant or despisers of God and all godlines, which baptised vs, yet they did not baptise vs into the fellowship of their owne ignorance or sacrilege, but into the faith of Iesus Christ: because they called not vs upon their owne name, but the name of God, nor baptised vs into any other name. Now if it were the baptisme of God, it hath verily inclosed in it a promise of the forgiveness of sinnes, the mortifying of the flesh, the spirituall quickening, and the partaking of Christ. So it nothing hindered the fewes, to haue beene circumcised of uncleane priests and apostatases: neither was the signe therefore voide, that it needed to be done of newe: but it was sufficient to returne to the natural beginning. Where they object that baptisme ought to be celebrate in the assemblies of the godly, that prooueth not, that that which is faulty in part, should destroy the whole force thereof. For when we teach what ought to be done that baptism may be pure, and void of all deseling, we do not abolish the ordinance of God, although idolaters corrupt it. For when in old time Circumcision was corrupted with many superstitions, yet it ceased not to be taken for a signe of grace: neither did Iosias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of all Israel them that had departed from God, call them to a second Circumcision.

17 Now whereas they ask us, what faith of ours hath yet followed baptisme in.
Cap. 15.  Of the outward means in certaine yeeres past, that they thereby might prooue that the baptisme is voide, when it is not sanctified into vs, but by the word of promise receuved by faith: to this question we answeere that we in deede beeinge blinde and vsbeleeuing, did in a long time not holde fast the promise guien vs in baptisme: yet the promise it selfe, for as much as it was of God, continueth alwayststedfast, and true. Although all men beliuers and faithbreakers, yet God ceaseth not to be true: although all men be lost, yet Christ remaineth saluation. Wee confesse therefore that Baptisme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: for as much as in it the promise offered vs, without which Baptisme is nothing, ly nothing regarded. Now fith by the grace of God, we have begunne to waxe wiser, wee accuse our owne blindeffe and hardneffe of heart, which haue so long beeene vthankfull to his so great goodness. But we beleue that the promise it selfe is not vanished away: but rather thus we consider, God by baptisme promiseth the forgiveness of fames, and fith he hath promiseth it, will undoubtedly performe it to all that beleue it. That promise was offered vs in baptisme: by faith therefore let vs embrace it. It hath in deede long beeene buried from vs because of infidelitie: nowe therefore let vs receive it by faith. Wherefore where the Lorde calleth the Jewishe people to repentance, he giveth them no commandement of a second Circumcision, which being (as we have saide) circumsic'd with a wicked and vngodly hande, liued a certaine time iuntangled with the same wickedneffe. But hee earnestly calleth vpon the onely turning of the heart. Because, how foger the covenuant was broken of them, yet the figure of the covenant, by the ordinance of the Lord, remained alwayes tedfast and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were refrooted into the covenuant which the Lorde had once made with them in circumcision:which yet being receuved by the hand of a league breaker priest, so much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

18 But they thinke that they shake a sierie dart at vs, when they allege that Paul rebaptized them which were once baptised with the baptisme of Iohn. For if by our owne confesstion, the baptisme of Iohn was altogether the same that ours is now: even as they hauing beeene before perversely instructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe baptised into it: so that baptisme, which was without true doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newly baptised againe into the true religion, wherewith wee are nowe first instructed. Some thinke, that there was some wrongfully affected man to Iohn, which had entred them with their first baptisme rather to a vaine superstition. Of which thing they seeme to gather a conjecture hereupon, because they confessed themselues to be utterly ignorant of the Holy Ghost: whereas Iohn verily would never have sent away from him selues schollers so vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes although they had not bee baptised at all, were destitute of all knowledge of the holy Ghost, which is famously spoken of by so many testimonies of the scripture. Whereas therefore they answere that they knowe not whether there be a holy Ghost, it is to be understanded as if they had saide that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirt, of which Paul asked them, were giuen to the Disciples of Christ. But I graunt that that was the true baptisme of Iohn, and all one and the selde same with the baptisme of Christ; but I denye that they were baptised againe. What then meaneth these words, they were baptised in the name of Iesus? Some doe expound it, that they were but instructed of Paul with true doctrine. But I had rather understand it more simply, to be the baptisme of the holy Ghost, that is to say, that the visible graces of the Spirt were giuen them by the laying on of hands: which to bee expressed by the name of baptisme, is no new thing. As on the day of Pentecost it is laide, that the Apostles remembred the wordes of the Lorde, concerning the baptisme of fire and of the Spirit. And Peter saith that the same came to his remembrance, when he saw those graces poured out upon Cornelius, and his household and kinred. Neither is that contrary which is after adjoyned: When he had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came downe upon them. For Luke doth not tell of two diuerse things: but followeth the manner of telling commonly vfed among the Hebrewes, which do first propound the summe of the matter, and then do sett it out more at large. Which euer man may perceiue by the very framing together of the words. For the faith, When they had heard these things, they were baptized in the name of Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the holy Ghost came downe vpon them. In this latter fentence is described, what manner of baptism that was. If ignorance do so corrupt a former Baptisme, that it must be amended with a second baptism; the Apostles should have beene rebaptised first of all, which in whole three years after their baptism, had scarcely tasted any small parcel of purer doctrine. And now among vs what rivers might suffice to renew so many washings, as there be ignorances by the mercie of the Lord daily amended in vs?

19 The force, digustie, profit, and end of the mysterie if I be not deceived, ought by this time to be plain enought. So much as concerneth the outward signe, I would to God the natural institution of Christ had prevaile, so much as was meete, to re-straine the boldnes of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to be baptized with water according to the precept of Christ, there is intuened blessing, or rather incantation, to defile the true hallowing of the water. Afterward was added a taper with chrerne: but the blowing thereof to open the gate to baptism. But although I am not ignorant, how ancient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawfull both for me and all the godly to refuse whatsoever things men have preu-aded to adde to the ordinance of Christ. When Satan saw that by the foolish light credit of the world at the verie beginnings of the Gospell his deceits were easily received, he brake forth into groffer mockeries. Hereupon spittle, and like trifles, were openly brought in with unbridled libertie to the reproch of baptism. By which experiences let vs learn that nothing is either holier, or better, or safer, than to be content with the authoritie of Christ alone. How much better therefore was it, leaving grace-like pomps, which dazzel the eyes of the fimple, and dull their mindes, so oft as any was to be baptized, that he should be presented to the assembly of the faithfull, and be offered to God, the whole Church looking on as a witness and praying over him: that the confession of faith should be rehearsed, wherewith he that is to be catechised should be instructed: that the promises should be declared which are contained in baptism: that the instructed should be baptized in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: at length that he be sent away with prayers and thanksgiving. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely Ceremonie which proceeded from God the author thereof, should most clearly shine, being not overwelmed with any forreigne filthines. But whether he be wholly dipped which is baptized, and that thrice or once, or whether he be but sprinkled with water onely powred vpon him, it maketh verie little matter: but that ought to be at libertie to Churches according to the diversitie of countries. Howbeit the verie word of baptizing signifieth to dip, and it is certaine that the manner of dipping was vised of the old Church.

20 This also pertaineth to the purpose, to knowe that it is done amisse if private men take vpon themselves the administration of baptism. For as well the distribution of this as of the supper is a part of the Ecclesiasticall ministrity. For Christ did not command women, nor yet euer sort of men, that they should baptize: but whom he had ordained his Apostles, to them he gave this commandement. And when he commanded his disciples to do that in the ministration of the Supper which they had seene him do, when he executed the office of a right distributer: he would without doubt, that they should therein follow his example. As for this that in many ages past, yea.
Cap. 15. Of the outward means.

yea and in a manner at the verie beginning of the Church, it hath beene receaved in vfe, that lay men might baptize in perill of death, if the minister were not present in time. I see not with how strong a reafon it may be defended. The very old fathers themselves, which either held or suffered this manner, were not sure whether it were well done. For Augustine seemeth to have this doubt, when he saith: Although a lay man compelled by necessitie doe giue baptism, I can not tell whether a man may godlylly say that it ought to be iterate. For if it be done when no necessitie compelleth, it is the vluring of an other mans office: but if necessitie enforceth, it is either none or a venial sinne. Moreover of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they should not presume to baptize at all. But there is danger, least if he which is sicke should die without baptism, he should be depried of the grace of regeneration. Not fo, God pronounceth that he doth to our infants to be his owne, before they be borne, when he promiseth that he will be a God to vs and to our seed after vs. In this word is containted their saluation. Neither shall any man dare to be so reprochfull against God, to deny that his promise is of itself sufficient to worke the effect thereof. How much harme that doctrine being eull expounded, that baptism is of necessitie to saluation, hath brought in, few do marke: and therefore they take lesse heed to themselves. For where this opinion is grown in force, that all are loit to whom it hath not happened to be bathed with water, our state is worse than the state of the old people, as though the grace of God were now more narrowly strengthened than it was under the lawe. For Christ shall be thought to be come, not to fulfill the promifes, but to abolish them: forasmuch as the promise which was of itself effectual enough to giue health before the eighth day, now should be of no force without help of the signe.

21 But how the custome was before that Augustine was borne, first is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to speake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptize, nor to offer, that she should not claim to her selfe the execution of any mans office, much lesse of the priests. Of the same thing Epiphanius is a substantiall witnesse, where he reprocheth Marcion, that he gave women libertie to baptize. Neither am I ignorant of their answer which thinke otherwise, that is, that common vs much differeth from extraordinary remedy, when extreme necessitie enforceth: but when he pronouncing that it is a moquerie to giue women libertie to baptize, excepteth nothing, it sufficiently appeareth that he condemneth this corruption, so that it is by no colour excusable. Alfo in the third booke, where teaching that it was not permitted euue to the holy mother of Christ, he addeth no restraint.

22 The example of Sephora is vnsheafonable alleaged. For whereas the Angell of God was appeased, after that she taking a stone, circumsfced her borne, thereupon it was wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwise it ought to be saide, that the worshipping which the nations that were brought out of Assyria raised vp, pleased God. But by other strong reasons it is proved, that that which a foolish woman did, is wrongfully drawn to an example of imitation. If I should saie that it is a certaine singular case, which ought not to be made an example, and specially that fith it is nowhere read that in old time there was giuen to the priests a speciall commandement to circumsfice, the order of Circumcision and Baptisme is unlike: this should be strong enough to confute them. For the words of Christ are plaine: Go ye, teach all nations, and baptize. When he ordained the selfe same men publishers of the Gospel, and ministers of Baptisme: and none (as the Apostle witnesseth) doeth take honour vppon himselfe in the Church, but he that is called as Aaron: whosoever without lawfull calling baptizeth, he rufheth into an other mans office. Even in the smalllest things, as in meate and drinke, whatsoever we enterprize with a doubtfull conscience, Paul openly crieth out to be sinne. Therefore in womens baptizing is much more grievously sinne, where it is evident that they brake the rule appointed appointed by Christ, forasmuch as we know that it is unlawful to pluck in sundry those things that God coniogneth. But all this I passe over. Onely I would have the readers to note, that Sephoraes purpose was nothing lewse, than to doe any service to God.

Seeing hir sonne to be in danger, the, gruded, and murmured, and not without some thing threw the foreskinne vp the ground, she taunted hir husband, that she was also angry with God. Finally it is plaine that all this came of a furiousnesse of minde, because she murmured against God and hir husband, for that she was compelled to shed the blood of hir sonne. Moreover if she had in all other things behaved hirself well, yet herein is an vnexcusable rash presumption that the circumcised hir sonne, hir husband being present, not any private man, but Moses the principal Prophet of God, than whom there neuer rofe any greater in Israel: which was no more lawfull for hir to doe, than at this day it is for women in the sight of the Bishop. But this kontroversei shall by and by be easily taken away by this principle, that infants are not debarr'd from the kingdome of heauen, whio it happeneth to depart out of this present life before that be granted them to be dipped in water. But it is already prooued that no small wrong is done to the covenant of God, if we doe not rest in it, as though it were weake of it selue: whereas the effect thereof hangeoth neither upon baptism, nor upon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a seale, not that it bringeth effectuallnesse to the promise of God as to a thing weake of it selue, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Whereupon followeth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore baptised, that they may then first be made the children of God, which before were strangars from the Church, but rather that they be therefor received by a solemn signe into the Church, because by the benefit of the promise they did already belong to the body of Christ. Therefore if in omitting the signe there be neither sloithfulnesse, nor contempt, nor negligence, we are free from all danger. It is therefore much more holy, to give this reverence to the ordination of God, that we seek Sacraments from no where els, than where the Lord hath left them. When we may not have them of the Church, the grace of God is not so bound to them but that we may obtaine the by faith out of the word of the Lord.

The xvij. Chapter.

That the Baptisme of Infants doth very well agree with the institution of Christ and the nature of the signe.

But forasmuch as in this age, certaine phrentike Spirites have raised vp fore troubles in the Church for the Baptisme of infants, and do not yet ceasie to tumbole: I can not choose but I must ioyne here an addition to restraine their furiousnesse. If peraduenture it shall seeme to some man to be very much too long, let him (I beseech him) weigh with himselfe, that we ought so much to esteeme the purenes of doctrine in a most great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be slothfully received, which may awhile to procure them both. Beside that, I finde to frame this discourse, that it shall be of no small importance to the clearer declaration of the mysterie of Baptisme. They affaire the baptisme of infantes with an argument indeeke favorable in fowr, saying that it is grounded upon no institution of Christ, but that it was brought in onely by the boldnes of men, and peruerse cutiousnesse, and then afterward with fond easinesse receiv'd in vs. For a Sacrament, yflesie is rest upon a certaine foundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a thredge. But what if, when the matter is well considered, it shall appeare that the Lords holy ordination is falsely and vntruthly charged with such a slander? Let vs therefore search out the first beginning of it. And if it shall appeare, that it was de-

The baptising of infants not devised and received onely by the rashes of men without warrant from God himselfe.

Cap. 16. Of the outward meanes

1. Of the institution of baptism by the onlye will of God. But if it shall be proued that it is not definition of his certaine authoritie, we must beware least in pinchinge the holy ordinances of God, we be also flanderous against the author himselfe.

2. First it is a doctrine wel enough knowne, and confesseth among all the godly, that the right consideration of the signes, consisteth not onely in the outward ceremonies: but principally hangeth upon the promise, and upon the spiritual mysteries, for figuring whereof the Lord ordaineth the ceremonies themselves. Therefore here that will perfectly learne of what value baptism is, to what end it tendeth, finally what it is let him not stay his thought upon the element and bodily sight: but rather let him raise it vp to the promises of God, which are therein offer'd, vs, and to the inward secrets which are therein represented vnto vs. Hic that knoweth these things hath attained the sound truth of baptism, and the whole substance thereof as I may so call it: and thereby also he shall be taughter, what is the reason, and what is the use of the outward sprinkling. Againe, he that contemnously passing over these, shall lose his minde wholly fastened and bound to the visible ceremony, shall understand neither the force nor proprietie of baptism: nor yet so much as this, what is the water meaneth, or whatsoever hath. Which sentence is proued with so many and so eleere testimonies of scripture, that we need not at this present to carrie long about it. Therefore it remaineth now, that we seek out of the promises giuen in baptism, what is the force and nature of it. The scripture sheweth, that the cleansing of sins, which we obtaine of the bloud of Christ, is here first shewed: then the mortifying of the fleth, which standeth upon the partaking of his death, by which the faithful are regenerate into newnesse of life, yea, and into the fellowship of Christ. To this summe may be referred whatsoever is taughter in the Scriptures concerning baptism: saying that beside this it is a signe to set the religion before men.

3. But forasmuch as before the institution of baptism, the people of God had circumcision in read thereof: let vs see what these two signes differ the one from the other, and with what likenes they agree together. Whereupon may appeare what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lord gauing circumcision to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his seede: adding, that with him is the flowing store, and suffance of all things; that Abraham should account that his hand should be to him a spring of all good things. In which words the promise of eternall life is conteined, as Christ expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hence to proue the immortalitie of the faithful, and the resurrection. For God (faith he) is not the God of the dead but of the living. Wherefore Paul also shewing to the Ephesians from what destruction the Lord had delouted them, gathered by this that they had not bee admitted into the covenant of circumcision, that they were without Christ, without God, without hope, strangers from the testament of the promise: all which things the covenant it selfe conteined. But the first acceffe to God, the first entrance to immortall life, is the forgiveness of sinnes. Whereupon is gathered, that this forgiveness answereth to the promise of Baptisme concerning our cleansing. Afterwarde the Lord took covenant of Abraham that he shoulde walke before him in purenesse and Innocencie of hart, which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man should doubt, that circumcision is a signe of mortifying, Moses in another place doth more plainly declare it, when he exhorteth the people of Israel to circumcise the uncircumcised slan of the hart, because they were seuerallly choшен to be the people of God out of all the nations of the earth. As God, where he adopteth the potestie of Abraham to his people, commandeth them to be circumcised: so Moses pronounceth that the harts ought to be circumcised, declaring verily what is the truth of this circumcision. Then that no man shoulde endevour toward it by his owne strength, he teacheth that they neede the grace of God. All these things are so often repeated of the prophets, that I neede not to heape into this place many testimonies which do each where offer themselves. We have proued therefore, that in circumcision a spirittuall promise was vtered to the fathers, such as in Baptisme is giuen: for as much as it figured to them the forgiveness of sinnes, and the mortifying of the flesh. Moreover as we have taught that Christ is the foundation of Baptisme, in whom both these things remaine: so it is evident that he is also of circumcision. For he is promised to Abraham, and in him the blessing of all nations. To the sealing of which grace, the signe of circumcision is added.

4 Now we may easilie see, what there is like in these two signes, or what there is differing. The promises, whereupon we have declared that the power of the signes consisteth, is all one in both, namely of the fatherly favor of God, of the forgiveness of sinnes, of life everlasting. Then, the thing figured also is all one and the same, namely regeneration. The foundation whereupon the fulfilling of these things standeth, is all one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inward mysterie, whereby the whole force and propertie of the Sacraments is to be weighed. The unlikelines which remaineth, lieth in the outward ceremonie, which is the smallest portion: whereas the chiefest part hangeth vpon the promise and the thing signified. Therefore we may determine, that whatsoever agreeth with circumcision, doth also belong to Baptisme, except the difference of the visible Ceremonie. To this relation and comparsion, the Apostles rule: leadeth vs by the hand, whereby we are command-

5 Now if we list to search out, whether Baptisme be lawfully communicat to infants: shall we not say that he doth too much play the foole, yea dote, which will rest only vpon the element of water, and the outward observatyon, but cannot abide to bend his minde to the spirittuall mysterie? Whereof if there be any consideration had, it shall without doubt certainly appeare that Baptisme is rightfulliy giuen to infants, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lord in old time did not vouchsafe to admit them to circumcision, but that he made them partakers of all those things which were then signified by circumcision. Otherwise he should with meere deceites have mocked his people, if he had fed them with deceitfull signes, which is horrible even to be heard of. For he pronounceth expressly, that the circumcision of a little infant should be in stead of a scale to scale the promise of the covenant. But if the covenant remain vnbroken and stedfast, it doth at this day no leffe belong to the children of Christians, than vnder the olde testament it pertied to the infants of the Iewes. But if they be partakers of the thing signified, why shal they be debarred from the signe? if they have the truth, why shal they be put backe from the signe? Although the outward signe cleane fast together with the word in the Sacrament, so that they can not be plucked in sunder: yet if they be generallly considered, whether of them, I pray you shall we esteme of more value? Truely if we see that the signe is added, we must say that it is vnder it, and must set it in the inferior place. Sith therefore the word of Baptisme is extended to infants: why shall the signe, that is to say, the addition hanging to the word, be debarred from them? This one reason, if there were no moe, were abundantly enough to confute all them that will speake to the contrary. That which is obiected, that there was a day certainly set for circumcision, is altogether but a fift. We graunt that we be not now bound to certaine dayes, like the Jewes: but when the Lorde howsoever he certainly appoineth no day, yet declareth that he is pleased that infants should with a solemn formall vsage be receeued into his covenent: what seeke we more?

6 Howbeit the scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certaine knowledge of the truth. For it is most evident, that the covenent which the Lord once made with Abraham, is at this day no lesse in force to Chriftians, than it was in old time to the Jewish people: yea and that this word hath no lesse respect to Chriftians, than it then had respect to the Jewes. Vnlesse perhaps we thinke, that Chrift hath by his comming dimmuthed, or cut short the grace of his father. Which saying is not without abhominable blaphemie. Wherefore as even the children of the Jewes were called a holy seede, because being made heires of the same covenent they were made differing from the children of the vngodly: for the same reason euyn yet also the children of Chriftians are accompted holy, yea although they be the issue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apostle witnesseth) they differ from the vnclene seede of Idolaters. Now when the Lord immediately after the covenent made with Abraham, commanded the same to be sealed in infants with an outward Sacrament: what cause will Chriftians alledge, why they shoule not at this day testifie and feale the same in their children? Neither let any man object against me, that the Lord commanded his covenent to be confirmed with no other signe than of circumcision, which is long ago taken away. For we haue in readiness to answere, that for the time of the old testament he ordeyned circumcision to conforme his covenent: but circumcision being taken away; yet alway remaineth the same manner of confirming which we haue common with the Jewes. Wherefore we must alway diligently consider what is common to both, and what they have severall from vs. The covenent is common, the cause of confirming it is common. Onely the manner of confirming is diuerse, because circumcision was that to them, in place whereof baptism ha{ }s succeeded among vs. Otherwise if the testimonie whereby the Jewes were allured of the salvation of their seede, be taken away from vs, it should be brought to passe by the comming of Chrift, that the grace of God should be darker and lesse approved by testimonies to vs, than it was before to the Jewes. If that cannot be said without extreme flander of Chrift, by whom the infinite goodness of the Father hath more clearely and liberally than ever heretofore beene pouered forth vpon the earth, and declared to men: we must needes graunt, that it is at the leste not more pinchingly to be suppresed, not to be set forth with lesse testimonie, than it was under the darke shadowes of the lawe.

7 Wherefore the Lord Iesus, minding to shewe a token whereby the world might understand that he was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercie of God, gently embraced children offered vnto him, rebuking the discipels which went about to forbid them to come to him: forasmuch as they did hate those, to whom the kingdome of heauen belongeth, away from him by whom alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will some man say) what like thing ha{ }s baptisme with this embracing of Chrift? For neither is it reported that he baptized them, but that he received them, embraced them, and wished them well. Therefore if we lift to follow his example, let vs help infants with prayer, but not baptisme them. But let vs weigh the doings of Chrift somewhat more heedfully, than such kinde of men do. For neither is this to be lightly passed over, that Chrift commandeth infants to be brought vnto him, adding a reason why, because of such is the kingdome of heauen. And afterward he witnesseth his will with deede, when embracing them he commandeth them to his Father with his prayer and blessing. If it be meete that infants be brought to Chrift, why is it not also meete that they be receeued to baptism, the signe of our communion communion and fellowship with Christ? If the kingdom of heaven be theirs, why shall the signe be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entire opened into the Church, that being admitted into it they may be admonished among the horses of the heavenly kingdom? How vnitely shall we be, if we drive away them whom Christ calleth unto him? If we spole them, whom he garnisht with his gifts? If we shut out them whom he willingly receieth? But if we will examine how much that which Christ there did, differeth from baptism, yet of how much greater price shall we have baptism, (whereby we tellsthe infants are contained in the covenants of God) then receiving, embracing, laying one of hands, and prayer, whereby Christ himself being present: declareth that they both are his, and are sanctified of him? By the other caustions, whereby they labour to mocke out this place, they doe nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Christ faith. Let little ones come to me, that they were in age good bigge ones which were already able to goe. But they are called of the Evangelistes, brepe, and padiai, by which wordes the Greekes doe signifie babes yet hanging on the breastes. Therefore this word (to come) is simly set for (to hauue accesse). Loc what shares they are compelled to make, which are grown had against the truth. Now where they say, that the kingdom of heaven is not given to them, but to such as be like them, because it is said to be of such, not of them: that is no sounder than the rest. For if that be granted, what manner of reason shall the reason of Christ be, whereby he meareth to shew, that infants in age are not strangers from him? When he commandeth that infants be suffered to have accesse unto him, nothing is planter than that every infantedeed is there spoken of. And that this should not feeme an absurditie, he by and by addeth: of such is the kingdom of heaven. But if it must needs be that infants be comprehended herein, it must be plaine that by this word (such) are meant very infants themselves, and such as be like them.

8 Now there is no man that feeth not, that baptism of infants was not framed by man, which is uphelden by so great approoving of Scripture. Neither doe they colourably enough play the fools, which object that it is no where found, that any one infant was baptised by the hands of the Apostles. For although it be not expressly by name rehearsed of the Evangelistes: yet because againe they are not excluded, so oyt as mention happeneth to be made of the baptisitng of any household: who, unless he be mad, can reason thereupon that they were not baptised? If such arguments were of any force, women should be forbidden to partake of the Lords Supper, whom we reade not to have bene received vnto it in the time of the Apostles. But here we be content with the rule of Faith. For when we consider, what is the instituion of the Supper requireth, thence also we may easily judge to whom the vie therof ought to be communicated, Which we observe also in baptism. For when we marke, to what end it was ordeined, we evidently espie, that it belongeth no lesse to infants, than to elder folkes. Therefore they cannot be deprue of it, but that the will of the Author must be manifestly defrauded. But whereas, they spread abroad among the simple people, that there passt a long row of yeares after the resurrection of Christ, in which the baptism of infants was vnownen: therein they most fowly doe lie. For there is no writer so old, that doth not certainly referre the beginning thereof to the time of the Apostles.

9 Now remembeh that we briefly shew, what fruit receiveth of this observation, both to the Faithfull which preferre their children to the Church to be baptised, and also to the infants themselves that be baptised with the holy water: that no man should despise it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, upon this pretence to mocke at the baptism of infants, be scorne with the commandement of Circumcision gienen by the Lord. For what will they bring forth to impugne the baptism of infants, which may not also be thrown backe against Circumcision?
Cap. 16. Of the outward meanes

So the Lord taketh vengeance of their arroganç, which doe by and by condemneth which they comprehend not with the sense of their owne fleth. But God furnisheth vs with other armours, whereby their foullishneffe may be beaten flat. For neither this holy institution, by which we feele our faith to be holpen with singular comfort, declareth to bee called superfluous. For Gods signe communicated to a child doe as it were by an emprinted seale confirmeth the promise gien to the godly parent, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lord will be God not onely to him but alio to his seed, and will continually shew his good will and grace, not to him only, but also to his posteritie even to the thousandth generation. Where when the great kindness of God vtereth itselfe, first it yeeldeth most large matter to aduaunce his glorye, and overspreadeth godly hearts with singular gladnes, because they are therewithall more earnestly moued to loue againe to godly a Father, whom they see to have care of their posteritie for their sakes. Neither doe I regarde, if any man take exception, and sayne that the promise ought to suffice to conforme the salvation of our children: for as much as it hath pleased God otherwise, who as hee knoweth their weaknesses, will in this behalf so much to bee tenderly with. Therefore let them that embrace the promise of Gods mercy to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their duty to offer them to the Church to be signified with the signe of mercie, & therby to encourage themselves to a more assur'd confidence, because they do with present signe behold the covenant of the Lord grauent in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receive some commodity of their baptism, that being engraven into the bodie of the Church, they be somewhat the more commended to the other members. Then when they are grown to riper age, they are thereby not felenderly stirred vp to earnest endevour to worship God, of whom they have beene receiued into his children by a solemn signe of adoption, before that they could by age acnow him for their Father. Finally that same condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraid, that God will take vengeance of it, if any man despise to mark his sonne with the signe of the covenant, because by such contempt the grace offered is refused and as it were forsworne.

10 Now let vs examine the arguments, whereby certaine furious beasts do not ceafe to affaile this holy institution of God. First because they see that they be exceedinglie seere driuen and hard strained with the likenes of baptism and Circumcision, they labour to plucke in funder these two signes with great difference, that the one should not seeme to have any thing common with the other. For they say that both divers things are signified, and that the covenant is altogether divers, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they goe about to prove that first point, they allege that Circumcision was a figure of mortification and not of baptism. Which verily we do most willingly grant them. For it maketh verie well for our side. Neither doe we vs any other proofe of our sentence, than that baptism and circumcision are signes of mortification. Hereupon we determine that baptism is set in the place of circumcision, that it should represent unto vs the same thing which in old time it signified to the Iewes. In affirming the difference of the covenant, with how barbarous boldnes do they turmoyle & corrupt the scripture, and that not in one place alone, but so as they leaue nothing safe or whole? For they depart vnto vs the Iewes so to be carnall that they be Iiker beasts than men: with whom for both the covenant made proceedeth not beyond the temporall life, to whom the promises gien do rest in present and bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the natio of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefits of God, none otherwise than as they far a haerde of swine in a fete, that at length they should perish with eternall damnation. For so soone as we allege Circumcision and the promises annexed vnto it, they answer that circumcision was a literall signe, and the promises thereof were carnall.
Truly if circumcision was a literal sign, there is no other wise to be thought of baptism. For the Apostle in the second Chapter of the Colossians maketh the one no more spiritual than the other. For he saith that we are circumcised in Christ with a circumcision not made with hand, putting away the body of sin that dwell'd in our flesh: which he calleth the circumcision of Christ. Afterward for declaration of that saying, he adjoyneth, that we be buried with Christ by baptism. What meaneth he by these words, but that the fulfilling and truth of baptism, is also the truth and fulfilling of circumcision, because they figure both one thing? For he tra- nslateth to them, that baptism is the same to Christians, which circumcision had been before to the Jews. But forasmuch as we have now evidently declared, that the promises of both the signs, and the mysteries that are represented in them, doe agree together, we will for this present tarrie no longer upon them. Only I will put the faithfull in mind, that though I hold my peace, they should weigh with themselves whether it be taken for an earthly and literal signe, vnder which nothing is concern'd but spiritually and heavenly. But that they should not fell their smokes to the simple, we will by the way confute one objection wherewith they colour this most shame-leffe lie. It is most certaine that the principal promises, wherein was contained the covenant which in the Old Testament God established with the Israelites, were spiritual and tended to eternall life: and then againe, that they were receiued of the Father, spiritually, as it was meete, that they might thereof receive affiance of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their hart. But in the meane time we deny not, but that he witnessed his good wil toward them with earthlie and carnall benefites: by which also we say that the same promise of spiritual things was confirmed. As when he promised everlasting blessedness to his terruite Abraham, that he might set before his eyes a manifest token of his favoure, he addeth another promise concerning the possession of the land of Chanaan. After this manner we ought to understand all the earthly promises that are giuen to the Jewish nation, that the spiritual promise, as the head, whereunto they are directed, should always have the chiefe place. But this I have more largely treated of these things in the difference of the new and olde Testament, therefore now I doe the more slightly knit it vp.

In the naming of the children they finde this diversitie, that in the old Te-

The carnall and spiritual seed of Abraham herefore with the exception due to them both.

13 But although since the resurrection of Christ the boundes of the kingdom of God have begun to be farre and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that according to the saying of Christ, faithfull ones should be gathered from every part to fit downe in the heavenly glorye with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: yet he had many ages before extended that same so great mercie to the Iewes. And because passing over all other, he had chosen out that onely nation, in which he would restrain his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying such liberallitie, Circumcision was given, by the signe whereof the Iewes might be tauched that God is to them the author of salvation: by which knowledge their minds were raised into hope of eternal life. For what shall hee want, whom God hath once received into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaning to prove that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this manner: Abraham (faith he) was justified by faith in vn circumcision. Afterward he receiued the signe of circumcision, the feale of righteousness of faith, that he should be the father of all the faithfull, both of vn circumcision and of circumcision, not of them that glorie of only circumcision, but of them that follow the faith which our father Abraham had in vn circumcision. Do not we see that both sorts are made egall in dignitie? For during the time appointed by the decree of God, he was the father of circumcision. When the wall being pluckt downe (as the Apostle wrighteth in another place) by which the Iewes were feuered from the Gentiles, the entry was made open to them also into the kingdom of God, he was made their father, and that without the signe of circumcision, because they have baptism in stead of circumcision. But where he expressly by name demeth, that Abraham is father to them which are of circumcision only, that name was spoken to abate the pride of current, which omitting the care of godlines, did boast themselves of only ceremonies. After which manner at this day also their vanitye may be confuted which seke in baptism nothing but water.

14 But another place of the Apostle out of the ninth chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes shall be allaged to the contrary, where he teacheth that they which are of the flesh, are not the children of Abraham: but they only are counted his seed, which are the children of promise. For he seemeth to signifie, that the carnall kinred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we doe in some degree. But it is more diligently to be marked, what matter the Apostle there entertaineth. For, meaning to shew to the Iewes how much the goodnesse of God was not bound to the seed of Abraham, yea, how it nothing availeth of it selfe, he bringeth forth Ismael and Elau, for example to prooue it: whom hee being refuseth, as if they were strangers, although they were according to the flesh the natural of spring of Abraham, the blessing resteth in Isaac and Jacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that salvation hangeth of the mercie of God, which he extendeth to whom it pleaseth him: and that there is no cause why the Iewes should stand in their owne conceit, or boast of the name of the covenant, unless they keepe the lawe of the covenant, that is to say, do obey the word. Againe when he hath thrown them downe from vaine confidence of their kinred, yet because on the other side he saueth, that the covenant which was once made of God with the posteritie of Abraham, could in no wise be made voide, in the eleventh chapter, he argueth that the carnall kinred is not to be spoild of his due dignitie: by the beneficall meane whereof he teacheth that the Iewes are the first natural and carnall heretres of the Gospell, but in respect that by their vnselues, they were forsaken as unwoorthie: yet so that the heavenly blessing is not utterly renounced from their nation. For which reason, how much fouer they were stubborne and covenant breakers, notwithstanding he calleth them holy (to much hono: he gueth to the holy generation, with whom God had vouchsafed to make his holy covenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after borne, yea or the vntruly borne.
borne children of Abraham, and that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken off from his natural tree, should be grafted into a strange stocke. Therefore that they should not be defrauded of their prerogative, it behooved that the gospel should be first preached to them: for they are in the household of God as it were the first begotten children. Wherefore this honor was to be given them, until they refused it being offered them, and by their owne unthankfulness brought to passe that it was carried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with how great oblinacy alsoe they continue to make warre against the Gospel, ought they to be deplified of vs: if we consider that for the promises sake, the blessing of God doth yet still remaine among them: as verily the Apostle testifieth that it shall never utterly depart from thence: because the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

15 Behold of what force is the promise given to the potterie of Abraham, and with what balance it is to be weied. Wherefore although in discerning the heirs of the kingdom of bastards and strangers, we nothing doubt that the onely election of God ruleth with free right of government: yet we also therewithall perceive, that it pleased him peculiarly to embrace the seed of Abraham with his mercie, and that the same mercie might be the more surely witnessed, to seale it with Circumcision. Now altogether like wise is there of the Christian Church. For as Paul there reafoneth that the Jewes are sanctified of their parents: so in another place he teacheth, that the children of Christians receive the same sanctification of their parents. Whereupon is gathered, that they are worthilie seuered from the rest, which on the other side are condemned of vnclenees. Now who can doubt, but that it is most false which they do therupon conclude, that say that the infants which in old time were circumcised, did only figure spirituall infancie, which was the regeneration of the word of God. For Paul doth not so suttily play the Philosopher, where he writeth that Christ is the minister of Circumcision, to fullfill the promises which had beene made to the fathers, as if he said thus: Forasmuch as the covenant made with Abraham hath respect to his seede, Christ to performe and discharge the promise once made by his Father, came to salvation to the nation of the Jewes. See you not how also after the resurreccion of Christ, he judgeth that the promise of the covenant is to be fulfilled, not onely by way of allegorie, but as the very words doe found to the carnall seede of Abraham. To the same entent saith he that Peter in the second Chapter of the Acts, declareth to the Jewes, that the benefit of the Gospell is due to them and their seede by right of the covenant, and in the Chapter next following he calleth them the children of the Testament, that is to say heires. From which also not much disaccordeth the other place of the Apostle above allaged, where he accounteth and setteth Circumcision emprinted in infants, for a testimonie of that communion which they haue with Christ. But if we harken to their tristes, what shall be wrought by that promise, wherby the Lord in the second article of his law undertaketh to his seruants, that he will be favorable to their seede even to the thousandth generation? Shall we here flee to allegories? But that were too trifling a shift. Or shall we say that this is abolished? But so the law should be destroyed, which Christ came rather to stablize, so farre as it turneth vs to good unto life. Let it therefore be out of controversy, that God is so good and liberal to his, that for their sakes, he will have also their children, whom they shall beggeto be adnumbered among his people.

16 Moreover the differences which they go about to put betweene baptism and circumcision, are not onely woorthy to be laughed at, and voide of all colour of reason, but also disagreeing with themselves. For when they have affirmed that baptism hath relation to the first daye of the spirituall battell, but Circumcision to the eight when mortification is alreadie ended, by and by forgetting the same, they turne their song, and call Circumcision a figure of the fleshe to be mortified, but baptism they call buriall, into which none are to be put till they be alreadie dead.

dead. What dotages of phrenitike men, can with so great lightneffe leape into sundry duteilities? For in the first sentence, baptisme must goe before circumcision: by the other, it is broth backe into the later place. Yet is it no new example, that the wits of men be so tostled vp and downe, when in stead of the most certaine worde of God they worship whatsoever they have dreamed. We therefore say that that former difference is a mere dreame. If they list to expound by way of allegorie upon the eight day, yet it agreed not in that manner. It were much fitter, according to the oppinion of the old writers, to referre the number of eight to the resurrection which was done on the eight day, whereupon we know that the newnes of life hangeth: or to the whole course of this present life, wherein mortification ought alway to goe forward, till when life is ended, mortification is selfe may also be ended. Howbeit God may seeme to have minded to provide for the tenderenes of age, in deferring circumcision to the eight day, because the wound should have beene more dangerous to the children new borne and yet reborn from their mother. How much stronger is that, that we being dead before, are buried by baptism: when the scripture expressly crieth to the contrarie that we are buried into death to this intent, that we should die, and from thenceforth should endeavoure to this mortification? Now, a likewithe handling it is, that they cauall that women ought not to be baptised, if baptisme must be framed like to circumcision. For if it be most certaine that the sanctifying of the seed of Israel was testified by the signe of circumcision: thereby also it is undoubted, that it was given to sanctifie both males and females. But the only bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet so that women were by them after a certaine maner companions and partners of circumcision. Therefore sending far away such follies of them, let vs sticke fast in the likenes of baptisme and circumcision, which we most largely see to agree, in the inward mystrie, in the promises, in life, in effectuallnes.

17 They thinke also that they bring forthe a most strong reason, why children are to be debarred from baptism, when they allege that they are not yet for age able to understand the mystrie there signified. That is spiritall regeneration, which cannot be in the first infancy. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be grown to age macte for a second birth. But the truth of God everywhere speaketh against all these things. For if they be to be left among the children of Adam, then they are left in death: forasmuch as in Adam we can do nothing but die. But contrariwise Christ commandeth them to be brought vnto him. Why so? because he is life: Therefore that he may give life to them, he maketh them partakers of himselfe: when in the meanes thence fellowes driving them far away do adiudge them to death. For if they say for a shifte that infants do not therefore perish if they be accounted the children of Adam, their error is abundantly contusd by written of the scripture. For whereas it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it followeth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Christ.
Therefore that we may be made heires of life, we must communicate with him.
Again when it is written in another place, that by nature we are subiect to the wrath of God, and conceited in sinne, whereunto dammation perpetually cleaueth: wee must depart out of our owne nature, before that the entrie be open to vs into the kingdome of God. And what can be more plainly spoken, than that flesh and blood can not possesse the kingdom of God? Therefore let all be done away whatsoever is ours (which shall not be done without regeneration) then we shall see this possession of the kingdom. Finally if Christ say truely, when he reported that he is life, it is necessarie that we be graffed into him, that we may be delivered out of the bondage of death. But (say they) how are infants regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of evil? But we answere, that the worke of God is not yet no work at al, although it be not subiect to our capacity. Moreover it is nothing doubtfull, that
that the infants which are to be saved (as verily of that age some are saved) are before regenerate of the Lord. For if they bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they must be purged thereof, before that they be admitted into the kingdom of God, whereinto nothing entereth that is defiled or spotted. If they be borne finners, as both David and Paul affirm: either they remain out of favour and hatefull to God, or they must needs be justified. And what seek we more, when the ludge himselfe openly affirmeth that the entry into heavenly life is open to none but to them that be borne again? And to put such carpers to silence, he shewed an example in John the Baptist, whom he sanctified in his mothers wombe, what he was able to doe in the rest. Neither doe they any thing presume by the shift wherein they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not by and by follow that the Lord is wont commonly to doe so with infants. For neither doe we reason after that manner: only our purpose is to shew that the power of God is by them vnuitfully & enuiously limited within those narrow bounds within which suffreth not it selfe to be bound. Their other by shift is cuen of as great weight. They alledge that by the usual manner of the Scripture, this word (from the wombe) is al-much in effect, as if it were said, of childhood. But we may clearly see, that the Angel when he declared the same to Zachary, meant an other thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, should be filled with the holy Ghost. Let vs therefore attempt to appoint a law to God, but that he may sanctifie whom it pleaseth him, as he sanctified this child, forasmuch as his power is nothing minimised.

18 And truly Christ was therefore sanctified from his first infancty, that he might sanctifie in himselfe his elect out of every age without difference. For as, to doe away the fault of disobedience which had been committed in our flesh, he hath put on the same flesh uppon himselfe, that he might in it for and in our stead performe perfect obedience: so he was conceivd of the holy Ghost, that hauing the holiness thereof fully poured into him in the flesh which he had taken upon him, he might powre forth the same into vs. If we haue in Christ a most perfect paterne of all the graces which God continually sheweth to his children, verily in this behalf also he shall be a poore vs to that the age of infancty is not so faire vsit for sanctification. But howsoever it bee, yet this we hold out of controversy, that none of the elect is called out of this present life, which is not first made holy and regenerate by the Spirit of God. Where-as they object to the contrary, that in the Scriptures the Spirit acknowledged no other regeneration but of incorruptible seede, that is, of the word of God: they doe wrongfull expound that sayings of Peter, wherein he comprehended only the faithfull which had beene taught by preaching of the Gospell. To such in deed we grant that the word of the Lord is the only seed of spiritual regeneration: but we deny that it ought thenupon to be gathered, that infants cannot be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as cattie & ready as to vs it is incomprehensible and wonderful. Moreover it should not be safe enough for vs to take this away fr6 the Lords, that he may not be able to shew himselfe to be known to the by whatsoever way he will.

19 But Faith, say they, is by hearing, whereinof they have not yet gotten the vse, neither can they be able to know God, whom Moses teacheth to be diuinitie of the knowledge both of good and euill. But they consider not that the Apostle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of Faith, describeth onely the ordinary distribution of the Lord and disposition which he vseth to keep in calling them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vse any other way. Which way verily he hath vseth in the calling of many, to whom he hath given the true knowledge of himselfe by an inward manner, by the enlightening of the Spirit, without any preaching vseth for meane thereof. But whereas they thinke it shall be a great absurdity, if any knowledge of God be given to infants, from whom Moses taketh away the understanding of good and euill: I beseech them to anfwere me what danger is there.
Cap. 16. Of the outward means

If they be said to receive some part of that grace, whereof a little after they shall enjoy the full plentiful effe. For if the fullness of life standeth in the perfect knowledge of God, as many of them, whom in their very first infancy death by and by taketh away, do passe into eternal life, truly they are receiued to behold the most present face of God. Whom therefore the Lord will enlighten with the full brightnesse of his light, why may he not presently also, if so please him, send out to shine upon them some small sparkles thereof? specially if he do not first vndebith them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the prison of the flesh? Not that I mean rashly to affirm that they be endued with the same Faith which we feele in our soules, or that they have altogether like knowledge of faith: (which I had rather leave in suspension) but somewhat to restrained their foolish arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulnes, do boldly deny or affime they care not what.

20 But that they may yet stande more strongly in this point, they add that baptisme is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith, wherefore faith neither of them can befall in tender infancy, we ought to beware least if they be admitted to the commonon of baptisme, the signification of it be made voide and vaine. But these daies are throwen rather against God than against vs. For it is most evident by many testimonies of Scripture, that circumcision also was a signe of repentance. Moreouer it is called of Paul the feale of the righteounnesse of Faith. Let therefore a reason be required of God himselfe why he commanded it to be marked in the bodies of infants. For faith baptisme and circumcision are both in one case, they can give nothing to the one but that they must also therewithall grant the same to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted starting hole, that then by the age of infancy were figured spiritual infants, the way is already stopped vp against them. We say therefore, faith God hath communicated to infants circumcision a Sacrament of repentance and faith, it seemeth no absurditie if they be made partakers of baptisme: vndee they lift openly to rage against the ordinance of God. But both in all the dooings of God and in this selfe same doing also shineth wise dome and righteounnesse enough, to beat down the backbitings of the wicked. For though infants, at the same instant that they were circumcised, did not comprehend in understanding what that signe meant: yet they were truely circumcised into the mortification of their corrupt and defiled nature, in which mortification they should afterwaies exercise themselves when they were grown to riper age. Finally it is very easie to assoile this objection, with saying that they be baptizd into repentance and Faith to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by secret working of the Spirit the seed of both lyeth hidden in them. With this answer at once is overthrown whatsoever they wrest against vs which they have fetched out of the signification of baptisme. Of which sorte is that title wherewith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the washing of regeneration and of renewing. Whereupon they gather that it is to be given to none but to such a one as is able to conceive those things. But we on the contrary side may answer, that neither was circumcision which betokened regeneration, to be given to any other than to them that were regenerate. And so also we condemn the ordinance of God. Wherefore (as we have already touched in divers places) whatsoever arguments do tend to the shaking of circumcision, they have no force in the asfailing of baptisme. Neither do they elope away, if they say that we ought to take that for determined and certaine, which standeth upon the authoritie of God, although there appeare no reason of it: which reverence is not due to the baptisme of infants, nor to such other things which be not so commended vnto vs by the express word of God: Sith they are still fast holden with this double argument. For the commandement of God concerning infants to be circumcised, was either lawfull and subject to no caullations, or worthy to be found fault withall. If there were no inconvenience nor absurditie in the commandement of circumcision, neither can there any absurditie be noted.
As for the lot of infants, which in this place they go about to lay upon it, we thus wipe it away. Whom the Lord hath vouchsafed to elect, having received the signe of regeneration, they depart out of this present life before that they be come to riper age, he reneweth them with the power of his spirit incomprehensible to vs, in such maner as he alone foreseth to be expedient. If they chance to growe vppe to age, whereby they may be taught the truth of baptism, they shall hereby be the more inkindled to the endeour of renewing, the token whereof they shall learne to have beene giuen them from their first infancy, that they should exercise themselves in it throughout the whole course of their life. To the same entent ought that to be applied which Paul teacheth in two places, that by baptism we are buried together with Christ. For he doth not meane thereby, that he which is to be baptised, must bee already first buried together with Christ: but simply declareth what doctrine is contained vnder baptism, yea and that to them that be already baptised: so that verie mad men would not affirme by this place that it goeth before baptism. After this manner Moses and the prophets did put the people in minde what circumcision meant, wherewith yet they had beene marked while they were infants. Of the same effect also is that which he writeth to the Galatians, that they when they were baptised, did put on Christ. To what ende? Verily that they should from thence forth live to Christ, because they had not lived before. And although in the older fort the receiuing of the signe ought to follow the understanding of the mysterie: yet it shall be by and by declared that infants ought to be otherwise esteemed and accounted of. And no otherwise ought we to judge of the place of Peter, in which they thinke that they have a strong hold: when he saith that it is not a washing to wipe away the filthiness of the body, but the witness of a good conscience before God; by the resurrection of Christ. They indeed do gather thereby, that nothing is left to the baptism of infants, but that it should be a vaine smoke, namely from which this truth is farre distant. But they offen in this error, that they will have the thing in order of time to go alway before the signe. For the truth of circumcision also consisteth of the same witness of good conscience. If it ought of necessity to have gone before, infants should never have beene circumcised by the commandement of God. But he shewing that the witness of a good conscience was contained vnder the truth of circumcision, and yet therewithal also commanding infants to be circumcised, doth in that point sufficiently declare that circumcision is applied to the time to come. Wherefore there is no more present effectuallnes to bee required in baptism of infants, than that it should confirm and establish the covenant made by the Lord with them. The rest of the signification of that Sacrament shall afterward followe at such time as God himselfe foreseth.

Now I thinke there is no man, that doth not cleerely see that all such reasons of theirs are mere miscontrings of Scripture. As for the rest that bee of a neere kinde to these, we will lightly runne through them by the way. They object that baptism is giuen vnto the forgiveness of sins: which when it is granted, will largelie make for defence of our sentence. For fish we bee borne sinners, wee doe euene from our mothers wombe neede forgiveness and pardon. Nowe seeing the Lord doth not cut off, but rather affirme to that age the hope of mercy: why should we take from them the signe which is much inferiour than the thing it selfe? Wherefore that which they go about to throw against, we thus throw backe against themselves: infants have remission of sins giuen them, therefore they ought not to have the signe taken from them. They allege also this out of the Epistle to the Ephesians: that the church is grafted of the Lord, with the washing of water in the words of life. Than which there could nothing bee alleged more fit to overthowe this errour: for thereupon growth an easie proofe of our side. If the Lord will haue that washing wherewith he

he cleareth his church, to be testified by baptism: it seemeth not rightfull that it should want the testimonie of it in infants, which are rightfully accounted part of the church, forasmuch as they be called heirs of the heavenly kingdom. For as Paul speaketh of the whole church, where he faith that it was cleareth with the baptism of water. Likewise of this that in another place hee faith that wee be by baptism graffed into the bodie of Christ, wee gather that infants, whom hee reckonneth among his members, ought to bee baptised, least they bee plucked away from his body. Beholde with what violence with so many engines they assault the fortresses of our faith.

23 Then they come downe to the practife and custome of the time of the apostles, wherein none is found to have beene admitted to baptism, but hee which hath before professed faith and repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repent, what was needfull to bee done, hee counselled them first to repent, and then to be baptised into the forgiveness of sinnes. Likewise Philip, when the Eunuch required to be baptised, answered that he might be baptised if hee beleued with all his hart. Hereby they thinke that they may winne, that it is not lawfull that baptism be granted to any, but where faith and repentance goe before. Truly if we yeeld to this reason, the first of these two places where is no mention made of faith, will proove that repentance alone sufficeth: and the other place, where repentance is not required, will proove that faith onely is enough. I thinke they will answere that the one place is holpen with the other, and therefore must be joyned together. I feare also likewise, that other places must be laid togethers which make somewhat to the vndooyng of this knot: forasmuch as there bee many sentences in scripture, the understanding whereof hangeth upon the circumstance of the place. As this presently is an example. For to they whom Peter and Philip spake these things were of age sufficient to have practife of repentance and to conceive faith. Wee earnestly deny that faith ought to be baptised, vntill after perceiving of their conversion and faith, at least so farre as it may be searched out by the judgement of men. But, that infants ought to be accounted in another number, it is more than euentfull enough. For in old time if any man did joyn himselfe into communion of religion with Israel, he Saoowed that he should first be taught the covenant of the Lord, and instructed in the lawe, before that he were marked with circumcision, because in birth he was a stranger from the people of Israel, with whom the covenant had beene made with circumcision stablished.

24 As also the Lord, when he adopteth Abraham to himselfe, doth not begin at circumcision, hiding in the meane time what hee meaneth by that signe: but first he declareth what covenant he intendeth to make with him, and then after faith given to the promisie, he maketh him partaker of the Sacrament. Why doth in Abraham the Sacrament follow faith, and in Isaac his sone it goeth before all understanding? Because it is meeke that he, which being in full grown age is receiued into fellowship of the covenant, from which hee had beene hitherto a stranger, should first learnt the conditions thereof: but an infant begotten of him needed not so, which by right of inheritance according to the forme of the promisie is euen from his mothers wombe contained in the covenant. Or (that the matter may be more cleerely and briefly shewed) if the children of the faithfull, without the helpe of vnderstanding, are partakers of the covenant, there is no cause why they should be debarred from the signe for this that they cannot swear to the forme of the covenant. This verity is the reason, why in some places God affirmineth that the infants which are influed of the Israelites, are begotten and borne to him. For without doubt he esteemeth as his children the children of them to whose seede hee promiseth that hee will bee a Father. But he which is unfaithfull, influed of vngodly parents, till hee be by faith united to God, is judged a stranger from the communion of the covenant. Therefore it is no manell if he be not partaker of the signe, the signification whereof should be deceitfull and void in him. To this effect Paul also wroteth, that the gentiles so long as they were drowned in their idolatry, were out of the Testament. With this short summary (as I think) the whole matter may be clearely opened: that they which in growing age, embrace the faith of Christ, for as much as they were hitherto strangers from the covenant, are not to be marked with baptism, but whereas faith and repentance come betweene, which only can open them the entrance into fellowship of the covenant: but the infants that are issued of Christians, as they are received of God into the inheritance of the covenant, so soone as they be borne, so ought to be receiued into baptism. Hereunto must though the Evangelist speake, that they were baptised of John which confessed their sinnes. Which example at this day also we think meete to be kept. For if a Turk offer himselfe to baptism, he should not be rashly baptised of vs, namely not till after confession whereby he may satisfie the Church.

25 Morover they bring forth the wordes of Christ, which are rehearsed in the thirde Chapter of John, whereby they think that a present regeneration is required in baptism. Vnto a man he borne againe of water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Loe (say they) how baptism is by the Lords owne mouth called regeneration. Then therefore whome it is more than enough known to be vnable to receive regeneration, by what colour doe we admit to baptism which cannot bee without regeneration? First they are deceived in this that they thinke that in this place mention is made of baptism, because they heare the name of water. For after that Christ had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, and taught him, that men must be borne of new, because Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily new birth, he there shewed the manner how God doth regenerate vs, namely by water and the spirit: as though he should say by the spirit which in cleansing and watering faithfull soules, doth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the spirit, simply for the spirit, which is water. Neither is this a new forme of speech, for it altogether agreeeth with the same which is in the third Chapter of Matthew: He that followeth me, it is he that baptiseth in the holy Ghost and fire. Therefore as to baptise in the holy Ghost and fire, is to give the holy Ghost, which hath the office and nature of fire: so to be borne againe of water and the spirit, is nothing else but to receive that power of the holy Spirit which doth the same thing in the soule that water doth in the body. I knowe that other doe otherwise expound it: but I am out of doubt that this is the naturall meaning: because the purpose of Christ is none other, but to teach that all they must put off their owne nature which aspire to the heavenly kingdom. Howbeit if we lift to cauill vsuallie as they doe, it were easie for vs (when we haue granted as they would haue it) to inferre upon them that baptism is before faith and repentance: for as much as in the wordes of Christ it goeth before the Spirit. It is certaine that this is vnderstanded of spirituall gifts: which if it come after baptisme, I haue obtained what I require. But leaning caullations, we must hold fast the plaine exposition, which I haue brought, that no man till he haue beene renewed with hauing water, that is, with the spirit, can enter into the kingdome of God.

26 Now hyereby also it is euident that their fained invention is to be hisse out, which adudge all the unbaptised to eternall death. Therefore let vs according to their requisit imagine baptism to be ministred to none but to them that be grown in age: What will they say, shall become of a child, which is rightly and well instructed with the introductions of godlinesse, if when the day of baptisme is at hand, he happen to be taken away with sudden death besides all mens hope? The Lords profite is cleere, that who soever hath beleued in the sonne, shall not see death, nor shall come into judgement, but is already passe from death into life: and it is no where founde that he ever damned him that was not yet baptisde. Which I woulde nochaue so taken of mee as though I meant that Baptisme might freely bee despiseth (by which despising I affirme that the Lordes couenant is defiled: so much leffe can I abide to excuse it) onely it is enough for mee to proue, that it is not so necessarie, that he shoule be immediately thought to be lost, from whom power is taken away to obteine it. But if we agree to their faid defeue, we shall damn all them without exception, whom any chance witholdeth from baptisme, with how great faith fcover (by which Christ himselfe is posseffed) otherwise they are ended. Moreover they make all infants guilie of eternall death, to whom they deuie baptisme, which by their owne confession is necessarie to faulution. Now let them looke how trplyy they agree with the words of Christ, by which the kingdom of heauen is adijded to that age. But, to grant them every thing so much as pertayned to the understanding of this place, yet they shall gather nothing thereof, vn-leffe they overthrowe the former doctrine which we have established concerning the regeneration of infants.

27 But they glory that they have the strongest hold of all in the very institution of baptisme, which they fetch out of the last Chapter of Mathew: where Christ sendeth forth his Apoftles to all nations, giue them the first commandement to teach them, and the second to baptize them. Then the Lord of Mark they adioyneth this, He that beleueth and is baptizd, shall be saued. What secke we further (say they) when the Lords owne words do openly found, that we must first teach ere we baptize, and doe affigne to baptisme the second flate after faith? Of which order the Lord also shewed an example in himfelf, which would be baptizd not till the thirtieth yeare. But here, O good God, how many waies do they both entangle themselves, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childishly erre, that they fetch the first institution of baptisme from thence, which Christ had from the beginning of his preaching giuen in charge to his Apoftles to minifter. Therefore there is no caufe why they should affirme that the law and rule of baptisme is to be fetched out of these places, as though they contained the first institution thereof. But to beare with them for this fault, yet how strong is this manner of reasoning? Truly if I lifted to dallie with them, there is not a little lurking hole, but a most wide field offered it felle open for vs to escape them. For when they flique so fast to the order of words, that they gather that because it is faide, Go, preach and baptize. Againe, he that beleueth and is baptizd, therefore they must preach before that they baptize, and beleue before that they require baptisme: why may not we againe answere them with faying that we must baptize before that we must teach the keeping of those things that Christ hath commanded, namely fith it is faide, baptize ye, teaching them to keepe whatsoever things I have commanded you? which fame things we have noted in that faying of Christ which hath been eu vn alleged concerning the regeneration of water and the Spirit. For if it be fo understood as they would have it, verily in that place baptisme must be before spiritual regeneration, because it is named in the first place. For Christ doth teach that we must be regenerate, not of the Spirit and water, but of water and the Spirit.

28 Now this inquievable reafon whereupon they beware themselves so bolde, seems to be somewhat taken: but because truth hath defence enough in simplicite, I will not escape away with such light arguments. Therefore let them take with them a full answere. Christ in this place giueth the chiefe commandement concerning the preaching of the Gospell, whereunto he adioyneth the minifterie of baptisme as an addition hanging upon it. Againe he speaketh none otherwize of baptisme, but so farre as the ministration of it is under the office of teaching. For Christ sendeth the Apoftles to publish the Gospell to all the nations of the world, that they shoule from eachwhere with the doctrine of faulution gather together into his kingdome men that that before were lost. But whom, or what manner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of them that are able to receive teaching. Afterwaide hee addeth that such, when they are instructed, ought to be baptized, adjoyning a promisse, that they which beleue and are baptized shall be saued. Is there in all that sauing so much as one syllable of Infants? What forme therefore of reasoning shall this be wherewith they affaile vs: they which are of growing age, must first be instructed, that they may beleue, ere they be baptized: therefore it is unlawful to make baptism common to infants? Although they would burst themselves, they shall prooue nothing else by this place but that the Gospell must be preached to them that are of capacite able to heare it, before that they be baptized, forasmuch as he there speakeh of such onely. Let them hereof if they can make a stop to debar infants from baptism.

29. But that euene blinde men also may with grooping finde out their deceits, I will point them out with a very cleere similitude. If any man can tell that infants ought to have meate taken from them, vpon this pretence that the Apostle suffereth none to eate but them that labour, shall he not be worothe that all men shoulde spue at him? Why fo? Because he with difference draweth that to all men, which was spoken of one kind and one certaine age of men. No whit handiomer is their handling in this present case. For that such euere man feeth to belong to one age alone, they draw to infants, that this age also may be substiute to the rule which was made for none but them that were more grown in yeeres. As for the example of Christ it nothing vpholdeth their side, He was not baptized before that he was thirtie yeeres old. That is indeed true: but there is a reason thereof ready to be shewed: because he then purposed by his preaching to lay a found foundation of baptism, or rather to stablish the foundation which had been before laid of John. Therefore when he minded with his doctrine to institute baptism, to procure the greater authority to his institution, he sanctified it with his owne body, and that in such fimes of time as was most commodious, namely when he began his preaching. Finally, they shal gather nothing else hereof, but that baptism tooke his original and beginning at the preaching of the Gospell. If they lett to appoint the thirtie yeere, why do they not keepe it, but do receiue euere one to baptize as he hath in their judgement sufficiently proffed? yet and Sertetus one of their masters, when he sticlly required this time, yet began at the 21 yeere of his age to boaste him selfe to be a prophet. As though he were to be suffred that taketh upon himselfe the place of a teacher in the church, before that he be a member of the Church.

30. At the last they object, that there is no greater cause why baptism should be giuen to infants, than the Lords supper, which yet is not granted them. As though the scripture did not every way expresse a large difference. The same was indeed visuall done in the old church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Augustine: but that manner is worthyly grown out of vs. For if we consider the nature and propertie of baptism, it is truly an entrée into the Church, and as it were a forme of admission, whereby wee are adnumbrated into the people of God, a signe of our spiritual regeneration by which wee are borne againe into the children of God: whereas on the other side the supper is giuen to them that are more grown in age, which having passd tender infancie, are nowe able to bear strong meate. Which difference is verie evidentely shewed in the scripture. For there the Lordse so much as pertaineth to baptism, maketh no chuse of ages. But he doth not likewise giue the supper to all to take part of it, but only to them which are fit to disburse the bodie and bloud of the Lords, to examine their owne conscience, to declare the Lords death, to weighe the power thereof. Would we have any thing plainer, than that which the apostle teacheh when he exhorteth that euere man shoulde prooue and examine himselfe, and then eate of this bread and drinke of this cup? Therefore examination must goe before, which shoulde in mane be looked for of infants. Again, he that eateth unworthyly, eateth and drinketh damnation to himselfe, not discerning the Lords body. If none can partake worthily but they that can well discerne the holines of the Lords bodie, why should we give to our tender children, poison in stead of lively foode? What is that commandement of the Lord, ye shall do it in remembrance of me? what is that other which the Apostle derieth from the same, So oft as ye shall eate of this bread, yee shall declare the Lords death till he come? What remembrance (I beseech you) shall we require of our infants of the thing which they never attained with understanding, what preaching of the crosse of Chrift, the force and benefit whereof they do not yet comprehend in minde? None of these things is prescribed in baptism. Therefore betwixt these two signes is great difference: which we note also in like signes in the old testament, Circumcision, which is known to answere to our baptism, was appointed for infants. But the Paffeouer into whose place the Supper hath now succeeded, did not receive all manner of gestes without difference. But was rightly eaten of them onely that might by age enquire of the signification of it. If these men had remaining one crum of sound braine, would they be blinde at a thing so cleere and offering it life to sight.

31. Although it greeueth me to lode the Readers with a heap of trifles: yet it shall be worth the travaile briefly to wipe away such gay reaons as Serenetus not the leaft of the Anabaptists, yea the great glorie of that companie, thought himselfe to bring when he prepared himselfe to conflict. He alleageth, that Chriftes signes as they be perfect, so do require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the solution is easie: that the perfection of baptism, which extendeth euuen to death, is wrongfully restrained to one point of time. I say yet further, that perfection is foolishly required in man at the first day, whereas baptism allureth vs all our life long, by continuall degrees. He obiecteth that Chriftes signes were ordained for remembrance, that euery man should remember that he was buried together with Chrift. I answer that that which he hath fained of his owne head, needeth no constatiou; yea that which he draweth to baptism, Pauls words shew us to be proper to the holy Supper, that euery man should examine himselfe: but of baptism there is no where any such thing. Whereupon we gather that they be rightly baptised which for their finalitie of age, are not yet able to receive examination. Whereas hee thirdly alleageth, that all they abide in death which beleue not the sonne of God, & that the wrath of God abideth upon them: and therefore that infants which cannot beleue lie in their damnation: I answer that Chrift there speakeh not of the general giliniefe wherewithall the posteritie of Adam are enwrapped, but onely threatneth the despisers of the Gospell, which doe prouely and stubbornly refuse the grace offered them. But this nothing pertaineth to infants. Also I set a contrarie reason against them: that whomsoever Chrift blesth, he is dischargin from the curse of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is known that infantes are blessed of him, it followeth that they are dischargin from death. Then he falsely citeth that which is nowhere read, that whosouer is borne of the spirite, heareth the voice of the spirite. Which although we grant to be written, yet shall prooue nothing else but that the faithfull are framed to obedience, according as the spirite worketh in them. But that which is spoken of a certaine number, it is faultie to drawe indifferentely.

4thly, he obiecteth: because that goeth before which is naturall we mutt tarrie ripe time for baptism which is spiriutall. But although I grant that all the posteritie of Adam begotten of the fleth doe from the verie wombe beare their owne damnation, yet I deny that that withstandeth but that God may presently bring reme- die. For neither shall Serenetus prooue that there were many yeeres appointed by God that the spiriutalitie of life may begin. As Paul testifieth: although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by supernaturall grace they are faued. Then hee bringeth forth an allegorie, that David going vp into the towre

the Supper withstandeth not but that they pertaine to the body of the Church. Neither did the thhee that was conuerted on the Cross, cease to be brother of the godly, although he never came to the Supper. Afterwaide he addeth, that none is made our brother but by the Spirit of adoption, which is gaven onely by the hearing of faith. I answere, that he still falleth backe into the same deceitfull argument, because hee ouerthwartly draweth that to infants which was spoken onely of grown men. Paul teacheth there that this is Gods ordinarie manner of calling to bring his elect to the faith, when he stirreth vp to them faithfull teachers, by whose minifterie and trauell he reacheth his hand to them. Who dare thereby appoint a lawe to him, but that he may by some other secret way grave infants into Christ? Where he objecteth that Cornelius was baptised after he had received the holy Ghost: howe wrongfully hee doth out of one example gather a generall rule, appeareth by the Eunuch and the Samaritanes, in whom the Lord kept a contrarie order, that baptism were gone before the givens of the holy Ghost. The fiftteenth reaon is more than footh: He faieath that we are by regeneration made gods: and that they be gods to whom the worde of God is spoken, which accordeth not to children that be infants. Whereas he faieath a Godhead to the faithfull, that is one of his doages, which it pertaineth not to this present place to examine. But to wret the place of the Palmfe to so contrarie a fense, is a point of desperate shamelesnesse. Chrift faith, that Kings and Magistrates are called of the Prophet gods, because they beare an office appointed them of God. But, that which concerning the speciall commandment of governance is directed to certaine men, this handelme expofitor draweth to the doctrine of the Gospel, that he may banish infants out of the Church. Againe he objecteth, that infants cannot be accounted new men, because they are not begotten by the worde. But I do now againe repeate that which I haue often saide, that to regenerate vs doctrine is the vncorruptible seede, if wee be fitte to receive it: but when by reaon of age there is not yet in vs appenne to learne, God keepe his degrees of regenerating. Afterwaide he commeth backe to his allegories, that in the lawe a fheep and a goatte were not offerd in sacrifice fo soone as they came out of the wombe. If I listed to drawe figures to this purpose, I could likewise readily obiect against him, that all first begotten things were consecrate to God so soone as they had opened the wombe: then, that a lamb must be killed at a yeares age. Whereupon followeth that manly strength is not to be carried for, but rather that the new and yet tender issue are chosen of God for sacrifices. Furthermore he affirmeth that none can come to Christ, but they that have beene prepared of John. As though Johns office were not enduring but for a time. But to omit this, truly that same preparation was not in the children whom Chrift imbraced and blest. Wherefore let him goe with his false principle. At length he calleth for patrones Trismegistes and the Sibylles, to proue that holy washings pertaine not but to them that are of grown age. Lo how honorably he thinketh of the baptisme of Chrift, which he reduceth to the ceremonies of the Gentiles, that it may be no otherwise miniftered than pleash Trismegistes. But we more esteeme the authoritie of God, whom he hath pleased to make infants holy to himselfe, and to admit them with the holy signes, the force whereof they did not yet by age understand. Neither doe we count it lawfull to borrow out of the cleanings of the Gentiles any thing that may change in our baptisme the everlastring and immoveable lawe of God, which he hath established concerning circumcision. Last of all, he maketh this argument: that if it be lawfull to baptize infants without understanding, then baptism may enterludelike and in sport be miniftered of boyes when they play. But of this matter let him queare with God by whose commandement circumcision was common to infants before that they had attained understanding. Was it therefore a playing matter, or subject to the follies of children, that they might overthrow the holy ordinance of God? But it is no maruell that these reprobate spirits, spirites, as though they were vexed with a phrensie, doe thrust in all the grossest absurdities for defence of their errors, because God doth with such giddines swiftly take vengeance of their pride and stubbornnesse. Verily I truft I haue made plaine with how fettled sucours Servetius hath helpten his filly brethren the Anabaptifts.

32 Now I thinke it will be doubtfull to no sober man, how raflily they trouble the Church of Christ, that raufe brawles and contentions for the baptisme of infants. But it is profitable to confider, what Satan goeth about with this fo great futiletie: even to take away from vs the singuler fruite of affiance & spiritual joy which is to be gathered hereof, and to diminish as much alfo of the glory of the goodnes of God. For how sweete is it to godly minde, to be certified not onely by word, but alfo by sight to be seeen with eies, that they obtaine so much fauour with the heavenly Father, that he hath alfo care of their poffefstie? For here it is to be feen, how he taketh vpon him the perfon of a moft prouident father of household toward vs, which even after our death doth not lay away his carefullnesse of vs, but prouideth and foreseth for our children. Ought we not here after the example of David with all our hart to leape vp into thanksgiving, that by such shew of his goodnes, his name may be sanctifi’d? This, verily Satan intendeth, in affailing with fo great armies the baptisme of infants: namely, that this refultying of the grace of God being taken away, the promise by it is present before our eies, may at length by little and little vanish away. Whereupon should grow not onely a wicked vnthankfulness toward the mercie of God, but alfo a certaine flouthefullnes in instructing our children to godlinefse. For by this fpurre we are not a little prickedoward to bring them vp in the earnest feare of God and in the keeping of his law, when we consider that euen immediatly from their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. Wherefore volunte we liet enviously to darken the bountifullnes of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whom he giueth a place among them that be of his familie and houseth, that is to fay, the members of the Church.

The xvii. Chapter.

Of the holy Supper of Christ: and what it ansaileth vs.

After that God hath once receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his fervants, but as his children: that he may fulfill the office of a moft good Father, and carefull for his issue, he taketh also vpon him to nourife vs throughout the whole course of our life. And not contented therewith, it pleafed him by a pledge giuen to assure vs of this continuall liberalitie. To this end therefore he hath giuen his Church an other Sacrament by the hand of his onely begotten Sonne, namely a spiritual banquet, wherein Christ testifieth himself to be the quickning bread, wherewith our foules are fed to true and blesfted immortalitie. But forasmuch as the knowledge of so great a mysterie is very necessarie, and according to the greatnesse thereof, requireth a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereave the Church of this inestimable treasure, hath long ago spread misfifes, andsince that time darkenesse, to obscure the light of it, and then hath ftoffe to fervices and battailes that might estrange the minde of the simple from taffing of this holy foode, and hath alfo in our time attempted the fame craft: therefore when I shall haue briefly knitt the summe for the capacitie of the vnlearned, I will vnderke those knottes, wherewith Satan hath endeauored to shame the world. First, bread and wine are signes, which represent vnto vs the invisible foode, which we receive of the fleth and bloud of Christ. For as in baptism God againe begetteth vs doth graffe vs into the fellowship of his Church, and by adoption doth make vs his owne: so we haue faid that he perfunmeth the office of a prouident Father of household, in this that he continually ministreth vs meate, that he suffaith: and preserveth vs in that life whereunto he hath by his word begotten vs. Now the onely meate of our soule is Christ, and therefore the heauenly father calleth vs to him, that being refreshed with common partaking of him, we may from time to time gather liuely force, vntill we attaine to heavenly immortality. But for as much as this mysterie of the secret vituage of Christ with the godly is by nature imposible to be comprehended, hee giueth the figure and image thereof in visible signes most fit for our small capacitie: yea, as it were by earneft and tokens giuen, he maketh it so affurred vnto vs as if it were seene with our eies, because this so familiar a similitude entreth euen to the grossest minds, that soules are so fed with Christ, as bread and wine do suffaine the bodyly life. Now therefore we have it declared, to what end this myytticall blissing tendeth, namely to affire vs, that the bodie of the Lord was so once offered for vs, that we now eate it, and in eateing it do feele in vs the effectuall working of that onely sacrifice that his blood was so once shed for vs, that it is vnto vs continually drinke. And so found the words of the promyse there adioyned. Take, this is my body, which is deliuered for you. The body therefore which was once offered for our saluation, we are commanded to take and eate: that when we eee our selves to be made partakers of this, we may cer- tainly determine that the power of his death which bringeth life shall be effectuall in vs. Whereupon also he calleth the cup, the covenant in his blood. For after a certain maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the covenant which he hath once stablised with his blood, so much as pertameth to the confirming of our faith, so oft as he rece- cheth vnto vs that holy blood to be tasted of.

2. A great fruit verily of affiance and sweetnes may godly soules gather of this sacrament, because they have a witnesse, that we are growen together into one body with Christ, so that whatsoever is his we may call ours. Hereupon foloweth that we may boldly promyse vnto our soules, that everlastinge life is ours, whereas he is here: and that the kigdom of heauen, whereinto he is now entred, can no more fall away from vs than from him: againe that we cannot now be condemned by our sinnes, from the guiltines whereof he hath acquited vs, when he willed them to be im- puted to him selfe as if they were his owne. This is the marvellous exchange, which of his inmeasurable bountifullnes he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the sonne of man, hath made vs with him the sonnes of God: that by his comming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to goe vp into heauen: that putting vp- on him our mortalitie, he hath giuen vs his immortalitie: that taking on him our weake- nes, he hath strengthened vs with his power: that taking our povertie to himselfe, he hath conuayed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnrighetounes, wherewith we were oppressed, he hath clothed vs with his rightounes.

3. Of all these things we have so full a witnesing in this sacrament, that we muet certainly determine, that Christ is truely giuen to vs, as if Christ himselfe were set persent before our eies, and handled with our hands. For this word can neither lye to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eate, drinke: this is my body which is deliuered for you: this is the blood, which is shed into the forgiveynesse of sinnes. Whereas he commandeth to take, he signifieth that it is ours. Whereas he commandeth to eate, he signifieth that that is made one substance with vs. Whereas he faith of the body, that it is deliuered for vs: of the blood, that it is shed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not so much his as ours: because he tooke and laid away both, not for his commoditie, but to our saluation. And truely it is to be diligentely marked, that the chief and in a maner whole pith of the sacrament standeth in these words. Which is deliuered for you, which is fled for you. For otherwise it should not so much profite, that the body and blood of our Lord are now distributed, vsifie they had bee once giuen foorth for our redemption and saluation. Therefore they are represen- ted vnder bread and wine, that we should learn that they are not onely ours, but al also ordained for the nourishment of spiritual life. This is it that we before said, that from the corporal things which are shewed forth in the Sacraments, we are by a certain proportionall relation guided to spiritual things. So when bread is given vs for a signe of the body of Christ, we ought by and by to conceive this similitude: As bread nourisheth, sustayneth, and mainayneth the life of our body: so the body of Christ is the onely meat to quenche and give life to our soule. When we see wine set forth for a signe of his blood: we must call to minde what vs wine bringeth to the body, that we may consider that the same are brought to vs spiritually by the blood of Christ: where vs wine be, to cherish, to refresh, to strengthen, to make merry. For if we sufficiently weigh, what the delivering of this holy body, what the shedding of this holy blood, hath profited vs: we shall plainly perceive that these things which are spoken of bread and wine, according to such proportionall relation doe very well accord with them toward vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

4 Therefore the chiefe partes of the Sacrament are not simulie and without higher consideration to reach to vs the body of Christ: but rather that same promiseth, whereby he testifieth, that his flesh is verily meat, and his blood is drinke, with which we are fed into eternall life: whereby he affirmeth himselfe to be the bread of life, of which whoe eateth, he shall live for ever: to scale (I say) and conforme that promise: and for bringing the same to passe, to send vs to the crofte of Christ, where that promise hath beene truely performed, and in all points fulfilled. For we doe not well and healthfully eate Christ but crucified, when we doe with lively feeling conceive the effectualnes of his death. For whereas he calleth himselfe the bread of life, he did not borrow that name of the Sacramet, as some doe wrongfully expound it: but because he was given vs such of the Father, & performed himselfe such, when being made pattaker of our humane mortalitie, he made vs partners of his divine immortalitie: when offering himselfe for sacrifice, he tooke our accursednes uppon himselfe, that he might fill vs with blessing: when with his death he devoured and swallowed vp death: when in his resurrection he raised vp this our corruptible flesh which he had put on, to glory and vn corruption.

5 It remaineth that by appliance all the same may come to vs. That is done, both by the Gospell, and more clearely by the holy Supper, whereboth he offret himselfe to vs with all his good things, and we receive him by Faith. Wherefore the Sacrament maketh not that Christ first beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance, that he made the bread of life, which we continuallie eate, and when it greteth vnto vs the salt and flavour of that bread, then it maketh vs to seeke the strength of that bread. For it promiseth vs, that whatsoeuer Christ did or suffred, the same was done to giue life to vs. Then, that this givings of life is everlasting, by which we may without end be nourish'd, sustayned, and preferred in life. For as Christ should not have bene to vs the bread of life, vnlesse he had beene borne and had died for vs, vnlesse he had riven againe for vs: so now he should not be the same vnlesse the effectualnesse and fruit of his birth, death and resurrection, were an everlasting and immortall thing. All which Christ hath very well expressed in these words. The bread which I will giue, is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the world. By which words without doubt he signifieth, that his body should therefore be to vs for bread, to the spiritual life of the soule; because it should be giue foorth to death for our salvation: and that it is deliverd to vs to care of it, when by Faith he maketh vs partakers of it. Once therefore he gave it, that he might be made bread, when he gave foorth himselfe to be crucified for the redemption of the world: dayly he greteth it, when by the word of the Gospell he offereth it vnto vs to be receivd, so farre as it was crucified: where he seal eth that deliurance with the holy mystery of the Supper: where he inwardly fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Now herein we must beware of two faultes, that neither doing too much in abasing the signes, we seeme

The highest consideration in this sacrament is of the promiseth whereby Christ hath testified his flesh to be meat and his blood to be drinke us decea.

This Sacrament maketh not Christ to be the bread of life, but testifieth vnto us that he is so such as receiveth him in the due estimation of these mysteries whereby he is receiveth, so receiveth him to eare his flesh & to drinke his blood, an effect of beliesse and a thing to be distingushed from faith. seem to plucke them from their mysteries to which they are in a manner knit faft: nor that being immeasurable in advancing the same, we seem in the mean time somewhat to darknen the mysteries themselves. That Christ is the bread of life, where with the faithfull are nourished into eternall salvation, there is no man but he grannteth, vnlesse he be altogether without religion. But this point is not likewise agreed upon amonst all men, what is the maner of partaking of him. For there be that in one word define, that to eate the flesh of Christ and to drinke his blood, is nothing else but to beleue in Christ himselfe. But I thinke that Christ meant some certainer and higher thing, in that notable sermon where he commendeth to vs the eating of his flesh, namely, that we are quickened by the true partaking of him; which also he therefore expressed by the words of eating and drinking, lest any man shoulde thinke, that the life which we receive of him is conceived by bare knowledge only. For as not the sight, but the eating of bread sufficeth the body for nourishment: so it behooveth that the soule be truly and throughly made partaker of Christ, that by the power of him it may be quickened into a spiruitall life. But in the mean time we confess that there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined. But this is the difference betweene my words and theirs, that with them to eate is onely to beleue: but I say that the flesh of Christ is eate with beleuing, because by faith he is made ours, and I say that eating is the fruit and effect of faith. Or, if you will have it plainer, with them eate is faith: and I thinke it rather to follow of faith. In wordes verily the difference is but small: but in the thing itselfe, not small. For though the Apostle teacheth that Christ dwelleth in our hartes by faith: yet no man will expound this dwelling to be faith: but all men doe perceive that there is expressede a singular effect of faith, for that by it the faithfull do obtaine to have Christ dwelling in them. After this manner, the Lord meant, in calling himselfe the bread of life, not onely to teach that in the faith of his death and resurrection, salvation is repoed for vs: but also that by true partaking of himselfe it is brought to pasfe,that his life passeth into vs and becommeth ours: like as bread, when it is taken for foodde, miniftreth health and life to the bodie.

6 Neither did Augustine, whom they bring in for their patron, in any other meaning write that we eate by beleuing, than to shew that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I also denie not: but yet therewithall I adde, that we do by faith embrace Christ, not appeaing a farre of, but making himselfe one with vs, that he may be our head, and we his members. Yet do not I utterly disallow that manner of speaking: but onely I deny it to be a full declaration, if they mean to define what it is to eate the flesh of Christ. Otherwise I see that Augustine hath oft said this forme of speech: as when he saith in the third booke of Christian doctrine, Vnlesse ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man: this is a figure teaching that wee must communicat with the passion of the Lord, and must sweeptly and profitably lay vp in remembrance that for vs his flesh was crucified and wounded. Againe when he layeth that the three thousand men which were conected at Peter's sermon, did drinke the blood of Christ by beleuing, which they had shedde by cruel dealing. But in many other places hee honourably setteth out that benefite of faith, that by it our foules are no lesse refreshed with the communicatting of the flesh of Christ, than our bodies are with the bread which they eate. And the same is it which in a certaine place Chryfofome wrieth, that Christ doth not onely by faith, but also indeede make vs his bodie. For he meaneth not that we do from any other where than from faith, obtaine such a benefite: but this onely he meaneth to exclude, that none when hee liceth faith to be named, should conceiue a naked imagination. As for them that will haue the Supper to be onely a marke of outwarde proffession, I doe now passe them oute: because I thinke that I have sufficiently confuted their errour, when I entreated of sacraments generally. Onely this thing let the readers marke, that that when the cup is called the covenant in the blood, there is a promise expressed that may be of force to confirm Faith. Whereupon followeth, that unless we have respect to God, and embrace that which he offereth, we do not rightly vie the holy Supper.

7 Moreover they also do not satisfie me, which acknowledging that we have some communion with Christ, when they mean to express it, do make vs partakers only of the spirit, without making any mention of flesh & blood. As though all those things were spoken of nothing, that his flesh is verily made, that his blood is verily drunk: that none hath life, but he that eateth that flesh, and drinketh that blood: and such other sayings that belong to the same ende. Wherefore if it be certain that the full communicating of Christ proceedeth beyond their description, as it is too narrowly strained: I will now goe about to knit vp in few words, how large it is and how farre it extendeth it selfe, before that I speake of the contrary fault of excesse. For I shall have a longer disputation with the excessivie teachers, which, when according to their owne grossness they frame a manner of eating and drinking full of absurdity, doe also transfigure Christ stripp'd out of his flesh into a phantast: if yet a man may with any words comprehend so great a mysterie, which I see that I can not sufficiently comprehend with minde: and therefore I doe willingly confesse it, that no man should measure the highnes thereof by the small proportion of my childishnes. But rather I exhort the readers, that they do not confine the sense of their mindes within these two narrow bounds: but endeavour to rise vp much higher, than they can by my guiding. For I my selfe, so oft as I speake of this thing, when I have trauelled to say all, thinke that I have yet said but little in respect of the woorthines thereof. And although the minde can do more in thinking than the tongue in expressing: yet with greatest of the thing, the minde alio isTurned and outwchmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but that I must breake foorth into admi- ration of that mysterie, which neither the minde can suffice to thinke of, nor the tongue to declare. Yet after such manner as I can, I will fet foorth the summe of my sentence: which as I nothing doubt to be true, so I trust that it will not be dis- followed of Godly harts.

8 First of al, we are taught out of the Scripture, that Christ was from the beginning that life bringing word of the Father, the fountain and original of life, from whence all things ever received their hauing of life. Wherefore John sometime calleth him the world of life, and sometime writeth that life was in him: meaning that he was then flowing into all creatures, powred into them the power of breathing and living. Yet the same John addeth afterward, that the life was then and not till then openly shewed, when the Sonne of God taking upon him our flesh, gave himselfe to be seen with eyes and felt with hands. For though he did before also spread abroad his power into the creatures: yet becaufe man, being by sinne oft aunged from God, having lost the communion of life, law on every side death hanging over him: that he might recover hope of immortalitie, it behooved that he should be received into the communion of that worde. For how small a confidence maicth thou conceive thereof, if thou heare that the word of God in deedee, from which thou art most farre removed, containeth in it selfe the fulnesse of life, but in thy selfe and round about thee nothing offereth itself to thy eyes but death? But since that fountain of life becomm to dwell in our flesh, now it lieth not a farre off hidden from vs, but presently delucreth itself to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very flesh, wherein it resteth, to be of power to bringlife to vs, that by partaking thereof we may be fedde to immortalitie. I am ( faith he ) the bread of life, that am come downe from heauen. And the bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. In which wordes he teacheth not onely that he is life, in respect that he is the eternall word of God which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in comming down he powred the same power into the flesh which he did put on, that from thence the communicating of life might flow forther vnto vs. Hereupon also these things now follow, that his flesh is verily meate, and his blood is verily drinke, with which sustenances the faithfull are fostered into eternall life. Herein therefore consisteth singular comfort to the godly, that now they finde life in their owne flesh. For so they do not onely with easie paffage attaine vnto it, but have it of it selue laid abroad for them and offering it selue vnto them. Only let them hold open the boleome of their hart that they may embrace it being present, and they shall obtaine it.

The flesh of Chrift being (though not of it selue) an unwafted fountaine from whence life floweth, he that will be made to partake thereof, and have fellowship with it.

Ioh. 5.19.

The body & blood of Chrift truely gotten vnto vs, is not bare and naked figures thence in this sa-

Phe. 5:30.

Let the summe bee, that our soules are so fed with the flesh and blood of Chrift, as bread and wine do maintain and sustaine the bodily life: For otherwise the proportionall relation of the figne should not agree, vnleffe soules did find their food in Chrift. Which cannot be done, vnleffe Chrift do truely growe into one with vs, and refelveth vs with the eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood. But although it seeme incredible, that in so great distance of places the flesh of Chrift reacheth to vs that it may be meate to vs: let vs remember how much the secret power of the Spirit do mountith above all our senses, and how foollishe it is to goe about to measure his unmeasurable beneffe by our measure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the Spirit truely knitteth in one those things that are seuered in places. Now that same holy communicating of his bodie and blood, whereby Chrift poureth his life into vs, even as if hee pleased it into our bones and marrowes, hee in the Supper also testifieth and sealeth: and that not with setting before vs a vaine or voide signe, but bringing forth there the effectual working of his spirit whereby he fulfilleth that which he promiseth. And verily be there offereth and delivereth the thing signified to all them that sit at that spiritual banquet: although it be receiv'd with truith of the faithfull only, which receive the great bountifulnes with true Faith and thankfulness of minde. After which manner the Apostle saith, that the bread which we break is the communion of the body of Christ: and that the cuppe which we hallowe with the word and prayers to that purpose, is the communion of his blood. Neither is there any cause why any man should object, that it is a figurative speech, by which the name of the thing signified is giuen to the signe. I grant verily that the breaking of the bread is a signe, not the thing it selfe. But this being admitted, yet we shall rightly gather of the deliverance of the signe, that the thing it selfe is deliver'd. For vnlesse a man will call God a deceiuer, he can never be so bold to say that he setteth before vs an emptie signe. Therefore if by the breaking of bread the Lord doth truely represent the partaking of his body, it ought to be out of doubt that he truely performeth and delivereth it. And this rule is always to be holden of the Godly, that so oft as they see the signes ordain'd of the Lord, they certainly thinke and persuade themselfes that the truth of the signified is there present. For to what purpose should the Lord deliuer to thee into thy hand the signe of his body, but to assure thee of the true partaking of it? If it be true, that a visible signe is giuen vs, to seal the gift of an invisibill thing: when we receive the signe of the body, let vs no lesse certainly beleue that the body it selfe also is giuen vs.

11 I say therefore (which both hath bene alway receiv'd in the Church, and al they teach at this day that thinke right) that the holy mysterie of the Supper consisteth of two things: that is to say of the bodily signes, which being set before our eyes do repreffe in vs invisibill things: according to the capacitie of our weake-sesse: and of spiritual truth, which is by those signes both figured and deliver'd. Of what sort that is, when I mean to shew it familiarly, I vse to set three things: the signification, the matter which hangeth of the signification, the vertue or effect which followeth of both. The signification consisteth in the promises, which are after a certaine maner wrappt together with the signe. The matter of substance I call Christ with his death and resurrection. By effect I understand the redemption, righteousness, sanctification, and eternall life, and whatsoever other benefites Christ bringeth vs. Now although all these things have respect to Faith: yet I leaue no place to this caullation: as though when I say that Christ is receiv'd by Faith, I would have him conceiv'd with understanding onely and imagination. For the promises offer him, not that we should sticke fast in the light alone and in bare knowledge: but that we should enjoy the true communicacion of him. And truely I see not how any man may have confidence that he hath redemption and righteounesse in the croffe of Christ, and life in his death, but principally standing upon the true communio of Christ him selfe. For those good things should not come to vs, vnlesse Christ first made him selfe ours. I say therefore, that in the mysterie of the Supper, by the signes of bread and wine Christ is truely deliver'd to vs, yea and his body and blood, in which he hath fulfill'd all obedienc for purchasing of righteounesse to vs: namely that first we should grow together into one body with him: and then being made partners of his substance, we may also feele his power in the communicacion of all his good things.

12 Now I come down to the excelle mixtures, which superstition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath play'd with marvellous subtilitie, that withdrawing the minde of men from heauen, he might fill them with perniciouse error, as though Christ were fastened to the element of breade. And first wee must not dreame such a presence of Christ in the Sacrament, as the craftsmen of the court of Rome haue fained: as though the body of Christ were made present with presence of place, to be haned with hands, to be brooded with teeth, and swallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicholas endited to Berengarius, to bee a wittisse of his repentance: namely with words so faire montrous, that the author of the glofe crieth out that there is danger, if the readers do wisely take heed to themselves, lest they sucke out of them an heretike worse then was that of Berengarius. In the second distortion, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he trauell much in excusing the absurditie, yet more inclineth to the contrarie sentence. For as we nothing doubt that it hath limits according to the perpetual nature of the body of men, and is holden in heauen, into which it was once received, vnntill he returne to judgement: so to draw it backe vnnder these corruptible elements of to imagine it present every where, we account it to be vitally vnlawfull.

Neither vnder is it so needfull to this that we may enjoy the partaking of it: for as much as the Lord gueht vs this benefite by his Spirt that we be made one with him in body, Spirt, and soule. The bonde therefore of this coniuyning is the spirtue of Christ, by the knitting whereof we be coupled togethers, and as it were a certaine conduct, by which whatsouer Christ himselfe both is and hath, is conveyed to vs. For if we behold the innne shining forth with his beams upon the earth after a certaine manner to cast forth his substance vnto it to engender, nourish, and quicken the fruits thereof: why should the extending of beams of the spirtue of Christ be inferior to convey the communion of his flesh and blood into vs? Wherefore the Scripture, when it speakeith of our partaking with Christ, declareth the whole force thereof to the spirtue. Yet in stead of many, one place shall be sufficient. For Paul in the eight chapter to the Romaines, faith that Christ dwelleth in vs none other wise than by his spirtue: wherby yet he taketh not away, that communion of his flesh & blood of which we now speake, but teacheth that the Spirtue alone worketh that we possesse whole Christ and have him dwelling in vs.

13 The schoolmen thought more shamefully which were withheld with horror of so barbarous vnGodlinesse. Yet they alfo themselfes do nothing but mocke with futiler deceites. They graunt that Christ is not contained there by way of circumfcription nor after a bodily manner; but afterward they intent a way, which neither themselves doe vnderstand, nor they can declare to other: yet it is such as falleth to this point that Christ must be sought in the forme of bread as they call it.
For what is it? When they say that the substancie of bread is turned into chrit, do they not vntil him to the whitenes which they there leave? But (say they) he is so contained in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heauen: and we determine no other pre-ience but of habitude. But whatsouer words they bring in to cloake it with a deceit full colour, this is the ende of all, that that is by consecration made Christ, which before was bread: that from the clotoure Christ leeth hid vnnder that colour of bread.
Which alfo they are not ashamed in plaine words to expresse: For these be the words of Lombarde: that the body of Christ, which in it selfe is visible, when the consecration is ended, lieth hidden and is covered vnnder the forme of bread. So the forme of that bread is nothing else but a viour, that taketh away the light of the flesh from the eies. Neither need we many coniectures, to finde what shares they minded to lay with these words, such the thing it selfe plainly speakeith it. For it is to be seene with howe great superstition in certaine ages past, not only the common sort of men, but also the very chiefe of them have beene holde, and at this day be holde in popish Churches.
For having little care of true faith (by which alone we both come into the fellowship of Christ, and doe cleae together with him) so that they have a carnall precence of him, which they have framed before the word, they thinke that they have him present enough. Therefore in a fimme, we see that this hath beene gotten by this wittie futility that bread was taken for God.

14 From
From hence proceeded that same fained transubstantiation, for which at this day they fight more earnestly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the first builders of that local presence could not unwinde themselves from this doubt howe the bodie of Christ shoulde be mingled with the substance of bread, but that by and by many absurdities did thrust themselves in place. Therefore they were driven of neceffity to fettle to this intention, that there is made a turning of bread into the body: not that the body is properly made to God, but because Christ that he might hide himselfe vnder the forme, bringeth the substance to nothing. But it is maruel-Ious, that they fell to so great ignorance, yea fchifellef fullenfe, that not only that Scripture but alfo the content of the olde Church fighting against it, they brought abroad that monfter. I grant indeed that some of the olde writers sometime vfed the name of turning: not for that they woulde destroy the substance in the outwarde fignes, but that they might teach that the bread dedicate to the myfterie differeth far from common bread and is now other. But ech where they all plainly declare, that the holy supper confifteth of two partes, an earthly part, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they doe without controversy expounde to be bread and wine. Truely whatsoever they babble, it is plaine that in confirming of this doctrine they want the defence of antiquitie, which they oftentimes presume to set against the euident word of God. For it is not fo long ago since it was inuented, it was verily vknown not only to those better ages, in which the purer doctrine of religion yet flourished, but also even when that fame pureneffe was much defiled. There is none of the old writers that doth not in express words confesse that the holy fignes in the supper are bread and wine: although, as we have fayde, they sometime fet it out with divers titles, to advance the dignitie of the myfterie. For whereas they fay that in the confe-ration is made a secret turning, that nowe it is another thing then bread and wine:
I haue euene now given warning that they do not thereby mean that the things themselves, are brought to nought, but that they are nowe to bee otherwize esteemed than common meats, which are appointed only to feeede the belly: for as much as in them is deliverd to vs the spiritual meate and drinke of the soule. This we alfo deny nor.
If (say these men) there bee a turning, it must needs bee that there is of one thing made another thing. If they meane that there is some thing made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will drawe it to that their owne imagination, let them answere me what change they thinke to be made in baptism. For herein the fathers alfo do determine a maruellous turning, when they fay that of a corruptible element is made a spiritual washing of the soule, yet none of them denyeth that water remaineth. But (say they) there is no fuch thing in baptism, as is that in the Supper.
This is my body. As though the qüestion were of thofe wordes, which have a meaning plaine enough: and not rather of that word of turning, which ought to signifie no more in the Supper than in baptism. Therefore farewell they with these fnares of syllables, whereby they doe nothing else but bewray their owne hungrierifie. For otherwize the significacion woulde not agree together vnlike the truth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outwarde figne. Christes will was by the outwarde figne to teftifie that his fleshe is meate. If he did not before vs onely an empyte imagi-nature forme of bread not true bread, where were the correlation of similitude which should lead vs from the visible thing to the invisible? For, that all things may agree together, the significacion shall extend no further, but that we bee fed with the forme of the flefh of Christ. As, if in baptism the forme of water shoulde deceive our eyes, it shoulde not bee to vs a cernain pledge of our washing: yea by that deceitfull shewe there shoulde be givne vs an occasion of wauering. Therefore the nature of the faca-ment is overthrown, vnlike in the manner of signifying the earthly figne anwere to the heauenly thing. And therefore we looke the truth of this myfterie, vnlike true bread reprefente to vs the true bodie of Christ. I repeat it againe:
Sith
Cap. XV.

Of the outward meanes

Sith the supper is nothing else, but a visible testifying of that promise which is in the first Chapter of John, namely that Christ is the bread of life, which came down from heaven: there must be visible bread vised for a mean whereby that same spiritual bread may be figured: vnlesse wee will that we loose all the fruite which in this behalfe God tenderly granteth to succine our weaknesses. Now by what reason should Paul gather, that all we are one body and one bread, which do together partake of one bread, if there remained onely an imaginative forme and not rather a natural truth of bread?

breaking of bread, and such other. It is certain that their cies were only deceived with the enchantment of the Magicians. As concerning Moses, the matter is more doubtfull, by whose hand it was no more hard for God to make a rod a Serpent, and againe of a Serpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleshly bodies, and by and by after to viole cloth them. If the nature of this mysterie were the same or like, there were some colour for their solution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truly nor fitly promiséd vs that in the Supper the fleth of Christ is truly to vs for meate, vntethe true substance of the outwarde signe agree with it. And (as one errore growth of another) the place of Jeremue is so foolishly wrested to prooue tran-substantiation, that it itketh me to rehearse it. The Prophet complaineth that wood is put in his bread: meaning that by the crueltie of his enemies, his bread was infected with bitterneffe. As David with a like figure bewaieth that his meate was corruped with gall, and his drinke with v兵器. These men will haue it that the body of Christ was by way of allegoric fastened to the cross. But some of the olde fathers thought to. As though we ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, and to bury their shame, then to adde shamelesse to compell them yet still to fight like enemies with the natural meaning of the Prophet.

16 Other, which see that the proportionall relation of the signe and the thing signified, cannot be overthrown, but that the truth of the mysterie must fall, doe confesse that the bread of the Supper is verily a substance of an earthly and corruptible element, and suffereth no change in itselfe, but hast vnder it selfe the body of Christ inclosed. If they did so declare their meaning, that when the bread is deluered in the mysterie, there is adjoyned the delivering of the body, because the truth is vnfeuera-ble from the signe: I would not much strive with them. But because they placing the body in the bread, doe faie to it a being euer where contrarie to the nature there-of, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is necessarie a little while to draw such subtleties out of their dennes. For my minde is not as of ser purose to go through with all this point: but onely that I may lay the foundations of the disputation which shall by and by follow in place fit for it. They will therefore haue the body of Christ to be invisible and immeasurable, that it may be hid vnder the bread: because they thinke they doe not otherwise communicate with him than if he desend into the bread: but they comprehend not the manner of descending, whereby he lifeth vp vserward to himselfe. They lay vppon it all the colours that they can: but when they have said all, it sufficiently appeareth, that they stay vp upon the local presence of Christ. Whence commeth that? even because they can abide to conceu no other partaking of the flesh and bloud, but which consisteth either of joyning and touching of place, or of some grosse enclosing.

17 And, that they may obstinately defende the errore once rashly conceiued, some of them strike not to say, that the flesh of Christ had neuer any other measurings, but so farre and wide as heauen and earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a childe out of the wombe, whereas he grewe, whereas he was spread abroad on the croffe, whereas he was inclosed in the sepulchre, the same was done by a certaine dispensation, that he might be borne and die, and performe the other duties of man. Whereas after his resurrection he was seene in his wonted forme of body, whereas he was taken vp to heauen, whereas last of all also after his ascension he was seene of Stephen and Paul: it was done by the same dispensation, that it might appeare to the sight of men that he was made a king in heauen. What is this else, but to vse vp Mar- ion out of hel. For no man can doubt that the body of Christ was a fantastical thing, if he was of such fature. Some slip away somewhat more subtly, with saying that this body which is given in the sacrament is glorious and immortall: and that therefore it is no absurditie, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the Sacrament. But I ask what manner of body Christ gave:

Ezai. 53:4.

The bodie and blood of Christ though not asfemned once, yet spiritually delivered in the bread and wine of the holy Eucharist.

18 Now if they lift to fasten the body and blood of the Lord to bread and wine: the one shall of necessity be plucked in sunder from the other. For as the bread is deliuered feuerally from the cup, so the body visited to the bread must needs be divided from the blood inclosed in the cup. For when they affirme that the body is in the bread and the blood in the cup: and the bread and wine are by spaces of place distant the one from the other: they can by no shift escape, but that the body must be feuered from the blood. But whereas they are wont to allege, that by accompanying (as they faine) in the body is the blood, and likewise in the blood is the body, that verily is too tripping: for as much as the signes in which they are incloset, are so sundered. But if we be lifted vp with our eyes and minds to heaven, that we seeke Christ there in the glorie of his kingdome: as the signes doe allure vs to him whole, so under the signe of bread we shall be fed with his body, under the signe of wine we shall feuerally drinke his blood, that at length we may enjoy him whole. For although he hath taken away his flesh from vs, and in his body is ascended vp into heaven, yet he setteth at the right hand of the father, that is to say he reigneth in the power, and maiestrie, and glorie of the father. This kingdome is neither bounded with any spaces of place, nor compassed about with any meaurings, but that Christ may shew forth his might wherefoever it pleasaunt him both in heaven and in earth: but that he may shew himselfe present with power and strength: but that he may alwayes be at hande with them that be his, breathing his life into them, may live in them, strengthen them, quicken them, preserve them safe, even as if he were present in body: finally, but that he may feede them with his owne body, the communion whereof hee doth by the power of his spirit powre into them. After this manner the body and blood of Christ is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

19 But we must appoint such a presence of Christ in the supper, as may neither fasten him to the element of bread, nor shew him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compass him in, (for it is plain that all these things are but his heavenly glorie) finally such as may neither take from him his owne measure, nor diuersly drawe him in many places at once, nor faie to him such an unmeasurable greatness as is spread abroad through out heaven and earth, for these things are plainely against the truth of the nature of manhood. Let vs (I say) never suffer these two exceptions to be taken away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glorie of Christ, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elements of this world, or is bounde to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothing be by faying, applied to his body, that agreeeth not with the nature of man: which is done, when it is either faide to bee infinite, or is set in many places at once. But these absurdities being taken away, away, I willingly receive whatsoever may avail to express the true and substantial communication of the body and blood of the Lord, which communicating is delivered to the faithful under the holy signes of the supper: and so that they may be thought not to receive it by imagination only or understanding of minds, but to enjoy it in due to the food of eternal life. Why this sentence is so hateful to the world, and all defence taken away from it by the vainst judgements of many, there is no cause at all, but for that the dull hath with horrible bewitching maddened their minds. Truely that which we teach, doth in all points very well agree with the Scriptures: it containeth neither any absurditie, nor darkenes, nor doubtfulnesse: it is not against true godlines and sound edification: finally, it hath nothing in it, that may offend, sauing that in certaine ages past, when that ignorance and barbarouines of Sophisters reigned in the Church, so cleere light and open truth hath been unworthily oppreessed. Yet because Satan at this day also travaileth by troublesome spirits to spot it with all the flanders and reproches that he can, and bendeth himselfe to no other thing with greater endeauor: it is profitable the more diligently to defende and refuse it.

20. Nowe before that we go any further, we must entreate of the false institution of Christ: specially because this is the most glorious objection that our adversaries have, that we depart from the words of Christ. Therefore, that we may be discharge of the false cause of malice wherein they burden us, our firste beginning shall be at the exposition of the words. Three Evangelistes and Paul rehearse, that Christ tooke bread: when he had given thankes he brake it, gave it to his disciples and said, Take, eate, this is my bodie which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cup Matthew and Mark saie thus: This cup is the bloud of the newe Testament, which shall bee shed for manie unto forgivenes of sinnes. But Paul and Luke saie thus: This cup is the newe testament in my bloud. The patrones of transubstantiation will have by the pronoune (this) the forme of bread to be signified, because the confecration is made in the whole content of the sentence, and there is no sub stance that can bee shewed. But if they be holden with religious care of the words, because Christ testified, that that which he reached into the disciples handes, was his body: truly this their devise, that that which was bread is nowe the bodie, is most farre from the proper meaning of them. That which Christ tooke into his handes and gave the Apostles, hee affirmed to be his body: but he tooke bread: who therefore cannot understand that bread is yet shewed? and therefore there is no greater absurditie, than to remoue that to the forme, which is spoken of the bread. Other, when they expound this worde (is) for (to be transubstantiate,) do flee to a more enforced and violently wrested glove. Therefore there is no cause why they should pretend that they be moued with reverence of wordes. For this was unheard of among all nations and languages, that the worde (is) should be taken in this sense, namely for to be turned into another thing. As for them that leave bread in the supper, and affirme that there is the body of Christ, they much differ among themselves. They which speake more modestly, although they precisely exact the letter. This is my bodie, yet afterwardes warue from their precisenesse, and say that it is as much in effect as that the body of Christ is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the matter it selfe which they affirme, we have already touched somewhat; and we shall by and by have occasion yet to speake more. Now I dispute onely of the wordes, by which they say they are restrained that they cannot admit bread to be called the bodie, because it is a signe of the bodie. But if they shunne all figures, why do they leape away from the plain shewing of Christ, to their owne manners of speaking more differing from it? For there is great difference betweene this that bread is the bodie, and this that the bodie is with bread. But because they saue it to be impossible, that this simple proposition might stande, that bread is the bodie: they have attempted to escape away

The words of Christes institution, in words held, in deed perversed, for taken by the authors as well as transubstantiation as consubstantiation.

Mark. 14:22.

1 Cor. 11:24.
Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes

away by those formes of speech, as it were by crooked turnings. Some more bolde sticke not to affirme that even in proper speaking, bread is the body, and by this mean they truely proue themselfes to be literall men. If it be objected, that therefore the bread is Christ, and is God: this verifie they will denie, because it is not exprefted in the wordes of Christ. But they shall nothing pruefaile by denying it: forasmuch as all doe agree that whole Christ is offred vs in the Supper. But it is an intolerable blasphemie, that it be without figure spoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Christ. Nowe I ask of them, whether these two propositions bee both of one effect, Christ is the fonne of God, and bread is the bodie of Christ. If they grant that they are diuerfe, (which we will enforce them to grant whether they will or no) then let them anfweare whence commeth the difference. I think they will bring none other but that the bread is after the sacramental manner called the body. Whereup on followeth, that Christes wordes are not subject to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammar. Also I ask of the preface and stiffe requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paul do call the Cup the Teftament in the bloude, whether they do not exprefse the fame thing which they did in the first part, where they call bread the bodie. Truely the same religion was in the one part of the mysterie that was in the other: and becaufe shortenesse is darke, longer speech doth better open the meaning. So oft therefore as they shall affirme by one worde, that the bread is the bodie: I will out of moe worde bring a fite exposition, that it is the Teftament in the bodie. For why? Shall we neede to feeke a more faithfull or furer expofitor than Paul and Luke? Neither yet doe I tende heneunto, to diminish any thing of that communicating of the bodie of Christ which I have confessed: onely my purpose is to confufe that foolish wauwardnesse, whereby they doe fo hatefully braue about words. I vnderstand, by the authorities of Paul and Luke, that the bread is the body of Christ, because it is the covenant in the body. If they fight against this, they have warre not with me, but with the spirite of God. Howfeeuer they crye out that they be touched with reverence of the words of Christ, whereby they do not figuratively understand thofe thinges that are plainly fpoken: yet this is not a pretence rightfull enough, why they should fo refufe all the reasons which wee obiect to the contrarie.
In the meane time, as I haue already giuen warning, it is convenient to leafe, what maner of thing this is, The teftament in the body and bloud of Christ: becaufe the covenant ftablished with the sacrifice of death, should otherwise not profite vs, vnlesse there were adoeyned that fervet communicating whereby we growe into one with Christ.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinitie which the things signified haue with their signes, we confesse that the felfe name of the thing was giuen to the signe :
figuratiuely in deed, but not without a moft fit proportionall agreement. I leave alle-gories and parables, let any man though quarrell that I feele startingholes, and wander out of the present purpofe. I say that this is a speech by figure of transnominations which is commonly vied in the Scripture, when mysteries are entreated of. For neither can you otherwise vnderstand that which is faide: that circumcision is a co-covenant: that the lambe is the pas leouer: that the Sacrifices of the law are expiations:
sufallie that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the defert, was Christ, vnlesse
you take it to be fpoken by way of transferring of names. Neither are names tran-ferred only from the higher name to the lower: but contrariwise the name of the visible signe is also giuen to the thing signified: as when it is faide that God appeare to Moses in the bath: when the arke of covenante is called God, and the face of God: and the doue is called the holy Ghoft. For though the signe differ in substance from the thing signified: because this is spirtuall and heavenly, and that is corporall and visible: yet because it doth not onely figure the thing which it is holily appointed to re-represent, as a naked and emptie token, but doth also truely deliver it in deed: why may not the name of the thing rightly accorde with it? If signes devised by men, which are rather images of things absent, then marks of things present, which selfe absent things, they doe oftentimes deceitfully shadowe, are yet sometime garnished with the titles of the things: then those things that are ordained of God, doe by much greater reason borrowe the name of those things, of which they alwaye both bear a sure and not deceitfull signification, and have the truth adioyned with them. There is therefore so great likenesse and neerenesse of the one to the other, that it is easie to drawe their names to and fro. Therefore let our adversaries ceaze to heape vnfaoure scoffings against vs, in calling vs Tiopits, because we expound the sacramental manner of speaking after the common vfe of the Scripture. For whereas the Sacraments agree together in many things: in this transferring of names, they have all a certaine communitie together. As therefore the Apostle teacheth, that the stone out of which spirituall drinke did spring to the Israelites, was Christ, because it was a visible signe, vnder which that spirituall drinke was truly indeede but not discernably to the eie perceiued: so bread is at this day called the bodie of Christ, for as much as it is a signe whereby the Lorde offereth to vs the true eating of his body.

Neither did Augustine otherwise thinke or speake leaft any man should despise this as a new invention. If (faith he) the sacraments had not a certaine likenesse of these things whereof they are sacraments, they should not be sacraments at all. And of this likenesse oftentimes they take the names of the things themselves. As therefore after a certaine manner the sacrament of the body of Christ, is the body of Christ: the sacrament of the blood of Christ, is the blood of Christ: so the sacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were superfluous to heape together, faith that one sufficeth: saying that the readers must be warned that the holy man teacheth the same thing in the epistle to Euodius. But it is a trifling shift to say, that where Augustine teacheth, that when transferring is often and commonly vfed in mysteries, he maakes no mention of the Supper: because if this shift were receiued, we might not reason from the generaltie to the specialtie, neither were this a good argument: Euerie feeling creature hath power of mooounge, therefore an oxe and an horse haue power of mooounge. Howbeit long disputation hereof is in another place ended by the words of the same holy man, where he faith, that Christ stiched not to call it his body, when he gaue the signe of his body. Against Adimantus the Manichean, in the twelfth chapter, And in another place vpon the third Psalmes, Maruellous (faith he) is the patience of Christ, that he receiued Judas to the bancker, wherein he committed and delivered to his discipes the figure of his body and blood.

22 But if some precise man, being blinde at all the rest, do stand onely vpon this word (this is) as though it feuered this mysterie from all other, the solution is easie. They say that the vehement of the substantiue verbe (is) is so great that it admiteth no figure. Which if we graunte to them: even in the words of Paul is read the substantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communieating of the body of Christ. But the communiciating is another thing than the body it selfe. Yea commonly where Sacraments are entreated of, we finde the same word vfed. As: this shall be to you a coveniant with me. This Lambe shall be to you a passaouter. To reheare no more: when Paul faith that the rokke was Christ, why doe they take the substantiue verbe in that place to be of lesse vehement then in the speech of Christ? Let them also answere, where John faith, the holy Ghost was not yet, because Jesus was not yet glorified, of what force the substantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide fastened to their rule, the eternall essence of the holy Ghost shall be destroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the ascension of Christ. Finally let them answere, what meaneth that saying of Paul, that Baptisme is the washing of regeneration and renewing, which it is euent to be unprofitable to many. But nothing is stronger to confute them, than that saying of Paul, that the Church is Christ. For bringing a similitude of the

the body of man, he addeth, So is Christ: in which place he understandeth the onely begotten soune of God, not in himselfe, but in his members.

Hereby I thinke I have obtained that to sound witted and uncorrected men the blunders of our enimies, are lothsome, when they spread abroad, that we withdrawe credite from the words of Christ: which we doe no lesse obediently embrace than they, and doe weigh them with more godly reverence.

Yea their negligen carelesse sheweth that they doe not greatly care what Christ meant, so that it give them a buckler to defend their obstinacie: like as our earnest searching ought to be a wittnesse how much we esteem the authoritie of Christ. They odiously spread abroad, that naturall sense of man withholdeth vs from beleaung that which Christ hath uttered with his owne holy mouth: but how maliciously they burden vs with this slander, I have a great part alreadie made plain, and hereafter it shall more cleerely appeare. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleaung Christ when he speakeith, nor from obeying to soone as he doth but with becke will this or that. Onely this is the question, whether it be vnlawfull to inquerie of the naturall meaning.

23. These good matters, that they may seeme well lettered, doe forbid men to depart be it rather so little from the letter. But I on the other side, when the scripture nameth God a warlike man, because I see that without figurative translation it is too rough a manner of speaking, doe not doubt that it is a comparison taken from men. And truly upon none other pretence in the olde time the Anthropomorphites troubled the true teaching fathers, but that catching fast hold of these sayings, The eyes of God doe see, It went vp to his eares, His hand stretched out, The earthe his footstoole, they cried out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture assigneth unto him. If this law be received, our wondrous barbarousnes shall overthrow the whole light of faith. For what monsters of abfurdisties may not pervert men to garlie out, if it be granted them to allege every small title to stablise their opinions? That which they object, that it is not likely, that when Christ prepared for his Apostles a singular comfort in adversitie, he did then speake in a riddle or darkly, maketh our side. For if it had not come in the minds of the Apostles that bread was figuratively called the body, because it was the signe of the body, they had without doubt been troubled with so monstros a thing. Almoﬆ at the same moment John reporteth that they did stick in perplexitie at every of the least difficulties. They which firue among themselves, how Christ will go to the father: and doe moue question, how he will go out of the world: they which understand nothing of those things that are spoken concerning the heavenly father, till they see him: how would they have been so eafe to beleue that which al resaon refueth, that Christ sitteth at the board in their fight, and is inclosed invisible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the bread without doubting, testifie their content, hereby appeareth that they tooke Christs wordes in the same sense that we doe, because they remembredd that which ought not to seeme strange in mysteries, that the name of the thing signified is transferred to the signe. Therefore it was to the disciplin, as is to vs, a certaine and cleere comfort, entangled with no riddle. Neither is there any other cause whysome should depart from our exposition, but because the inchaunement of the diuell hath blinded them, namely that they should finde darknesse to themselves, where the exposition of an apt figure oftereth it selfe. Moreover if wee preciselie stande upon the wordes, Christ should wrongfully have spoked in one place severally another thing concerning the bread than he speakeath of the cup. He calleth the bread his bodie, he calleth the wine his bloud: either it shall be a confused vaine repetition, or it shall bee such a partition as shall divide the body from the bloud. Yea it shall as truly be faide of the cup. This is my body, as of the bread it selfe, and it may likewise interchangeably bee faide, that the bread is the bloud. If they answere that we must consider to what end or vse the signes were ordainde: I graunt it in deede: but in the meane time time they shall not vnwinde themselues, but that their error must draw this absurditie with it, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body. Now I wote not what this meaneth, when they graunt the bread and the body to be divers things, yet to affirme that the one is spoken of the other properly and without any figure, as: if a man should say that a garment is indeed a thing differing from a man, and yet that it is properly called a man. In the meanes while as though their victorie consisted in obstinacie and railing, they lay that Christ is accused of lying, if an exposition be sought of the worldes. Now it shall be ease for vs to shew to the Readers how vnaught wrong these catchers of syllables doe to vs, when they fill the simple with this opinion, that we withdraw credit from the words of Christ, which we have prooued to be furiously perverted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

24. But the slander of this lie cannot be vitterly purged, till another crime be wiped away. For they spred abroad, that we be so addicted to naturall reason, that we give no more to the power of God, than the order of nature suffereth and common fense teacheth. From so malicious slanderes I appeale to the very doctrine it selfe which I have declared; which doth clearely enough shew, that I doe not measure this mystery by the proportion of mans reason, nor doe I make it subject to the lawes of nature. I beseech you, haue we learned out of naturall phylofophie, that Christ doth so from heauen feede our Soules and bodies with his flesh, as our bodies are nourished with bread and wine? Whence commeth this power to flesh, that it may give life? All men will say that it is not done naturally. It will no more please mans reason, that the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs, that it may be food unto vs. Finally whosoever hath taft of our doctrine, shall be rauifhed into admiration of the secret power of God. But these good men that be so zealous of it, forge to themselves a miracle, which being taken away, God himself vanisht with his power. I desire to haue the Readers once againe warned, that they diligently vsey what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common fense, or with the wings of Faith, surmounting the world, climbeth vp beyond it into the heauens. We say that Christ as well with the outward signe as with his spirit, descendeth to vs, that he may truely quicken our soules with the substance of his flesh and of his blood. In these few words he that perceiued not to be contained many miracles, is more than fenselesse: forasmuch as there is nothing more beside nature, than that Soules should borrow spirituall and heauenly life, of the flesh which took her beginning of the earth, and which was subject to death. Nothing is more incredible, than that things distant and a fander by the whole space of heauen and earth, should in so great distance of places not onely be conioyned but also viritied, that Soules may receiue foode of the flesh of Christ. Therefore let wayward men cease to procure hatred to vs, by a filthy slander, as though we did eneniouly restraine any thing of the immeasurable power of God. For they doe either too foolishly errore too malicously lie. For it is not here in question what God could, but what he would. We affirme that to be done which pleased him. But it pleased him, that Christ should be made like to his brethren in al things, except sin. What maner of thing is our flesh? Is it not such as consifeth of the certaine measure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is scene? And why (say they) may not God make that one selle same flesh may occupy many and divers places? May be contained in one place, may be without measure and forme? Thou mad man, why requirest thou of God to make flesh at one selle time to be and not to be flesh? Like as if thou shouldest instantly require, him to make at one selle time the light to be both light and darkenes. But he will not of all the light, darknesse to be darkenesse, flesh to be flesh. He shall in deed when it pleaseth him, turne darkenes into light, and light into darkenes, but when thou requirest that light and darkenesse may not differ, what does thou else but pervert the order of the wisedome of God? Therefore

The unmeasurable power of God, not at all diminished by them who refuse the doctrine of consubstantiation.

Heb. 4.15.
Cap. 17. Of the outwarde meanes

Therefore flesh must be flesh: and Spirite Spirite, every thing in such law and condition as God hath created it. But such is the condition of flesh, that it must be in one yea and that a certaine place, and consist of her measure and of his forme. With this condition Christ tooke flesh upon him, to which (as Augustine witnesseth) he hath given indeed vn corruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and truth.

25 They answere, that they have the worde, whereby the will of God is made pleine: namely if it be granted them to banish out of the Church the gift of exposition, which may bring light to the word, I grant that they have the word: but such as in old time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God having a body: such as Mariion and the Manichees had, when they fained the body of Christ to be, either heauenly or phantastical. For they alleaged for testimonies, The first Adam was of the earth earthly, the second Adam is of heauen, heauenly: Againe, Christ abased himselfe, taking upon him the forme of a servant, and was found in likeness as a man. But the grosse eaters thinke that there is no power of God, vnde with the monster forged in their braines, the whole order of nature be overthrown: which is rather to limite God, when we couet with our fained intentions to prooue what he can doe. For out of what word have they taken that the body of Christ is visible in heauen, but lurketh invisible in earth vnder innumerable little peeces of bread? They will say that necessitate requireth this that the body of Christ should be given in the supper. Verily because it pleased them to gather a fleshly eating out of the worde of Christ: they being carried away by their owne forejudgement, were driven to necessitie to couene this litlle leene, which the whole Scripture crieth out against. But that any thing is by vs diminished of the power of God, is so falde that by our doctrine the praise of it is very honorably set out. But forasmuch as they alway according vs, that we defraud God of his honor, when we refuse that which according to common sense is hard to be beleued, although it have been promisied by the mouth of Christ: I make against the same anwvere that I made even now, that in the mysteries of Faith we doe not aske counsell of common sense, but with quiet willingnes to learne, and with the spirit of meeknes, which James commendeth, we receive the doctrine come from heauen. But in that when they perriciously erro, I deny not that we follow a profitable moderation. They hearing the words of Christ, This is my body, imagine a miracle most far from his mind. But when out of this fained inuention arife foule absurdities, because they have already with headlong halfe put sheres vpon thesclues, they plunge themsfelues into the bottomlesse depth of the almightynes of God, that by this meanes they may quench the light of truth. Hereupon commeth that proude precisenenes: We will not know how Christ lieth hid vnder the bread, holding our felves contented with this saying of his, This is my body. But we, as we doe in the whole Scripture, doe with no lesse obedience then care, studie to obtaine a sound understanding of this place: neither doe we with preposterous heate rashly and without choice catch hold of that which first chrucheth it felle into our mindes: but vning diligent musing vpon it, we embrace the meaning which the spirit of God ministreth: and standing thereupon we doe from aloft desipe whatsoever earthly wisdome is set against it. Yea we hold our mindes captive that they may not be bolder so much as with one little word to carpe against it: and doe humble them, that they may not dare to rise vp against it. Hereupon sprung vp the exposition of the worde of Christ, which to be by the commun vlage of the Scripture common to all Sacraments, all they that have been thought but meanely executed therein, doe know. Neither doe we, after the example of the holy Virgin, thinke it lawfull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire how it may be done.

26 But because nothing shall more auade to confirm the Faith of the Godly, than when they have learned that the doctrine which we have taught is taken out of...
of the word of God, and standeth upon the authority thereof: I will make this also evident with as great briefness as I can. The body of Christ, since the time that it rose again, not Aristotle but the Holy Ghost teacheth to be limited, and that it is comprehended in heaven until the last day. Neither am I ignorant that they boldly mock out those places that are alluded for this purpose. So oft as Christ faith that he will depart, leaving the world, they answer that that departing is nothing else but a changing of mortal state. But after this manner, Christ should not set the Holy Ghost in this place to supply (as they call it) the want of his absence: forasmuch as he doth not succeede into this place, nor Christ himself doth descend againe out of the heavenly glory to take upon him the state of mortal life. Truely the coming of the Holy Ghost, and the ascending of Christ are things set as contrary: therefore it cannot be that Christ should according to the flesh dwell with vs after the same manner that he senteth his Spirit. Moreover he in plaine words expresseth, that he will not be alway with his Disciples in the world. This saying also they thinketh that they doe gaily wipe away, as though Christ said that he will not alway be poor and miserable or subject to the necessitie of this fraile life. But the circumstance of the place cryeth plainly to the contrarie, because there is not intreated of pouerbie and neede, or of the miserable state of earthly life, but of worship and honor. The anointing pleased not the Disciples, because they thought it to be a superfluous and vnprofitable cost, and neere unto riotous excess, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be ill wasted, had beene bestowed vpon the poor. Christ answereth that he shall not alway be present that he may be worshipped with such honour. And none otherwise did Augustine expound it, whose words be these which are nothing doubtfull. When Christ said, Ye shall not alway have me, he spake of the presence of his body. For according to his maiefie, according to his prouidence, according to his vnspikeable and imvisible grace, this was fulfilled which he said, behold, I am with you even to the ending of the world. But according to the flesh which the word tooke vnto him, according to this that he was borne of the Virgin, according to this that he was taken of the Lewes, that he was fastened to the tree, that he was taken downe from the croffe, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, that he was laid in the grave, that he was manifestly shewed in the resurrection, this was fulfilled, Yee shall not alway haue me with you. Why so? Because he was conuerfant according to the presence of his body fortie daies with his Disciples, and while they accompanied him in seeing not in following he ascended. He is not here: for he sitteth there at the right hand of the Father. And ye he is here: because he is not gone away in presence of Maiestie. Otherwise according to the presence of Maiestie we haue Christ alway: and according to the presence of the flesh it is rightly said, But me ye shall not alway haue. For according to the presence of the flesh, the Church had him a few daies: now the holdeth him by Faith, but seeth him not with eyes. Where that I may note this also briefly) he maketh him present to vs three waies, by maieftie, prouidence, and vnspikeable grace, vnder which I comprehend this maruellous communion of his body and blood: if so that we understand it to be done by the power of the holy Ghost, not by that fained enclosing of his body vnder the element. For our Lord hath testified, that he hath flesh and bones which may be felt and seene. And to goe away and Ascende do not signifie to make a shew of one ascending and going away, but to doe in deede that which the words founde. Shall we then (will some man say) assigne to Christ some certaine coaft of heauen? But I anfwered with Augustine that this is a most curious and superfluous question, if so that yet we beleue that he is in heauen.

27 But what doth the name of Ascending so oft repeated? doth it not signifie a remouing from one place to another? They deny it: because after their opinion by height is onely signified Maiestie of Empire. But what meaneth the very manner of

of ascension? was he not in sight of his Disciples looking on, lifted up on high? Do not the Evangelists plainly declare that he was taken up into the heavens? These witty Sophisters do answer that with a cloud set betweene him and them he was conuoyed out of their sight, that faithfull might learn that from thence forth he should not be visible in the world. As though, to make credit of his invisible presence, he ought not rather to vanish away in a moment, or as though the cloud ought not rather to compass him before that he stirred his foote. But when he is carried up high into the aire, and with a cloud cast vnderneath him, teacheth that he is no more to be fought in the earth: we safely gather, that now he hath his dwelling place in the heavens: as Paul also affirmeth, and from thence biddeth vs to looke for him. After this manner the Angels warned the Disciples, that they in vaine gazed vp into heaven: because Iesus which is taken vp into heaven, shall so come as they have seen him goe vp. Here also the aduersaries of sound doctrine start away with a pleasant shift as they think, saying that he shall then come visible, which never went out of the earth but that he abideth invisible with them that be his. As though the Angels did there signify a double presence, and do not simply make the Disciples witnesses of his going vp seeing it with their eyes, that no doubting might remaine: even as if they had said: he in your sight beholding it, being taken vp into heaven, hath claimed to himselfe the heauenly Empire: it remaineth that ye patiently abide in expectation, till he come againe the Judge of the world: because he is now entred into heaven, not that he may alone possesse it, but that he may gather together with him you and all the godly.

28 But forasmuch as the defenders of this bastard doctrine are not ashamed to garnish it with the contentious voices of the old writers, and specially of Augustine: I will in few wordes declare how pervertely they goe about it. For whereas their testimonies have been gathered together of learned and godly men, I will not doe a thing already done: let him that will, feeke them out of their works. I will not heape together, neither out of Augustine himselfe, all that might make to the purpose: but will be content to shew by a fewe that he is without controversie whole on our side. As for this that our aduersaries, to vitiate him from vs, doe allege that it is commonly read in his booke, that the flesh and blood of Christ is distributed in the supper, namely the sacrifice once offered in the cross: it is but calling: fith he also calleth it either thanksgiving, or the Sacrament of the body. But in what sense he vseth the words of flesh and blood, we neede not to secke with long compassing about: forasmuch as he declareth himselfe, saying that Sacramentes take their names of the likenes of the things which they signifie: and that therefore after a certaine manner the sacrament of the body is the body. Wherewith accordeth another place which is well enough known, The Lord nodded not to say, This is my body, when he gave the signe of it. Againe they object, that Augustine writeth expressly, that the body of Christ flocketh to the ground, and entrest into the mouth: even in the fame sense, that he affirmeth it to be consumed, because he joyneth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrary, which he faith, that when the mystery is ended the bread is consumed: because he had a little before said: fith these things are known to men, forasmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honor as things: but as maruellous things, they may not. And to no other end tendeth that which our aduersaries doe too vnaudibly draw to themselves: that Christ did (after a certaine manner) bere himselfe in his owne hands, when he receeved the mythicall bread to the Disciples. For by enteterling this aduerbe of likenesse (after a certaine manner) he sufficiently declareth, that he was not truely nor really inclosed vnder the bread. And no maruell: fith in another place he plainly affirmeth that bodies, if places of places be taken from them, shall be no where: and because they shall be no where, they shall not be at all. It is a hungry caualiation, to say that in that place is not entreated.
entreated of the Supper, in which God uttereth speciall power: because the question was moved concerning the flesh of Christ, and the holy man of set purpose answering faith: Christ gave immortality to his flesh, but took not nature from it. After this forme it is not to be thought that he is eeh where spead abroad: for we must beware that we do not so affirme the Godhead of the man, that we take away the truth of the body. And it followeth not, that that which is in God must be eee where as GOD is. There is a reason by and by added: for one person is God and man, and both are one Christ: eeh where, by this that he is God: in heauen, by this that he is man. What a negligence had it beeue, not to except the mystery of the Supper being a thing so earnest and weighty, if there had beeue in it any thing against the doctrine which he entreated of. And yet if a man doe heedfully read that which followeth within a little after, he shall finde that under that generall doctrine, the Supper is also comprehended, that Christ the onely begotten Sonne of God and the same the Son of man, is eeh where whole present as God: that he is in the Temple of God (that is in the Church) God as it were there dwelling, & in some certaine place of heauen by reason of the measure of his true body. We see how, to the vnitng of Christ with the Church, hee doth not draw the body out of heauen: which suerely he would have done, if the body of Christ were not truly meete to vs vnfeble, it were enclosed under bread. In an other place defining how the faithful doe now possesse Christ. Thou hast him (faith he) by the signe of the Crosse, by the Sacrament of Baptisme, by the meare and drinke of the Altar. How rightly he reckoneth a superstitious v mileage among the signes of the presence of Christ, I do not now dispute: but he that compareth the presence of the flesth to the signe of the Crosse, sufficiently sheweth that he fineth not a two bodied Christ, that the same he may lerre hidden under the bread, which fineth visible in heauen. If this neede plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the same place, that according to the presence of majestie, we alwaye have Christ: that according to the presence of the flesth, it is rightly saide, Me ye shall not alwaye have. They anwre, that this is also added, that according to an vnfeble and invisibl grace, it is fulfilled which is said of him, I am with you, even unto the ending of the world. But that is nothing for their advantage: because this is at length restrained to his majestie, which is ever in comparison set against the body, and his flesth by expresse name is made different from his grace and power. As in another place the same comparison of contraries is read in him, that Christ by bodily presence left the Disciples, that by spiritual presence he may be still with them: where it is plaine that the substance of the flesh is distinguished from the power of the spirit, which conioyneth vs with Christ, though we be otherwise fare severed by distance of places. The same manner of speaking he oftentimes saith, as when he faith: He is to come againe to the quicke and the dead with bodily presence, according to the rule of Faith and found doctrine. For with spiritual presence he was alio to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the world untill the ending of the world. Therefore this speecch is directed to the beleuers whom he had already begonne to faue with bodily presence, and whom he was to faue with bodily absence: that he might with his Father faue them with spiritual presence. To take bodily for visible is but tribling: fishe he saith also the body in comparison against the diuine power: and adding (to faue with the Father) he clearely expresseth that he doth powre abroad his grace from heaven to vs by his Spirit.

29 And sith they put so much confidence in this lurking hole of invisibl presence, goe too lest vs see how well they hide themselves in it. Firste they shall not bring forth one syllable out of the Scriptures, whereby they may prove that Christ is invisibl: but they take that for confessed which no man that hath founde it will graunte them, that the body of Christ can not otherwise be gien in the Supper but being covered with the viler of bread. And this is the very point about which they they thrive with vs, so farre is it off from having the place of a principle. And when they so babble, they are compelled to make a double body of Christ: because after their opinion it is in itself visible in heaven, but invisible in the Supper after a special manner of dispensation. But how truly this agreeth, it is easy to judge both by other places of Scripture, and by the witness of Peter. Peter saith that Christ must be holden or contained in heaven, till he come againe. Therefore teach that he is everywhere, but without forme. They take exception & say that it is vain in dealing, to make the nature of a glorified body subject to the laws of common nature. But this answer draweth with it that doting error of Sermata, (which is worthy to be abhorred of all the godly) that the body was swallowed vp of the Godhead. I do not say that they thinke so. But if this be reckoned among the qualities of a glorified body, to fill all things after an invisible manner, it is evident that the bodily substance is destroyed, and that there is left no place of the Godhead and the nature of man. Againe if the body of Christ bee of so many fashions and divers, that it is feene in one place, and is invisible in another: where is the very nature of a bodie which consisteth of his measured proportions? and where is vntrie? Much more rightely doth Tertullian say, which affirmeth that the bodie of Christ was a true and natural body, because in the mysterie of the Supper the figure of it is for before vs for a pledge and assurance of the spiritual life. And verily Christ saide of his glorified body, see and feele, for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones. Loe by Christes owne mouth the truth of the flesh is proved, because it can be felt and seene: Take away these things, then it shall cease to be flesh. They shall flee to their deane of dispensation which they have framed to themselues. But it is our parte so to embrace that which Christ absolutely pronounceth, that that which he meanteth to affirm may be of force with vs without exception. He prooucth himselfe to be no Ghost, because he is visible in his flesh. Let that be taken away which he claimeth as proper to the nature of his body: must they not then be faine to come a newe definition of a body? Nowe whither focuer they turne themselves about, their fained dispensation hath no place in that place of Paul where he faith, that we looke for a Saviour from heaven which shal take our base body like to his glorious body. For we may not hope for a like fashioning in those qualities which they faine to Christ, that every one should have an invisible and unmeasurable body. Neither shal there be found any man so dull witted whom they may make to beleue to great an absurdity. Let their not therefore ascribe this gift to Christs glorified body, to be at once in many places, and to be contained in no place. Finally let them either openly deny the resurrection of the flesh, or let them grant that Christ being clothed with heavenly glory, did not put off his flesh, which is to make vs in our flesh fellowes and parteners of the same glory, when we shall have the resurrection common with him. For what doth the Scripture teach more plainly, than that as Christ did put on our true flesh when he was borne of the Virgin, & suffered in our true flesh when he languished for vs: so he receiued againe also the same true flesh in rising againe, and carried it vp to heaven? For this is to vs the hope of our resurrection and ascending into heaven, that Christ is risen againe and ascended: and (as Tertulliam faith) hee carried the earnest of our resurrection into the heavens with him. Now how weak and fraile should that hope be, vnlesse this our flesh flesh had beene raised vp with Christ and entered into the kingdom of heaven? But this is the proper truth of a bodie, to be contained in space, to consist of his measured proportions, to have his forme. Therefore away with this foolish deuice, which doth falsen both the minds of men and Christ to the bread. For to what purpose furreth the secret presence under bread, but that they which count to have Christ ioyned with them, may rest in that signe? But the Lord himselfe willed vs to withdraw not only our eyes but all our senses from the earth, forbidding himselfe to be touched of
of the women vntill he had gone vp to his Father. When hee seeth Marie with godly zeale of reverence to make haste to kisse his feete, there is no cause why he should disallowe and forbid this touching till hee haue bene taken vp into heauen, but because he will be sought no where else. Whereas they object that he was afterward sence of Stephen, the solution is easie. For neither was it therefore necessarie that Christ should change place, which could give to the eies of his fervent such sharpeneffe of sight as might percease through the heauen. The same also is to be finde of Paul. Whereas they object that Christ came out of the Sepulchre being shut: and entered in among the disciples, the doores being shut: that makestheuer a whit more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a fast pavement made a way to Christ walking vpnoon the lake: so it is no manuell, hit at his comming the hardnes of the Stone yeilded itselfe. Howbeit it is more proueable, that by his commandement the stone was remoued, and by and by after paffage given him returned into his place. And to enter the dores being shut, is not as much in effect as to percease through the whole substance, but by divine power to open an entry for himselfe,that he suddenly floode among the disciples, verily after a marvellous maner, when the doores were fast locked. That which they allege out of Luke, that Christ suddenly vanished away from the eies of the disciples with whom he went to Emmaus, proficeth them nothing, and makest for vs. For, that he might take away the fight of himselfe from them, he was not made invisible, but onely went out of sight. As when he went in journey together with them, (as the same Luke witnessteth) he did not put on a newe face, that he might not be known, but held their eies. But these fellowes do not only transforme Christ, that he may be conquerant in earth, but in dunders places make him duers and unlike himselfe. Finally, in so trifling they do not by one word in deed, but by a circumstance, make of the flesh of Christ a spirit: and not contented therewith, they put upon it altogether contrarie qualities. Whereupon of necessitie followeth that it is double.

30 Now although we grant them that which they prate of the invisibile presence, the unmeasurables shall not be yet proued, without which they shall in vaine attempt to enclofe Christ vnder bread. Unlesse the bodie of Christ may bee euerie where at once,without any compasse of place, it shall not be likely that heelyeth hidden vnder bread in the supper. By which necessitie they brought in the monstrous being euerie where. But it is shewed by strong and plaine witnesse of Scripture, that it was limited aboue by the meaure of the body of a man: and then that by his ascending he hath made it plaine that he is not in al places, but that when he passeth into one place,he leaueth the other that he was in before. Neither is the promis which they allege, to be drawn to the bodie, I am with you euery where in the world. Forst the continual consouling cannot, vnlesse Christ dwell in vs corporally without the vse of the supper. Therefore there is no just cause why they should so sharply brawl about the words of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclofe Christ vnder bread. Againe the text it selfe proueth, that Christ spake nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples invisicable helpe, whereby he may defend & sustaine them against all the assaults of Satan and the world. For when he enmoyned them a hard charge: least they should doubt to take it in hand, or should fearfully execute it, he strengtheneth them with assurance of his presence: as he had said, that his face shall not fail them, which shall be impossible to be overcome. Unlesse they lifted to confound all things, ought they not to have made distillation of the manner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vter their ignorance, than to yeeld never so little of their error. I speake not of the Papitites: whose doctrine is more tolerable,or at the least more shamefull. But contentiousnes to carrieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vntied in Christ, wherefoever the Godhead of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which cannot.
Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes

be severed from his Godhead. As though that same uniting have compounded of those two natures I wrote not what meane thing which was neither God nor man. So indeede did Eutiches and after him Serenatus. But it is plainly gathered out of the Scripture, that the only one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath full her owne proprie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfull seen to deny: it is maruell that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference between the natures, enforcing the unitie of person, he made of God man, and of man God. What madnesse therefore is it rather to mingle heaven and earth together, than not to draw the body of Christ out of the heavenly sanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themselves these testimonies, None is gone vp to heaven but he that is come downe the Sonne of man which is in heaven. Againe, The Sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, he shall declare them: it is a point of like senselesse dulnesse, to dispute the communicating of properties which was in olde time not without cause invented of the holy Fathers. Truely, when the Lord of glory is said to be crucified, Paul doth not meane that he suffered any thing in his Godhead: but because the same Christ which being an abiet and despised in the flesh did suffer, was both God and Lord of glory. After this manner also the Sonne of man was in heaven: because the selfe same Christ, which according to the flesh did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heaven. In which sort he is saide to have descended from the saide place according to his Godhead: not that the Godhead did forsake heaven, to hide itselfe in the prison of the body: but because, although it filled all things, yet in the very manhood of Christ it dwelled corporally, that is to say naturally and after a certaine vn-speakable maner. It is a common definition in schooles, which I am not ashamed to rehearse: that although whole Christ be euerie where, yet not the whole that is in him is euerie where. And I would to God the schoolemen themselves had well wayed the path of this saying: for so should the vnsaucerious invention of the fleshly presence of Christ haue bin met withall. Therefore our mediator, fith he is whole euerie where, is alway at hand with his, and in the supper after a special maner given himself content: but yet so, that whole he is present, not the whole that he is: because, as it is said, in his flesh he is contained in heaven till he appeare to judgement.

31 But they are far deceived, which conceive no presence of the flesh of Christ in the supper, vnlesse it be made present in bread. For so they leave nothing to the secret working of the Spirit, which vnteth Christ himselfe vnto vs. They thinke not Christ present, vnlesse he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vp to him, we should not aswell enjoy his presence. Therefore the question is onely of the manner: because they place Christ in the bread, but we thinke it not lawfull for vs to plucke him out of heaven. Let the readers judge whether is the richter. Onely let this caution be driven away, that Christ is taken away from his supper, vnlesse hee be hidden under the corder of bread. For fith this mysticke is heavenly, it is no neede to draw Christ into the earth, that he may be toyed on to vs.

32 Now if any man do ask me of the manner, I will not be ashamed to confesse, that it is a higher secret than that it can be either comprehended with my wit, or vnttered with my words: and, to speake it more plainly, I rather feele it than I can understand it. Therefore I do herein without controversie embrace the truth of God, in which I may safely rest. He pronounceth that his flesh is the meate of my soule, and his blood is the drinke. With such foode I offer my soule to him to be fedde. In his holy Supper he commandeth me under the signes of breade and wine to take, eat, and drinke his body and blood. I nothing doubt that both he doth truly deliver them, and I do receive them. Onely I refuse the absurdities, which appear to be either vnworthie of the heavenly majestie of Christ, or disagreeing from the truth of his nature of manhood: for as much as they must also fight with the word of God, which which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glory of the heavenly kingdom that it lifeth him vp above all estate of the world, and no leffe diligently setteth forth in his nature of man, those things that are properly belonging to his true mähood.
Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not consonant to reason, because as the whole kingdome of Christ is spiritual, so whatsoever he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this world. Or, that I may vfe the wordes of August-fine, this mysterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God : in earth, but from heaven. Such, I say, is the presence of the body, as the nature of the sacrament requireth:
which we lay here to excell with so great force, and great effectualnes, that it not onely bringeth to our minde vntroubled trust of eternal life, but also affureth vs of the immortalitie of our flesh. For it is now quickned of his immortal flesh, & after a certaine maner communicaeth of his immortalitie. They which are caried about this with their excessive speeches, doe nothing but with such entanglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would have him here a while to consider with me, that now we speake of a sacrament, all the parts whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do not leffe deinitely and plentifullly feed faith with this partaking of the body which we have declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heaven. In the meantime I plainly confesse, that I refuse that mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the powning out of such they teach: because it suuceth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his flesh breath life into our soules, yet doth power into vs his owne life, although the very flesh of Christ doth not enter into vs. Moreover it is no doubt that the proportion of faith, whereby Paul willeth vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, both in this behalf all very well agree with mee. As for them that speake against so evident a truth, let them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselves. Hee that doth not confesse that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or marke it not, do spoile him of his flesh.

33 Of communicating is to bee likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, vnselie they douerue the flesh of Christ vnnder breade. But there is no small wrong done to the holy Ghost, vnselie we beleue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that we communicate with the flesh and blood of Christ.
Yea if the force of the mysterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was known to the old Church from fower hundred yeeres ago, were weighed according to the worthines of it, there was enough and more whereupon we might be satisfied: the gate had been shut against many foule errors, out of which have been kindled many horrible dissensions wherewith both in old time and in our age the Church hath beene miserable vexed, while curious men doe enforce an excelllent manner of presence which the scripture never sheweth. And they turned about a thing fondly and rashly conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnnder bread were (as the proverbe is) the prove and pouer of godlines. It principally behooved to knowe, howe the body of Christ, as it was once delouted for vs, is made ours: how we are made partakers of his blood that was shedde: because this is to polishe the whole Christ crucified, that we may enjoy all his good things. Now these things, in which was so great importance, being omitted ye be neglected and in a maner buried, this only crabbed question pleaceth them, how the body of Christ lieth hid vnnder bread or vnnder the fourme of bread. They falsely spread abroad that whatsoever we teach concerning spiritual eating, is contrary to the true and real eating, as they call it: because we have respect to nothing but to the manner, which among them is carnall, while they enclose Christ in bread: but to vs it is spiritual, because the secret power of the spirite is the bond of our conioynge with Christ. No truer is that other objection, that we touch onely the fruit or effect which the faithful take of the eating of the flesh of Christ. For we have saide before, that Christ himselfe is the substance of the Supper: and that thereupon
Cap. 17.  Of the outward meanes

upon followeth the effect, that by the sacrifice of his death we are cleansed from sins, by his bloud we are washed, by his resurrection we are raised vp into hope of the heavenly life. But the foolish imagination, whereof Lombarde was the author, hath perverted their minds, while they thinke that the eating of the flesh of Christ is the sacrament. For this faith be: The sacrament and not the thing are the forms of bread and wine: the sacrament and the thing, are the flesh and bloud of Christ: the thing and not the sacrament, is the mystical flesh. Againe within a little after. The thing signified and contained, is the proper flesh of Christ: the thing signified and not contained, is his mystical body. Whereas he maketh difference betwene the flesh of Christ, and the effectual power of nourishing, wherewith it is ended, I agree: but whereas he faineth it to be a sacrament, yea and contained under bread, it is an error not to be suffered. Hereupon hath grown the false exposition of sacramental eating, because they haue thought that wicked men alfo and unill doers doe eat the flesh of Christ, how much soever they be strangers from him. But the flesh of Christ, is felle in the mysterie of the Supper is no felle a spiritual thing than eternal salvation. Whereupon we gather, that whosoever be void of the spirit of Christ, can no more eate the flesh of Christ, than they can drinke wine wherewith is joyned no taste. Truely Christ is too hainously torne in funder, when that dead body and which hath no lively strength, is given foorth in common to vnbelieuers: and his express words are directly against it. Whosoever eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, abideinth me, and I in him. They answer that in that place is not entreated of the sacramental eating; which I grant, so that they will not nowe and then stumble against the same stone, saying that the flesh it felle is eaten without fuite. But I would know of them, how long they holde it when they have eaten it. Heere, in my judgement, they shall have no way to get out. But they object, that nothing can be withdrawn or falle of the promises of God by the unthankfulness of men. I grant in deed, and I say that the force of the mysterie remaineth whole, howsoever wicked men do, as much as in them lieth, endeavour to make it void. Yet it is one thing to be offered, and another thing to be receiued. Christ reacheth this spiritual meate and offereth this spiritual drinke to all men, some do greedily eate of it, some doe lothly refuse it: shall these men refusing make the meate and the drinke to loose their nature? They will say that their opinion is holpen by this similitude, namely, that the flesh of Christ, though it be vnfaulior, is nevertheless his flesh. But I deny that it can be eaten without the taste of faith: or (if we list rather to speake as Augustine doth) I say that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the vessel of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacrament, yea the truth and effectualnesse thereof remaineth vnminished, although the wicked depart emptie from the outward partaking of it. If they againe object that this word, this is my boide, is diminished, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing else, we haue a solution ready, that God will not be acknowlede true in the receiuing it felle, but in the steadfaulnesse of his owne goodnesse, when he is readie to giue, yea liberally offereth to the vnworthie that which they refuse. And this is the fulnese of the Sacrament, which the whole world cannot breake, that the flesh and bloud of Christ is no felle giuen to the vnworthie than to the chosen faithfull ones of God: but therewithall it is true, that as water lighting upon a hard stone, falleth away, because there is no entrie open into the stone: so the wicked do with their hardnes strive backe the grace of God that it cannot pierce into them. Moreover, that Christ shoulde be receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reason, than seede to budde in the fire. Whereas they aske, howe Christ is come to damnation to some, vnlesse they receiue him vnworthily, it is a very cold question: forasmuch as we no where read, that men do procure death to themselves by vnworthily receiuing Christ, but rather by refusing him. Neither doth Christ's parable helpe them, where he faith that seede groweth
The Sacrament not to be mistrest to scandalous growth vp among thornes, and afterwards being choked is marr'd: because hee there entreateth, of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they do not thinke to bee necessarie to the eating of Christes flesh and drinking of his bloud, that in this behalfe doe make Judas equally fellow with Peter. But rather by the same parable their errour is confuted, where Christ faith that some feedeth haleth in the high way, othersome upon stones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnableeuers their owne hardnesse is a let that Christ attaagheth not to them. Whosoever desireth to have our salvation holpen by this mysterie, shall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithful being led to the very fountain, should drawe life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignitie of it is honourably enongh set out, when we keepe in minde that it is a helpe whereby we be graffed into the body of Christ, or being graffed doe more and more growe together, till he doe fully make himselfe one with vs in the heauenly life. They object that Paul ought not to have made them guilty of the body and bloud of Christ, vnlesse they were partakers of them. But I answereth that they are not therefore condemned because they have eaten them, but onely because they haue prophane the mysterie, in treading vnder fecete the pledge of the holy continyng with God, which they ought reuerently to recee.

34. Now because Augustine among the olde writers chiefly hath affirmed that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made voide by the infideline or naughtinesse of men: it shall be profitable to proue clearly by his owne words, how vniudly and peruerfely they doe drawe that to this present cause, which cast the body of Christ to dogs to eate. The sacramentall eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receive the body and bloud of Christ without the power of the Spireite, or any effect of grace. Augustine contra riving wisely those words, Hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, shall not die for ever: faith: Namely the power of the sacrament, not onely the visible sacrament: and verily within, nor without: he that eateth it with hart, not he that præfeth it with tooth. Whereupon at length hee concludes that the sacrament of this thing, that is to say, of the vsing of the body and bloud of Christ, is set before men in the upper of the Lord, to some vnto life, to some vnto destruccion: but the thing it self whereof it is a Sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruccion, wholesoeuer be partakers of it. That none should here caulis, that the thing is called not the body, but the grace of the Spireite which may be euened from the bodie, the contrarie comparision betweene these two wordes of addition Visible and Invisible driueth away all these misfits: for vnder the firt of them cannot be comprehended the body of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the vnableeuers doe communicate onely of the visible signe. And that all doubting may be better taken away, after that he had said that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eate Manna, pleased God. Why so? because the spiruitalle meate they spiruitally understoold, spiruitally hungered, spiruitally tasted, that they might be spiruitally filled. For we also at this day have receu'd spiruitalle meate: but the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the Sacrament is an other. A little after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whom Christ abideth not, without doubt neither eateth spiruitally his flesh, nor drinketh his bloud, though carnally and visiblie he praëfeth with teeth the signe of the body and bloud. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in comparision as contrarie to spiruitall eating. Whereby that errore is confuted, that the body of Christ immible is in deed eaten sacramentally, though not spiruitally. We heare also that nothing is Hom.in Ioh 59, granted to prophane & vnceleene men be side the visible receuung of the signe. Hereupon commeth his famous saying, that the other discipes did eate the bread the Lorde: but Judas did eate the bread of the Lorde: wherefore plainly exclueth the vnableeuers.
Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes

vnbeleeuers from the partaking of the body & bloud. Neither tendeth it to any other end which he faith in another place: What manuelle left then, if to Indas was gien the bread of Chrift, by which he might be made bond to the devil: when thou feest on the contrarie fide that to Paul was gien the angell of the devil, by whom he might be made perfect in Chrift, he faith verily in another place, that the bread of the Supper was the body of Chrift to them to whom Paul faid, He that eateth vnwoorthily, eateth and drinketh judgement to himselfe: and that they have not therefor nothing, because they have received naughtily. But in what fete he declareth more fully in another place. For taking in hand purposely to define how the wicked and euill doers, which professe the Christian faith with mouth but with deeds doe deny it, doe eate the body of Chrift, (and that againft the opinion of some which thought that they did not eate in facrament onely but in very deed.) But neither (faith he) ought it to be faide that they eate the body of Chrift, because they are not to be reckoned among the members of Chrift. For to speake nothing of the ref: they cannot together be the members of Chrift, and the members of a harlot. Finally where himselfe faith, He that eateh my flefh, and drinketh my bloud, abide in me, and I in him, he sheweth that it is not facramentally but in very deed to eate the body of Chrift. For this is to abide in Chrift, that Chrift may abide in him. For he faid this, as though he had faid, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not faie or think that he doth eate my body, or drinke my bloud. Let the readers weigh the things fett as contraries in the comparison to eate, facramentally, and in very deed: and there that remaine no doubt. He confirme the fame, not leffe plainly in these words: Prepare not your lawes, but your hart. Hereupon is this Supper commended. Loe we beleue in Chrift, when we receive by faith: in receiuing we know what to thinke. We receive a little and are fatti'd in hart. Therefore not that which is feene, but that which is beleucred, doth feeode. Here also that which the wicked receive, he refraine eth to the visible figne: and teacheth that Chrift is none otherwife receiued than by faith. So alfo in another place, pronouncing expressly that the good and the euill doe communicate together in the fignes, he exclueth the euill from the true eateing of the fletcher of Chrift. For if they receiued the thing it felfe, he would not vnterly have left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Alfo in another place, entreateing of the eateing and the fruite thereof, he concludeth thus: Then shall the body and bloud of Chrift be life to euery man, if that which in the facrament is visibly receiued, be in the truth it felfe spiritually eateh, spiritually drunke. Therefore who to make vnbeleeuers partakers of the fletcher and bloud of Chrift, that they may agree with Augustine, let them fhow vs the visible body of Chrift: for as much as, by his judgement, the whole truth is spiritual. And it is certainly gathered out of his words, that the facramental eateing, when vnbeleeueclofeth vp the entrie to truth, is as much in effect as visible or outward eateing. If the body of Chrift might be eateh truly and yet not spiritually, what should that meane which he faith in an other place? Yee fiall not eate this body which ye see, and drink the bloud which they fhall shed that shal crucifie me. I haue commended a certaine facrament unto you, being spiritually underftandeth it shall quicke me. Verily he would not denote but that the fame body which Chrift offered for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did not the manner of eateing: namely that being receiued into heavenly glorie, by the secret power of the Spirite, it breatheth life into vs. I praunt in deed that there is oftentimes founde in him this manner of speaking, that the body of Chrift is eateh of the vnbeleeuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding,In Sacra ment. And in another place he describeth spiritual eateing in which our bitings confume not grace. And least mine aduerfaries should faie, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would know of them how they can vnwinde themselves from one faying of his, where he faith that Sacraments doe worke in the onely elect that which which they figure. Truly they dare not deny but that the bread in the supper figureth the body of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the reproue are debarred from the partaking of it. That Cyril also thought none other wise, these words do declare. As 6. John. ca. 17, if a man upon molten waxe do powre other wax, he wholly tempereth the one wax with the other: so it is necessarie if any man receive the flesh & blood of the Lord that he be joined with him that Christ may be found in him and he in Christ. By these words I think it is evident, that they are bereaved of the true and real eating, that do but sacramentally eat the body of Christ, which cannot be seperated from his power: and that therefore faileth not the faith of the promises of God, which ceaseth not to rain from heaven, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

35 This knowledge shall also easily draw vs away from the carnall worshipping, which some have with peruerse rashnesse erected in the sacrament: because they made account with themselves in this manner: If it be the body, then both the soule and the Godhead are together with the body, which now cannot be seperated: therefore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompanying which they pretend be denied them, what will they do? For how much fooner they cry out upon an absurdity, if the body be seperated from the soule & the Godhead, yet what sound witted and sober man can perfwade himselfe that the body of Christ is Christ: They thinke themselves in deed gaily to proue it with their logicall arguments. But 6th Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and blood, but describeth not the manner of presence: how will they of a doubtfull thing gather certainly that which they would? What then? If their consciences chance to be exercized with any more grieuous feeling, shall not they by and by with their logicall arguments be diffolued and melt? namely when they shall fee themselves destitute of the certaine worde of God, vpon which alone our soules do stand fast, when they are called to account, and without which they faint at every first moment: when they shall call to minde that the doctrine and examples of the Apoeltes are against them, and that themselves alone are to themselves the authors of it. To such motions shal be added other not small prickings. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worship God in this forme, where nothing was prescribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worship of God, ought they with so great lightnes to have attempted that of which there is no where read any one word? But if they had, with such humblenesse as they ought, holden all their thoughts under the word of God, they would truely have harkened to that which he said, Take, eat, drinke, and would have obeyed this commandement, wherein he bid the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worshipped. But they which, as it is commanded of God, doe receive it without worshipping, are assured that they do not swaue from Gods commandement: than which allurednes there is nothing better when we take any worke in hand. They have the example of the Apoelltes, whom we read not to have fallen downe flat and worshipping it, but even as they were sitting to have receiued it and eaten it. They have the vie of the Apostolike Church, wherein Luke reporteth that the faithfull did communicate not in worshipping but in breaking of bread. They have the Apoeltes doctrine, wherewith Paul instructed the Church of the Corinthians, professing that he had receiued of the Lord that which he delivered.

36 And these things very tend to this ende, that the godly reader should wee how perillous it is in sic hie matters to wander from the simple worde of God to the dreams of our owne braine. But these things that are aboue said, ought to deliuere vs from all doubt in this behalfe. For that godly soules may therein rightly take hold of Christ, they must needs be lifted vp to heaven. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to help the mind of man which other wise is weake, that it may rise vpward to reach the height of spiritual mysteries: then they which are helden downe in the outward signe do stray from the right way of seeking Christ. What then? Shall we deny that it is a superstitious worshipping, when men do throw themselves down before bread, to worship Christ therein? Doubtlesse the Nicene Synode meant to meete with this mischief, when it forbade vs to be humbly intentiune to the signes set before vs. And for none other cause was it in olde time ordained, that before the confection the people should with a loud voice be put in minde to have their hearts lifted vpwarde. The Scripture it selfe also beleeve that it diligently declareth unto vs the ascension of Christ, whereby he conuayed away the presence of his body from our sight and conversation: to make away from vs all carnall thinking of him, so oft as it maketh mention of him, commandeth vs to be in minde raised vpwarde, and to seeke him in heaven setting at the right hand of the father. According to this rule he was rather to bee spiritually worshipped in heavenly glory, than this perillous a kinde of worshipping to bee deuised, full of carnall and grosse opinion of God. Wherefore they that haue intented the worshipping of the Sacrament, haue not onely dreamed it of themselves beside the Scripture, in which no mention of it can be shewed (which yet should not have been overpasst if it had been acceptable to God:) But also all the Scripture crying out against it, they have framed to themselues a God after the will of their owne lust, leaving the liuing God. For what is Idolatrie, if this be not, to worship the gifts instead of the giver himselfe? Wherein they have doubly offended: For both the honor taken from God was conveyed to a creature: and the himselfe also dishonored in the deifying and prophanning of his benefit, when of his holy Sacrament is made a cursed Idole. But vs contrariwise, leaft we fall into the same pit, thoroughly settle our cares, eyes, hearts, minds, and toongs in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the schoole of the holy Ghost, the best schoolematter, in which such profit is attaine, that nothing neede more to be gotten from any where else, but we willingly ought to be ignorant of whatsoeuer is not taught in it.

37 But now (as superfition, when it hath once past the right bounds, maketh no ende of sinning,) they fell a grea way further. For they have deuised Ceremonies altogether strange from the institution of the Supper, to this end only that they might give diuine honors to the signe. We yeeld (say they) this worship to Christ. First, if this were done in the Supper, I would say that that worshipping only is lawfull, which resteth not in the signe, but is directed to Christ sitting in heaven. But now by what pretence doe they boast that they worship Christ in that bread: when they have no promise thereof? They consecrate an hoff, as they call it, which they may cary about in pompe, which they may shew forth in a common gazing to be looked upon, worshipped, and called vpon. I ask by what power they thinke it to bee righteously consecrate. Verily they will bring forth those words, This is my body. But I will object to the contrarie, that it was therewith all faide, Take and eate. Neither will I do that of nothing. For when a promise is knit to a commandement, I say that the promise is so contained under the commandement, that being seuered it is made no promise at all. This shall be made plaine by a like example. God gaue a commandement, when he said, Call vpon me: He added a promise, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter and Paul, doe glose vpon this promise, will not all men cry out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray, do they which leaving the commandement concerning eating, do catch hold of a named promise, this is my body, to abuse it to strange Ceremonies from the institution of Christ? Let vs therefore remember that this promise is giuen to them which keepe the commandement ioyned with it: but that they be defirte of all the word, which remoue the Sacrament to any other way. We haue heretofore entreated how the mysterie of the holy Supper securth our Faith before God. But for as much as the Lord doth here not onely bring into our remembrance so great largenes of his bountie, as we haue before shewed, but doth as it were from hand to hand bring it forth, & theretoh vs to acknowledge it: he doth therewithal warne vs that we be not vndeserving to so plentifull liberality.
liberality: but rather that we would publish it with such praises as it is meete, and advance it with thanksgiving. Therefore when he delivered the institution of the sacrament to himselfe to the Apostles, he taught them that they should do it in remembrance of him. Which Paul expoundeth, to declare the Lords death. That is, publishly and altogether with one mouth openly to confess, that all our affiance of life and salvation is repofed in the death of the Lord: that we may glorifie him with our confession, and may by our example exhorte other to give glory to him. Here again it appeared wherunto the mark of this sacrament is directed, namely to exercise vs in the remembrance of the death of Christ. For, this that we are commanded to declare the Lords death till he come to judge, is nothing else but that we should publish that with confession of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the sacrament, that is, the death Christ is our life. This is the second use of the sacrament, which pertaineth to outward confession.

38 Thirdly the Lord also willed it to be to vs in stead of an exhortation, than which none other can more vehemently and enflame vs both to puresnes and holinesse of life, and also to charitie, peace and agreement. For the Lord doth therein do communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Now fith he hath but one body, whereof he maketh vs all partakers, it is necessarie that all we also be by such partaking made one body. Which vitiate the bread which is delivered in the sacrament, represents that which as it is made of many graines in such sort mingled together that one cannot be discerned from another, after the same manner we also ought to be conioyned and knit together with so great agreement of minds, that no disagreement or division come between vs. This I had rather to be expressed with Pauls words. The cup of blessing (faih he) which we blesse is the communicating of the blood of Christ: and the bread of blessing which we breake, is the partaking of the body of Christ. Therefore we all are one body that partake of one bread. We shall have verie well profited in the sacrament, if this thought so shall be imprinted and ingrauen in our minds, that none of the brethren can be hurt, despised, refused, abused, or any wife be offended of vs, but that therewithall we do in doing hurt, despise, and abuse Christ with our injurious dealings: that we cannot disagree with our brethren but that we must therewithal disagree with Christ: that Christ cannot be loved of vs, but that hee must bee loved in our brethren: that what care we have of our owne body, such also wee ought to have of our brethren which are members of our body: as no part of our bodie is touched with any feeling of griefe, which is not spread abroad into all the other partes, to we must not suffer our brother to be grieved with any euill whereof we should not also be touched with compassion. Therefore Augustine not without cause do oft calleth the sacrement that bond of charity. For what sharper spur could be put to vs, to drive vp mutual charity among vs, than when Christ giving himselfe to vs, doth not onely allure vs with his owne example that we should mutually dedicate and delerne our selues one to another: but in so much as he maketh himselfe common to all, he maketh all vs also one in himselfe?

39 But hereby is that verie well confirmed which I have said in another place, that the true ministration of the sacrament standeth not without the word. For whatsoever proffite commeth to vs of the Supper, requireth the wordes: whether we be to be confirmed in faith, or to be exercised in confession, or to be shewed vp to ducie: prayer is needfull. Therefore nothing can be more disorderly done in the supper, than if it be turned to a dumbe action: it hath beene done under the tyranny of the Pope. For they would have the whole force of confessionation to hang vpon the intent of the Priest, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whom it most of all behooved that the mysterie should be declared. But thereupon hath growen this error, that they marked not that those promises where with the confessionation is made, are directed not to the elements themselves, but to them that receive them. But Christ speaketh not to the bread, that it may be made his body, but commandeth his disciples to eat, and promiseth to them the communicating of his body and blood. And none other order doth Paul teach than that together with the bread and the cup, the promises should be offered to the faithfull. Thus it is truly, we ought not to imagine any magical inchantment, that it be sufficient to have mumbled up the words, as though the elements did heare them: but let us understand that those words are a lively preaching which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly Pearce into their minds, which may be imprinted and settled in their hearts, which may shew forth effectualness in the fulfilling of that which it promiseth: by these reasons it clearly appeareth that the laying vp of the sacrament, which many do earnestly require, that it may be extraordinarily distributed to the sick, is unprofitable: for either they shall receive it without rehearsing of the institution of Christ, or the minister shall together with the signe joyn the true declaration of the mystery. In silence is abuse and fault. If the promises be rehearsed, and the mystery declared, that they which shall receive it may receive it with fruit, there is no cause why we should doubt that this is the true consecration. To what end then will that other consecration come, the force whereof commeth not so far as to the sick men? But they that do so, haue the example of the old Church. I grant: but in so great a matter, and in which wee are not without great daunger nothing is faster than to follow the truth & selfe.

40 Now as we see that this holy bread of the Supper of the Lorde is spiritual meat, no leffe sweete and delicate than heathfull to the godly worshippers of God, by the table whereof they feele that Christ is their life, whom it may feth vp to thanksgiving, to whom it is an exhortation to mutual charity among themselves: so on the other side it is turned into a most noysome poison to all these whose faith it doth not nourish and conforme, and whom it doth not stir vp to confession of praise & to charity. For as bodily meate, when it findeth a hollowe person with euill humors, being it selle also thereby made euill and corrupted doeth rather hurt than nourish: so this spiritual meate, if it light upon a soule defiled with malice and naughtinesse, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meate it selle, but because to defiled and vnbelieuing men nothing is cleane, though otherwise it be smoother sanctified by the blessing of the Lorde. For (as Paul saith) they that eat and drinke unworthy are guilty of the body and blood of the Lorde, and doe eat and drinke judgement to themselves, not discerning the bodie of the Lord. For such kinde of men as without any sparkle of Faith, without any zeal of charity, do thrust themselves forth like swine to take the supper of the Lord, do not discern the body of the Lord. For in so much as they doe not beleue that that body is their life, they doe as much as in them lieth dishonour it, spoiling it of all the dignitie thereof, and finally in so receiuing it they prophanes and defile it. But in so much as being estranged and disagreeing from their brethren, they dare mingle the holy signe of the body of Christ with their disagreements, it is no thanke to them that the body of Christ is not rent in sunder, and limmemeate borne in pieces. And so not unworthy they are guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, which they do with vngodlinesse full of faulted so slowly defile. Therefore by this unworthy eating, they take to themselves damnation. For whereas they haue no faith repose in Christ, yet receiuing the sacrament they profess that there is salvation for them no where else than in him, and do foreswear all other affiance. Wherefore they themselues are accusers to themselues, they themselues pronounce witness against themselues, and they themselues seale their owne damnation. Againe when they beeing with hatred and euill will decyded and drawn in sinder from their brethren, that is from the members of Christ, have no part in Christ: yet they do doe testify that this is the onely saluation to communicate with Christ, and to be made one with him. For this cause Paul commandeth, that a man proove himselfe, before that he eat of this bread or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expound it) he meant that every man should descende into himselfe, and wepe with himselfe, whether he doe with inward affiance of hart rest upon the saluation which Christ hath purchas'd; whether he acknowledge it with confession of mouth: then whether he doe with defirous endeav'or of innocencie and holinessse aspire to the following of Christ: whether after his example he be ready to gue himselfe to his brethren, and to communicate himselfe to them with whom he hath Christ common to him: whether, as hee himselfe is accompt of Christ, he doe likewise on his behalf take all his brethren for members of his owne body: whether he court to cherish, defend and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that these duties both of Faith and Charitie can now be perfect in vs: but because we ought to endeavoure this, and with all our desires to long toward it, that we may daily more and more encrease our Faith begun.

41 Commonly when they goe about to prepare men to such woorthines of eatings, they haue in cruel wise tormented and vexed poore consciences: and yet they brought neuer a white of all those things that might suffice to the purpose. They said that those did care woorthily which were in state of grace. To be in state of grace they expounded to be pure and cleansed from all sinne. By which doctrine all the men that euer haue at any time beeene or now be in earth, were debarred from the vshe of this Sacrament. For if we goe about this, to fetch our worthines from our felues, we are utterly undone: onely despair and damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeavoure with our whole strengthes, we shall nothing more preuaile, but that then at last we shall be most vnwoorthily, when we have most of all travelled about seeking of worthines. To fulfe this fore, they have deicied a way to attaine worthines: that, as much as in vs lieth, making examination, and requiring of our felues accownt of all our doings, we should with contrition, confession, and satisfaction cleanse our vnwoorthines, which way of cleansing, what manner of thing it is, we haue already thoued there where was more convenient place to speake of it. So much as ferenith for our present purpose, I say that these be two hungrie and vanishing comfortes, to dismaid and discouraged consciences, and such as are stricken with horror of their sinne. For if the Lord by speciall forbidding admitteth none to the partaking of the Supper but the righteous and innocent: there needeth no small heed that may make a man assur'd of his owne righteousnesse which he hearteth to be required of God. But whereby is this assurednes confirmed unto vs, that they are discharged afore God, which have done so much as in them lay? But although it were so, yet when shall it be that a man may be bold to assure himselfe that he hath done as much as in himself? So when there is made no certaine assurance of our worthines, the entrie shall alway remaine that by that horrible forbidding, whereby is pronounced that they eate and drinke judgement to themselues, which eate and drinke vnwoorthily.

42 Now it is easie to judge what manner of doctrine this is which reigneth in the Papacie, and from what Author it hath proceeded, which with the outrageous rigor thereof, bereaueth and spoyleth, miserable sinners and such as be torment'd with feare and sorrow, of the comfort of this Sacrament in which yet all the sweete delicates of the Gospel were set before the. Surely the devil could by no readier way destroy men, than by so making them sensefull, that they could not perceiue the tatt & favour of such food, wherewith it was the will of the most good heavenly Father to feede them. Least therefore we runne into such headlong downfall, let vs remember that this holy banket is medicine to the sick, comfort to sinners, liberal gift to the poore: which bring no profite to the healthie, righteous, and rich, if any such could be found. For whereas in it Christ is giuen vs for meate: we understand that... that without him we pine, starve, and faint, like as famine destroyeth the lively strength of the body. Againe whereas he is given vs for life: we understand that without him we are in ourselves utterly dead. Wherefore this is the worthinesse both the onely and best that we can bring to God, if we offer to him our owne voluntes and (as I may so call it) unworthines, that of his mercie he may make vs worthy of him: if we despaine in our selues, that we may be comforted in him: if we humble our selues, that we may be raised vp of him: if we accuse our selues, that we may be justified of him: moreover if we aspire to that vnitie which he commendeth vs in his supper: and as he maketh vs all one in himselfe, so if we will to vs all together one soule, one hart, one tongue. If we have these things throughly well weighed and confidered, such thoughts although they shake vs, yet shall never overthrow vs. As how should we being needy and naked of all good things, we defiled with filthinesse of sins, we haue dead, eate the body of the Lord worthily? We will rather thinke that we being poore come to the liberall gier, we sticke to the phisitian, we finnen to the author of righteousnes, finally we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthinesse which is commanded of God, consisteth chiefly of Faith, which recepeth all things in Christ and nothing in vs: and next of charitie, and the selfsame charitie which it is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that he may increase it to better, forasmuch as it cannot be giuen perfect. Som other agreeing with vs in this, that the worthinesse itselfe consisteth in Faith and Charitie; yet in the measure of worthinesse have gone farre out of the way, requiring a perfection of Faith, whereunto nothing may be added, and a charitie egall with that which Christ hath shewed toward vs. But hereby they doe none otherwise than those other before, drive all men away from comming to this holy Supper. For if their sentence should take place, no man should receive but unworthy, for as much as all without exception should be holden guylte and conuicted of their vnperfectnes. And truely it were a point of too much amazed dulnes, I will not lay foolishnes, to require such perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament void and superfluous: which was not ordaine for the perfect, but for the weak and feeble to awake, to stir vp, to pricke forward and exercise the affections of Faith and Charitie, and to correct thedefault of either of them.

But so much as concerneth the outward forme of doinge, whether faithful receive it in their hand or no, whether they deliberate it, or every one cate that which is giuen him: whether they put againe the cup in the hand of the Deacon, or deliuere it to the next: whether the bread be leauened, or unleauened: whether the wine be red or white: it maketh no matter. These things be indifferent and left in the libertie of the Church. Howbeit it is certaine, that the vise of the olde Church was, that every one should take it into his hand. And Christ said, Diuide it among you. The histories report that it was leauened and common bread before the time of Alexander Bishop of Rome, which salt deliuere in unleauened bread: But for what reason I see not, unleuente it were with a new sight to draw the eyes of the common people to wondering at it, rather than to instruct their minde with good religion. I adoe all them that are touched with any thowght but light scale of godliness, to tell whether they doe not evidently see, both how much more brightely the glory of GOD shine therein, and how much more aboundant sweetenesse of spirituall comfort commeth to the faithfull, than in these cold and player-like tisles, which bring none other vises but to deceive the sens of the amazed people. This they call the holding of the people in religion, when being made foolish & senselesse with superstitious drawn whither they list. If any man will defende such inventions by antiquitie, I may also I am not ignorant how ancients is the vis of chrisme, and blowing in Baptisme: Howwete the age of the Apostles the Supper of the Lord was institute with rustineesse: but this verily is the wuwardes of mans boldnesse, which can noe with holde it selfe but that it must alwaies play and be wanton in the mysteries of God.
God. But let vs remember that God doth so highly esteme the obedience of his word, that he will vse in it to judge both his angels and the whole world. Now, bidding farewell to so great a heape of ceremonies: it might thus have bin most compli dely ministr’d, if it were of, and at least every weeke set before the Church, but that first they should begin with publicke prayers: then a sermon should be made; then the minis ter haueing bread and wine fet vpon the boord, should rehearse the institution of the supper: and then should declare the promises that are in it left vnto vs; and there withall shoulde excommunicate all them that by the Lordes forbidding are debarr’d from it, afterward they should pray that with what liberality the Lord hath giuen vs this holy foode, he would instruct and frame vs also with the same faith, and thank fulness of minde to receive it, and that forasmuch as we are not of our selues, he would of his mercie make vs woorthie of such a banker: that then either Psalms shoulde be sung, or somewhat read, and the faithfull should in seemly order communicate of the holy banker, the ministers breaking the bread and giuing it to the people: that when the supper is ended, exhortation should be made to pure faith and confession of faith, to charitie, and to maners meete for Christians: last of all that giuing of thanks shoulde be rehearsed, and praiers be sung to God: which being ended the congregation should be let goe in peace.

44 These things that wee haue hitherto spoken of this Sacrament doe largely shew, that it was not therefore ordeyned, that it should be receiued yeerely once, and that slightly for maners take (as noe commonly the custome is) but that it shoulde be in often vse to all Christiains that with often remembrance they should repeate the passion of Christ: by which remembrance they might sustaine and strengthen their Faith, and exhort themselues to sing confession of praiue to God, and to publish his goodnesse: finally by which they might nourish mutuall charitie, and testifie it among themselues, whereof they faue the knot in the vitue of the body of Christ. For so oft as we communicate of the signe of the body of the Lord, we do as by a token giuen and receiued, interchangably binde our selues one to another vnto all duties of love, that none of vs do any thing whereby he may offend his brother, nor leave any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when neede requireth and abili tie sufficeth. That such was the vse of the Apostolike Church, Luke rehearseth in the A.Cts, when he faith that the faithfull were continuing in the doctrine of the Apo stiles, in communicating, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. So was it altogether meete to be done, that there should be no assemblie of the Church without the worde, prayers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was also insti tute among the Corinthians we may sufficiently gather of Paul, and it is certaine that in many ages afterwaordes it was in vse. For thereupon came those olde Canons, which they father vpon Amacletus and Calixtus, that when the confcracion is done, all shoulde communicate, that will not be without the dores of the Church. And it is read in those olde Canons, which they call the Canons of the Apostiles: that they which continue not vnto the end, and do not receiue the holy Communion must be correctted as men that move vnquietnesse of the Church. Also in the Councell at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into the Church, and heare the Scrip tures, and do abstinence from the Communion, shoulde be remoued from the church, till they have amended this fault. Which although in the first Councell at Toledo it was either somewhat qualified or at least set fourth in milder words, yet it is there also decreed, that they, when they haue heard the sermon, are found neuer to communicate, should be warned: if after warning they abstinence, they shoulde be de barred from it.

45 Verily by these ordinances the holy men meent to retaine and maintain the often vse of the Communion, which often vse they had receiued from the Apo stiles themselues, which they sawe to be most wholesome for the faithfull, and by little
Cap. 17. Of the outward means

and little by the negligence of the common people to grow out of v. Augustine testifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (faith he) of this thing, of the vitriolic of the Lords body, is somewhere daily, somewhere by certaine distancers of the daies, prepared unto the Lordes table, and is there receiued at the table, to some vnto life, to others some vnto destruction. And in the first Epistle to Timothy: Comme do daily communicate of the body and blood of the Lord: Some receive it at certaine daies: in some places there is no day let passe wherein it is not offered: in some other places onlye vpon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in some other places never but on the Sunday. But forasmuch as the common people was(as we haue said) commaunded, the holy men did call earnestly vpon them with sharpe rebukings, leafl that they should see me to wink at such slothfulnesse. Such an example is in Chrysostome vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians. It is not faid vnto him that dishonoured the banket: wherefore didst thou sit downe? but wherefore didst thou come in? Whosoever is not partaker of the mysteries, he is wicked and shamefull for that he standeth here present. I beseech you if any be called to a banket, washeth his hands, sitteth downe, seemeth to prepare himselfe to eate, and then doth taste of nothing: shall he not shame both the banket, and the maker of the banket? So thou standing among them that with prayer do prepare themselves to receiue the holy meate, haft even in this that thou haft not gone away, confessed that thou art one of the number of them, at the last thou dost not partake: had it not been better that thou hadst not been present? Thou wilt say, I am vnworthie. Therefore neither waft thou worthie of the communion of prayer, which is a preparing to the receiuing of the holy mysterie.

46 And truely this custome, which commandeth to communicate yeerely once, is a most certaine intention of the duell, by whose ministers it was brought in. They say that Zepherinus was author of that decree, which it is not likely to have been such as we now haue it. For by his ordinance did peradventure not after the woord manner provide for the Church, as the times then were. For it is no doubt but that then the holy supper was set before the faithfull so oft as they came together in assembly, neither is it any doubt but that a good part of them did communicate. But when it scarcely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was necessarie that they which were mingled with prophan men and idolaters, should by some outward signe testifye their faith: the holy man for order and policies sake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Christians shoule by partaking of the Lords Supper viter a confession of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus being otherwise good hath been euill waste of them that came after, when a certaine lawe was made of one communicatong yeerely: whereby it is come to pass, that almost all men when they haue once communicat, as though they had gaily discharged themselves for all the rest of the yeere, sleepe foolishly on both eares. It ought to have been farre otherwise done. Every weeke at the least, the Lords table shoule be set before the assembly of the Christians: the promises shoule be declared, which might feed vs spiritually at it: none shoule indeed be compelled by necessitie, but al shoule be exhorted and pricked forward: the flagellines also of the slothfull shoule be rebuked. All shoule by heapes, as hungry men, come together to such dainties Not without rightful caufe therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the duell this custome was thrust in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yeere, maketh men slothfull for all the rest of the yeere. We see in deede that this pusitive abuse was crept in euin in the time of Chrysostome: but wee may alse therewithall see how much it displeased him. For he complaineith with grievous words in the same place which I euin now alleageth, that there is so great inequality of this matter, that often in some times of the yeere they came not euin when they were cleane, but at Easter they came euin when they were uncleanse. Then he crieth out: O custome, O presumtion. Then in vaine is the daily offering, vfed.
47 Out of the same shop proceeded also another ordinance, which hath stolen away or violently taken away the halfe of the supper from the better number of the people of God, namely the signe of the blood, which being denied to lay and profane men (for with such titles forsooth they set out God’s inheritance) became a peculiar possession to thauen and appointed men. It is the commandement of the eternall God, that all should drinke: which commandement man dare discontinue and repel with a new and contrary law, commanding that not all should drink. And that these lawmakers should not feeme to be without reason against their God, they pretend perils that might happen if this holy cup were commonly given to all: as though those dangers had not beene foreseen and marked of the eternall wisdome of God. And then guttlely forsooth they reason, that the one is enough for both. For if (say they) it be the body, it is whole Christ, which cannot now be feene from his body. Therefore by accompanying the body containeth the blood. Lo how our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer so little begon with loose reames, to be wanton and wilde. The Lord shewing bread faith that it is his body: when he sheweth the cup, he calleth it his blood. The boldnes of mans reason, crieth out contrariwise, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body: as though the Lord had for no cause feuered his body from his blood both in words and in signes: or as though it had ever beene heard spoken that the body or blood of Christ is called God and Man. Verily if he had meant to signifie whole himselfe, he might have said it is I: as he is wont to speake in the Scriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my blood. But he willing to helpe our weaknesses, did set the cup feuerally from the bread, to teach that he sufficeth no leffe for drinke than for meate. Now let one part be taken away, then we shall finde but the one halfe of the nourishmentes in him. Therefore, although it be true which they pretend, that the blood is in the bread by way of accompanying, and againe, the body in the cuppe, yet they desrde godly soules of the confirmation of Faith which Christ did uttereth vs as necessary. Therefore bidding their luttelest fare well, we must hold fast the profeite which is by the ordinance of Christ in the two carnets.

48 I know in deede that the ministers of Sathan doe here caull, as it is an ordinarie thing with them to make mockery of the Scriptures. First they allege that of one bare doing ought not to be gathered a rule whereby the Church should be bound to perpetuall obseruing. But they lie when they say that it was but a bare doing: for Christ did not onely deliuer the cup, but also did institute that his Apostles should in time to come doe the same. For they are the words of a commandeer, drinke ye all of this cup. And Paul so reheareseth that it was a deedee, that he also commendeth it for a certaine rule. Another starting hole is, that the Apostles alone were received of Christ to the partaking of this Supper whom he had already chosen and taken into the order of the sacrifing Priestes. But I would have them anfwere me to the questions, from which they shall not be able to escape, but that they shall be caullie convinced with their lies. First, by what oracle have they this solution receaved, being so strange from the word of God? The Scripture reckeneth twelue that sat with Iesus: but it doth not so obscure the dignitie of Christ that it calleth them sacrifing Priestes of which name we will speake hereafter in place fit for it. Though he gue it then to the twelue, yet he commanded that they should doe the same, namely that they should so distribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apostles almost a thousand yeares, were all without exception made partakers of both the signes? was the old Church ignorant what guests Christ had received to the Supper? It were a point of most desperate shamelesnes, here to flicke and daily in granting it to be true. There remaine the Ecclesiastical histories, there remaine

The books of the old writers, which minister evident testimonies of this matter, the flesh (faith Tertullian) is fed with the body and blood of Chrift, that the Soule may be fatted with feeding vpon God. How (laid Ambrose to Theofanis) wilt thou receive with such hands the holy body of the Lord? With what boldnes wilt thou with thy mouth take of the cup of the precious blood? And Hierome faith. The Priests which make the Thanksgiving, and doe distribute the blood of the Lord to the people. Chriftiame, Not as in the olde law the pierc did eate part, and the people part: but one body is set before all, and one cup. Those things that pertaine to the Thanksgiving are all common betweene the Priest and the people. The felfe fame thing doth Augustine testifie in many places.

49 But why dispute I about a thing not knowne? Let all the Grecians and La- tine writers be read over: such testimonies shall ech where offer themselues. Neither was this cuftome grown out of vs, where there remained one drop of pureneffe in the Church. Gregory, whilom you may rightly say to have beene the laft Bishop of Rome, teacheth that it was kept in his time. What is the blood of the Lambe, ye have now learned, not by hearing but by drinking. His blood is poured into the mouthes of the faithful. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeres after his death, when all things were grown out of kinde. For neither was that taken onely for an vsage, but also for an inuoluble law. For then was in force the reverence of Gods intitution, and they doubted not that it was sacriused, to feuer those things which the Lord had confonned. For thus faith Gelasius. We have found, that none receiving onely the portion of the holy body, doe abstaine from the cup. Let them without doubt, because they feeme to be bound with vs not what superstitifion, either receive the Sacraments whole, or be debarred from them whole. For the duiding of this myftery is not committed without great sacrifiled. Those reasons of Cyprian were heard, which truely ought to mooue a Christian minde. How (faith he) doe we teach or prouoke them to ffeed their blood in the confefling of Chrift, if we deny his blood to them that shall finge? Or how doe we make them fit for the cup of Martyrdom: if we doe not fift in the Church by the right of communion admitt them to drinke the cup of the Lord? Whereas the Canoniftes doe reftraine that decree of Gelasius to the Priests, that is so chifdill a cauall that it neede not to be confuted.

50 Thirdly, why did he simply say of the bread, that they should eate: but of the cup, that they should all drinke? Even as if he had meant of fet purpose to meeke with the craft of Satan. Foulthy, if (as they would have it) the Lord vouchfafe to admit to his Supper onely Sacrificing Priests, what man euer durft call to the partaking of it, strangers whom the Lord had excluded? yea and to be partaking of that gut, the power whereof was not in their hands, without any commandement of him which onely could give it. Yea upon confidence of what warrant doe they vs at this day to distribute to the common people the signe of the body of Chrift, if they have neither commandement nor example of the Lorde? Fiftly, did Paul lie, when hee faid to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lord that which he had deliuered to them? For afterward he declareth the thing that he deliuered, that all without difference should communicate of both the signes. If Paul receiued of the Lord, that all should be admitted without difference: let them looke of whom they haue receiued which doe drine away almost all the people of God: because they cannot now pretend God to be the Author of it, with whom there is no pretence. And yet still for cloaking of such abominations they dare pretend the name of the Church, and with such pretence defend it. As though either these Antichristes were the Church, which so easily treade vnder foote, scatter abroad, and destroy the doctrine and institution of Chrift: or the Apostolike Church were not the Church, in which the whole force of religion flourished.
The xvii. Chapter.

Of the Popish Maff, by which sacriledge the Supper of Chrift hath not only been prophane, but also brought to nought.

With these and like inventions Satan hath travelled, as by overspreading of darkness to obscure and defile the holy finger of Chrift, that at leaft the purenes of it should not be kept still in the Church. But the head and horrors of this abomination was when hee aduanced a figne, by which it might not onely be darkened and perverted, but being vitally botlded and abolifhed should vanish and fall out of the remembrance of men: namely when he blinded almost the whole world with a most pestilential error that they should beleeue that the Maffe is a facrifice and oblation to obtaine the forgiveness of finnes. Now at the beginning the founder for of the schoolmen tooke this doctrine, I nothing regard; farewell they with their crabbed faculties: which howsoever they may be defended with cauilling, yet are therefore to be refted of all good men, because they do nothing else but spread much darkness out the brightness of the fupper. Therefore bidding them farewell, let the readers understand that I here match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romifh Antichrift and his prophets have infected the whole world, namely that the Maffe is a work whereby the facrificing prieft which offereth vp Chrift, and the other that do partake at the fame oblation, do defiere the favour of God: or that it is a cleansing facrifice, whereby they reconcile God to themselves. Neither hath this beene received onely in common opinion of the people, but the vere doeing it selfe is fo framed, that it is a kind of pacifying wherewith satisfaction is made to God for the purging of the quick and dead. The words also which they vfe, do exprefle the fame: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vfe of it. I know how deepe roots this pefilence hath taken, vnder how great feeming of gooines it lurketh, how it beareth in fhow the name of Chrift, how in the one name of Maffe many beleeue that they comprehend the whole fumme of faith. But when it shalle be by the word of God most cleerly prooued, that this Maffe, how much fcover it be coloured and glorious, yet thamefully defiled Chrift, burneth & oppreffeth his croffe, putteth his death in forgetfulness, taketh away the fruit that commeth therof into vs, doth weaken and defoyt the sacrament wherein was left the memorie of his death; shall there then be any fo deepe roots, which this moft strong axe, I mean the word of God, shall not cut downe and overthrow? Is there any face fo beautifull, that this light cannot betray the euil which lurketh vnder it?

2. Let vs therefore fhow that which hath beene fet in the firft place, that it is intolerable blafphemie and defhonour done to Chrift. For he was confrate of his Father a Prieft and bishop, not for a time as we read that they were ordained in the old testament, whose life being mortall their priefthood alfo could not be immortall: for which caufe also there needed succeffors that should from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Chrift, which is immortall, there needed no vicar to be fet after him. Therefore he was ordained of the father a prieft for euer, according to the order of Melchizedech, that hee should execute an euerdying priefthood. This mystery had bin long before figured in Melchizedech, whom whome the Scripture had once brought in for the prieft of the huing God, it never afterwaies made mention of him, as though he had had no end of his life. After this point of likefes, Chrift was called a prieft according to his order. Now they that do daily facrifice, must needs appoint prieftes to make the oblations whom they must appoint as it were succeffors and vicars in fteede of Chrift. By which putting in fteede of him, they doe not onely spoil Chrift of his honour, and plucke from him the prerogatie of eternall priefthood, but also travell to thraulf him downe from the right hand of Salvation.

The sacrifice of the maffe being held to be a sacrifice propitiatory is nothing but a meer prophanation of the supper of the Lord.
hand of his Father, on which he cannot sit immortall, but that he must therewithall remaine the eternal priest. Neither let them lay for themselves that their pettie sacrificers are not put in place of Christ as if he were dead, but onely are helpers of his eternall priesthood, which ceafteth not therefore to continue. For they are more strongly holden fast with the words of the Apostle, than that they may so escape: namely, that there were many other priests made, because they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, and he needeth no companions. Yet, such is their frowardnes, they arme themselves with the example of Melchisedec to defend their wickedneffe. For, because it is said that he offred bread and wine, they gather that he was a foreshewing of their Maffe: as though the like-nesse betweene him and Christ were in the offering of bread and wine. Which is so emptie and trifling that it needeth no confusion. Melchisedec gave bread and wine to Abraham and his companions, to refreth them being wearye after their journey and battle. What is this to a sacrifice? Moses praieth the gentiles of the holy king: these fellows vnseasonably coyne a mysterie whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfully paint their error with another colour, becaufe it followeth by & by after, And he was the priest of the highest God. I anwer, that they wrongfully draw to the bread and wine that which the Apostle referreteth to the blessing. Therefore when he was the priest of God he blessed Abraham. Whereupon the same Apostle (than whom we neede to seeke no better exposter) gathereth his excellence, because the better is blessed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchisedec were a figure of the sacrifice of the Maffe, would the Apostle, I pray you, which searcheth out all euell the least things, haue forgotten so earneft and weightie a thing? Now (howsoever they trifle) they shall in vaine goe about to overthrow the reason which the Apostle himselfe bringeth, that the right and honour of sacrificing priesthood ceafteth among mortall men, because Christ which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall sacrificing prifft.

3 An other vertue of the Maffe was, that it opprefsth and burieh the crosse and passion of Christ. This verily is most certaine, that the crosse of Christ is overthrown so soone as the altar is set vp. For if he offered himselfe for a sacrifice upon the crosse, that he might sanctifie vs for ever, and purchase to vs eternall redemption: undoubtedly the force and effectuallnes of that sacrifice continueth without any end. Other wise we should thinke nothing more honorably of Christ, than of oxen & calves which were sacrificed under the law: the offerings whereof are proued vnsufficient and weak by this that they were offered. Wherefore either we must confesse, that the sacrifice of Christ, which he fulfilled upon the crosse, wanted the force of eternall cleansing, or that Christ hath made an end of all with one sacrifice once for ever. This is it that the Apostle saith, that this chiefe bishop Christ once appeared by offering vp of himselfe before the ending of the world, to the driving away of sinne. Again, that we are sanctified by the will of God, by the offering of the body of Iesus Christ once. Again, That Christ with one oblation for ever hath made perfect them that are sanctified: whereunto he adjoweth a notable sentence, that foruences of sinnes being once purchased, there remaineth no more any oblation. This also Christ signified by his last sayings and vtered among his last sayings, when he saide, it is ended. Wee are woont to note the last sayings of men when they are dying, for oracles. Christ dying testifieth that by his own sacrifice is perfected and fulfilled whatsoever was for our salvation. Shall it be lawfull for vs daily to patch innumerable sacrifices to such a sacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath so shiningly set forth) as thought it were imperfect? When the holy word of God not onely affirmeth, but also crieth out, and protesteth, that this sacrifice was once fully done that the force thereof remaineth everlasting, who so require an other sacrifice, do they not accuse this of imperfection and weaknesse? But as for the Maffe, which hath beene delivered in such uch sort that there may every day be made a hundred thousand sacrifices, to what end tendeth it, but that the passion of Christ whereby he offered him an only sacrificed oblation to the father, should be buried and drowned? Who, yclepe he be blind, cannot see that it was the boldnes of Satan, which wassell against so open & clear truth? Neither am I ignorant with what deceites that Father of lying vseth to colour this his fraud, saying that there are not fundrie nor divers sacrifices, but that one false same sacrifice is repeated. But such snares are easily blown away. For in the whole discourse the Apostle traveleth to proue: not onely that there are no other sacrifices, but that that one sacrifice was once offered vp, and shall no more be repeated. The suiteller men do yet slippe out at a narrower hole, saying, that it is not a repeating but an applying. But this Sophisticall argument also is no lesse easily confuted. For neither did Christ once offer vp himselfe with this condition: that his sacrifice should be daily confirmed with new oblations: but that by the preaching of the Gospell, and ministring of the holy supper, the fruit thereof should be communicated vp. So Paul saith that Christ our paschouer was offered vp, and biddeth vp to eate of him. This (saith) is the meanes whereby the Sacrifice of the cross is rightely applied to vs, when it is communica ted to vs to take the vs de vs, and we with true faith recewe it.

4 But it is worth the labour to heare, with what other foundation beside these they uphold the sacrifice of the Mass. For they draw to this purpose the prophesie of Malachie, whereby the Lord promiseth that the time shall come when throughout the whole worlde there shall be offered to his name incense and a cleane sacrifice. As though it were a new or unuomtied thing among the prophets, when they speake of the calling of the Gentiles to expresse by the outward ceremomie of the lawe the spiri
tuall worshipping of God, to which they exhort them, that they might the more fa ciliarly declare to the men of their age, that the Gentiles should be called into the true fellowship of religion. Like as also they are wont altogether to describe by figures of their law, the truth that was delivered by the Gospell. So they set for turning to the Lord, ascending into Jerusalem: for the worshipping of God, the offering of all kinds of gifts: for larger knowledge of him which was to be gven to the faithful in the kingdom of Christ, dreams and visions. That therefore which they allege, is like vnto an other prophesie of Esay, where the prophet foretelleth of three altars to be set vp in Affria, Egypt, and Iury. For first I ask, whether they do not grant that the ful tilling of this prophesie is in the kingdom of Christ. Secondly, where these altars, or when they were even set vp. Thirdly whether they think that to every severall king dome is appointed a severall Temple, such as was that at Jerusalem. These things if they weigh, I thinke they will confesse, that the prophet vnder figures agreeable with his time, prophesieht of the spirituall worship of God to be spread abroad into the whole world. Which we give to them for a solution. But of this thing first there doe euerie where examples commonly offer themselues, I will not bufe my selfe in longer rehearsing of them. Howbeit herein also they are miserably deceived, that they acknowledge no sacrifice but of the Mass, whereas indeed the faithful doe now sacrifice to the Lord, and do offer a cleane offering, of which shall be spoken by and by.

5 Now I come downe to the third ofice of the Mass, where I must declare how it blotteth out the true and onely death of Christ, and maketh it out of the re cembrance of men. For as among men the strength of a Testament hangeth upon the death of the testator: so also our Lorde hath with his death confirmed the testa tment whereby he hath gven vs forgiuenesse of sinnes and eternall righteounesse. They that dare varie or make newe anything in this testament, doe denie his death, and holde it as it were of no force. But what is the Mass, but a newe and altogether divers testament? For why? Doeth not euerie severall Mass promise newe forgiue ness of sinnes, newe purchasing of righteounesse: so that now there bee to many testaments,
Cap. 18. Of the outward meanes testamentes, as there be Maffes? Let Christ therefore come again, and with an other death confirm this testament, or rather with infinite deaths confirm innumerable testaments of Maffes. Haue I not therefore said true at the beginning, that the onely and true death of Christ is blotted out by Maffes? Yea what shall we say of this that the Maffe directly tendeth to this end, that it be possible, Christ should be slaine againe? For where is a testament ( faith the Apostle ) there of necessitie must be the death of the testator. The Maffe sheweth it selfe to be a new testament of Christ: therefore it requireth his death. Moreover the hoffe which is offered, must necessarily be slaine and sacrificed. If Christ in every severall Masse be sacrificed, then he must at every moment be in a thousand places cruelly slaine. This is not mine but the apostles argument, if he had needed to offer himselfe oft, he must oft have died since the beginning of the world. I know that they have an answer in readiness, whereby also they charge vs with slander. For they say that this is objected against the which they never thought, nor yet can. And we know, that the death and life of Christ is not in their hand. We looke not whether they go about to kill him: only our purpose is to shew, what manner of absurditie followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which false thing I proue by the Apostles owne mouth. Though they erie out to the contrary a hundred times, that this sacrifice is vnbloudy: I will denie that it hangeth upon the will of men, that sacrifices should change their nature, for by this meanes the holy and inviolable ordinance of God should faile. Wherupon followeth that this is a sure principle of the Apostle, that there is required shedding of bloud, that walking may not be wanting.

6 Now is the fourth office of the Maffe to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the guilt that came to vs of the death of Christ, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke upon it. For who can call to minde that he is redeemed by the death of Christ when he feeth a new redemption in the Masse? Who can trust that sinnes are forgiven him, when he feeth a new forgiuenesse? Neither shall he escape that shall say, that we doe for no other cause obtaine forgiuenesse of sinnes in the Masse, but because it is alreadie purchased by the death of Christ. For he bringeth nothing else than as if he should boast, that Christ hath redeemed vs with this condition that we should redeeme our felues. For such doctrine hath beene spread by the ministers of Satan, and such at this day they maintaine with cryings out with fire and false, that we when in the Masse we offer vp Christ to his Father, by this worke of offering do obtaine forgiuenesse of sinnes, and are made partakers of the passion of Christ. What now remaineth to the passion of Christ, but to be an example of redemption, whereby we may learne to be our owne redeemer? Christ himselfe, when in the Supper he sealeth the confidence of pardon, doth not bid his disciples to stick in that doing, but feethem away to the sacrifice of his death: signifying that the Supper is a moniment or memoriall (as the common speech is) whereby they may learne that the satisfactorie cleaung sacrifice, by which the Father was to be appeased, must have beene offered but once. For neither is it enough to know that Christ is the onely sacrifice, vnlesse the onely sacrificing be joyned with it, that our fault may be fastened to his croffe.

7 Nowe I come to the conclusion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lord had left the remembrance of his passion grauen and exprest, is by the setting vp of the Masse, taken away, defaced, and destroyed. For the Supper it selfe is the gift of God, which was to be receiued with thanksgiving. The sacrifice of the Masse is fained to pay a price to God, which he may receive for satisfaction. How much difference there is betweene to glie and to receiue, so much doth the sacrifice differ from the Sacrament of the Supper. And this truly is the most wretched vnthankfulness of man, that where the largeffe of Gods bountie ought to have beene acknowledged, and thanks to be giuen therein he maketh God his debtor. The Sacrament promised, that that by the death of Christ we are not only once restored into life, but are continually quickened, because then all the parts of our salvation were fulfilled. The sacrifice of the Mass figureth a farre other song, that Christ must be daily sacrificed, that he may somewhat profite vs. The Supper should have been distributed in the common assemblie of the Church, that it might informe vs of the communion whereby we all receive together in Christ Iesus. The sacrifice of the Mass dissoleuth and plucketh in sunder this community. For after that the errour grewe in force, that there must be sacrificers that should sacrifice for the peoples, the Supper of the Lorde, as though it were posted outer to them, ceased to be communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commandement of the Lord. An entrie was made open to private Masses, which might rather resemble a certaine excommunication, than that same communite ordained of the Lord, when that petty sacrificer willing feuerally by himselfe to devour his sacrifice, doth sever himselfe from the whole people of the faithfull. I call private Masses (leaff any man be deceived) wherefoever there is no partaking of the Lorde's Supper among the faithfull, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

8 And whence the very name of Mass first sprung, I could never certainly judge:
saying that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offerings that were given.
Whereupon the olde writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But to leaue straining about the name, I say that private Masses are directly against the ordinace of Christ, and therefore they are a wicked prophaining of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lorde commaunded vs? not to take, and divide it among vs? What manner of obstruing of the commandement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread, which is the communion of the body and blood? Therefore when one taketh it without distributing, what likeness is there? But that same one man doth it in the name of the whole Church. By what commandement? Is not this openly to mocke God, when one man prettily taketh to himselfe that which ought not to have beene done but among many? But because the words of Christ and Paul are plaine enough, we may brefly conclude, that wherefoever is not breaking of bread to the commu-nation of the faithfull, there is not the supper of the Lorde, but a false and wrongfull counterfeiting of the supper. But a false counterfeiting is a corruping. Now the corruping of so great a mysterie is not without wickednesse. Therefore in private Masses is a wicked abuise. And (as one fault in religion from time to time breedeth another) after that that manner of offering without communion was once crept in, by little and little they began in euery corner of churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuerly to draw the people hither and thither, which should have come together into one assemblie, that they might acknowledge the mysterie of their owne vnite. Now let them goe and denye it to be idolatry, that in their Masses they shew forth bread to be worshipped in stead of Christ. For in vaine they boast of those promises of the presence of Christ, which howsoever they be understood, verily were not giue to this purpose, that wicked and prophanite men so oft as they will, and to whatsoever abuse they list, may make the body of Christ, but that the faithfull, when with religious obferuation they doe in celebrating of the Supper followe the commandement of Christ, may enjoye the true partaking of him.

9 Beside that, this pervertitit was unknowne to the purer church. For howsoever the more shamelesse set among our adversaries doe here goe about to difguise the matter with false colours, yet is it most cleare that all antiquitie is against them, as we have above proceded in other things, and it may more certainly be judged by the constant and reading of olde writers. But ere I make an ende of speaking of it, I ask our Massing doctors, whether they know that obedience is more esteemed of God than obligations, and that he more requereth that his voice be hearkened to, then that sacrifice be offered: how they believe that this manner of sacrificing is acceptable to God, what of whereof they have no certaine commandement, and which they see not to be allowed by any one syllable of the Scripture. Moreover when they heare the Apostle say, that no man taketh to himself the name and honor of sacrificing priesthood, but he that is called Aaron was: yea and that Christ himselfe did not thrust in himselfe, but obeyed the calling of his Father: either they must bring forth God the Author and orderer of their sacrificing priesthood, or they must confesse that the honor is not of God, into which they have with wicked rafhnes broken in vnalled. But they cannot shew one tide of a letter that maintaineth their sacrificing priesthood. Why therefore shall not their sacrifices vanish away which can not be offered without a priest?

If any man doe thrust in short sentences of the olde writers gathered here and there, and doe by their authoritative traualle to prove that the sacrifice which is done in the Supper is farre otherwise to be understood than we doe expound it: let him be brieftly answered thus: if the question be of allowing the forfud decius of sacrifice, as the Papiftes have faied in the Maffe, the olde writers doe never speake in defence of such sacrifice. They doe in deed doe the word Sacrifice: but therewithall they expound, that they meane nothing else but the remembrance of that true and onely sacrifice, which Christ our onely sacrificing Priest (as they eall where report of him) made on the Croffe. The Hebrues (faith Augustine) in the sacrifices of beafts which they offered to GOD, did celebrate a prophecie of the sacrifice to come, which Christ offered: the Christians doe with the holy oblation and partaking of the body of Christ celebrate a remembrance of the sacrifice already made.
Here verily he teacheth altogether the fame thing, which is written in many words in the booke of Faith to Peter the Deacon, which I may be the author of it: The words be thefe, Befere them most hearefully and doubt not at all, that the onely beftowed himselfe, being made flesh for vs, offered himselfe for vs a sacrifice and oblation to God into a favour of sweetenen: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost in the time of the old Teftament beafts were sacrificed: and to whom now with the Father and the Holy Ghost (with whom he hath one Godhead) the holy Church throughout the whole world ceaseth not to offer the sacrifice of bread and wine. For in those flesly sacrifices was a figuring of the flesh of Christ which he should offer for our fintes, and of his blood which he shoud shed to the forgiveness of fintes. But in this sacrifice is thankesgiving and rehearfall of the flesh of Christ which he offered for vs, and of his blood which the fame he hath shed for vs. Whereupon Augustine himselle in many places expoundeth it to be nothing else but a sacrifice of praise. Finally you shall commonly find in him, that the Supper of the Lord is for no other reason called a sacrifice, but because it is the remembrance, image, and witness of that singular, true, and onely sacrifice wherewith Christ hath cleansed vs. Also there is a notable place in his fourth booke of the Trinitie the xxinj. Chapter, where after that he hath discoursed of the onely sacrifice he thus concludeth: because in a sacrifice ofier things are confidered, to whom it is offered, and of whom, what is offered, and for whom. The fame he himselfe the one and true Mediator reconciling vs to God by the sacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whom he offered: maketh them one in him for whom he offered: is one himselfe which offered, and the thing which he offered. To the fame effect also speaketh Chrys:Some. But they so challenge the honor of sacrificing priesthood to Christ, that Augustine teifteth it to be the voice of Anti-christ if any man make a Bishop intercessor betweene God and men.

Yet doe we not deny but that the offering vp of Christ is there so shewed in vs, that the spectacle of the Croffe is in a maner set before our eyes: as the Apostle faith that Christ was crucified in the eyes of the Galatians, when the preaching of the Croffe was set before them. But forasmuch as I see that those olde Fathers also wrested this remembrance another way than was agreement with the institution of the Lord (because their supper contained I wote not what repeated or at least renewed forme of sacrificing) facturing) the fairest way for godly harts shall be to rest in the pure and simple ordinance of God: whose also the supper is therefore called, because in it his authority alone ought to be in force. Truly I find that they have kept a godly and true fancy of this whole mystery, and I do not perceive that they meant to abate anything were it ever so little from the onely sacrifice of the Lord, I cannot condemn them of vn-godlineffe: yet I think that they cannot be excused, but that they have offended somewhat in the manner of the celebration. For they counterfaite the Jewis maner of sacrificing more more than either Christ had ordained, or the nature of the Gospel did bee. Therefore that same ouerthrow applinance to heavenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that being not contenent with the simple and natural institution of Christ, they swarmed to the shadowes of the law.

12 If a man do diligently wey, that this difference is put by the word of the Lord betweene the sacrifices of Mofes, and our Thanksgiving, that whereas those did represent to the Jewis people, the same effectuelle of the death of Christ, which is at this day deliered to vs in the supper, yet the maner of representing was diuers. For in those, the Levitcall priests were commanded to figure that which Christ should performe it: there was brought a sacrifice which should be in the stead of Christ himselfe: there was an altar whereupon it should bee offered: finally all things were so done, that there was set before their eyes an image of the sacrifice which was to be offered to God for a satisfactorie cleansing. But since the time that the sacrifice is ended the Lord hath appointed to vs another order: namely that it should convey to the faithfulfull people the fruit of the sacrifice offered to him by the sonne. Therefore he hath given us a table wherat we should eate, not an altar whereupon sacrifice should be offered: he hath not consecrated priests to sacrifice, but ministers to distribute the holy beneke, How much more he and holy the mystery is, so much more religiously and with greater reverence it is meeet to be handled. Therefore there is no way faster, than putting away all boldness of mans understanding, so fickle fast in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truly if we consider that it is the Supper of the Lord and not of men, there is no cause why we should suffer our selves to be remooed one hare breadth from it by any authoritie of men or prescription of yeeres. Therefore when the Apostle minded to cleanse it from all faultes which had alreadie crept into the Church of the Corinthians, he vseth the readiest way thereunto, that is, he calleth it backe to the onely institution of it, from whence he theweth that a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

13 Now leaft any wrangler, should stirre vs vp strife by reason of the names of sacrifice and sacrificing priest. I will also declare, but yet breefely what in the whole discourse I have said by a sacrifice, and what by a sacrificing priest. Who so stretch the word sacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doings of religion, I fee not by what reason they do it. We do know that by the continuall vfe of the Scripture a sacrifice is called that which the Greekes call sometime Thulsi, sometime Prospohra, sometime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehended whatsoever is in any wise offered to God. Wherefore we must make distinction: but yet so that this distinction may have a supernall appliance of similitude from the sacrifices of the law of Mofes: under the shadowes whereof the Lord wilde to represent to his people the whole truth of sacrifices. Of those although there were diuers formes, yet they may al be referred to two formes. For either there was oblation made for sinne after a certaine manner of satisfaction, whereby guiltiness was redeemed before God: or it was a signe of the worshipping of God, and a testifying of religion: sometime in stead of supplication, to crave the favoure of God: sometime instead of thanksgiving, to testifie thankfulnes of minde for benefites received: sometime onely for an exercise of godliness, to renewe the stabiling of the covenant, to which latter forme pertained burnt offerings, drinke offerings, oblations, first fruits, and peace offerings. Wherefore let vs also divide ours into two kindes: and for teachings sake let vs call the one the sacrifice of worship, and of godly devotion, because it consisteth in the Honouring and Worshipping of God, which the faithfull both owe and yeeld unto him: or if you will, the sacrifice of Thanksgiving: for as much as it is given to God of none but of them that being laden with immeasurable benefits, do render to him themselves with all their doings. The other may be called propitiatory or of expiation. The sacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appease the wrath of God, to satisfy his judgement, and so to wash and wipe away sinnes: whereby the sinner cleansed from the filthie spots of them, and restored into purity of righteousness, may returne into favour with God himselfe. So in the lawe those were called sacrifices that were offered for the purging of sinnes: not for that they were sufficient to recover the favour of God, or to put away iniquity: but for that they shadowed out such a true sacrifice which at length was fully done by Christ alone: and by him alone, because it could be done by none other: and once, because the effectualnesse and force of that one sacrifice which Christ hath fully done, is eternall, as he himselfe hath testified with his owne mouth, when he said that it was ended and fulfilled: that is to say, that whatsoever was necessarie to the reconciling of the fathers favourable, to the obtaining of the forgiveness of sinnes, to righteoussenesse and to salvation, all the same was performed and fulfilled with that his onely oblation, and there so nothing wanted thereof, that there was afterward no place left to any other sacrifice.

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a most wicked reproch, and blasphemie not to be suffered, as well against Christ as against the sacrifice which he hath fully done by his death upon the cross for vs, if any man by renewing an oblation thinke to purchase the pardon of sinnes, to appease God, and to obtaine righteousness. But what is else done by Maffing, but that by deferring of new oblation we may be made partakers of the passion of Christ. And that there might be no measure of madding, they thought it but a small thing to say that there is made indifferently a common sacrifice for the whole Church, unless they further stide that it is in their choyce to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whom they would, or rather to every one whoseoeuer he were that would buy for himselfe such ware with ready monie. Now because they could not reach to the price that Judas had, yet that they might in some marke resemble their author, they kept the like stiffe of number. Judas solde him for thirtie silver pence: these fellows solde him, after the French account, for thirtie braven pence: but Judas solde him once, these fellows solde him as oft they can finde a buer. In this leffe alsoe we denye that they be sacrificing priests, that is to say, they that with such an oblation are means to God for the people, that they appeaing God, may purchase the satisfactorie purging of sinnes. For Christ is the onely biship and sacrificing priest of the new Testament, into whom all Priesthoodes are remoued, and in whom they be shut vp and ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternall priesthood of Christ: yet for as much as God, since that he hath taken away those olde priesthoddes, hath ordained none, the Apostles argument remaineth invincible, that no man taketh honour to himselfe, but he that is called of God. By what affiance therefore dare these robbers of God, that boast themselves for the butchers of Christ, call themselves the sacrificing Priestes of the living God?

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his second booke of common weale. Where when he entreateth of the old manners of expiation, and laugher to storne the foolish confidence of euill men & wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by these as by couerings hidden that the Gods could not see them, and did, as if they had gotten warrant of the Gods by covenant, more carelesly followe their owne lufts: he feemeth throughly to touch the manner of satisfactorie purging of the Masse, Maffe, such as is at this day in the world. To beguile and undermine another man, all men know to be unlawful. To grievous widows with wrongfull dealings, to rob the fatherlesse, to trouble the poore, by cuil craftie meanes to catch other mens goods to themselves, with forswearings and deceit to enter forceably into any mans possession, to oppose any man with violence and tyrannous force, all men confess to be wicked. How therefore dare so many commonly do all these things, as though they should freely be bold to do them? Truely, if we rightly weigh it, no other cause doth so much encourage them, but because they have confidence, that by the sacrifice of a Maffe, as by payment of full price for recompence, they shall satisfie God, or at the least that this is an easy way to comply with him. Then Plato procedeth further to scorn their grosse blockishnes, which think that by such satisfactorie cleanings those pains are redeemed that otherwise they should suffer in hell. And whereas Fere at this day the yeerely obites, and the greater part of Masses, but that they which throughout all their life have beene most cruel tyrants, or most ravenous robbers, or given forth to all mishcious doings, should as though they were redeemed by this price, escape the fire of purgatorio?

16. Under the other kind of sacrifice, which we have called the sacrifice of thanksgiving, are contained all the dutifull works of charity, which when we extend to our brethren, we honour the Lord himselfe in his members: then, all our prayers, praifings, griefings of thankes, and whatsoever we do to the worshipping of God. All which things finally do hang upon the greater sacrifice, whereby we are in foule and body hallowed to be a holy temple to the Lord. For neither is it enough, if our outward doings be applied to the obeying of him: but first ourselves, and then all that is ours ought to be confecrate and dedicate to him: that whatsoever is in vs, may ferve his glorie, and may rouse of zealouz endeavour to advance it. This kind of sacrifice tendereth nothing at all to appease the wrath of God, nothing at all to obtaine forgiveness of sinnes, nothing at all to defrue righteousnes: but is occupied onely in magnifying and extolling of God. For it cannot be pleasant and acceptable to God, but at their hands, whom by forgiveness of sinnes already received he hath by other meanes reconciled to himselfe, and therefore acquitted them from guiltines. But it is so necessarie for the Church, that it cannot be away from it. Therefore it shall bee everlastinge, so long as the people of God shall continue, as we have before already showed out of the Prophet: for in that meaning I will take this prophecie, For from the rising of the sun to the going downe thereof, is my name among the Gentiles, and in euerie place incense shall be offered to my name, and a clean offering: because my name is terrible among the Gentiles, faith the Lord: so far is it off, that we would put it away. So Paul bideth vs to offer our bodies a sacrifice living, holy, acceptable to God: a reasonable worship. Where he speake very pitifully, when he added that this is our reasonable worshipping: for he meant the spiritual manner of worshipping of God, which he did secretly set in comparison against the carnall sacrifices of the law of Moses. So heretofore doing of good and communicating are called sacrifices by which God is pleased: so the liberality of the Philippians, whereby they had relieued the pouerrie of Paul, is called a sacrifice of sweet finding: so all the good works of the faithfull are called spiritual sacrifices.

17. And why do I seek out many examples? For commonly this manner of speaking is often found in the scriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holde under the outward shew of the law, yet the prophets did sufficiently express that under those carnall sacrifices was the true, which the Christian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which manner David prayed, that his prayer might as incense ascend into the sight of God. And ofte called giving of thankes, the calues of lippe, which in another place David calleth the sacrifices of praise. Whom the Apostle himselfe following, calleth them also the sacrifices of praise, and expoundeth expoundeth them the fruits of lips confessing to his name. This kind of sacrifice the Supper of the Lord cannot want: wherein when we declare his death and render thanksgiving, we do nothing but offer the sacrifice of praise. Of this office of sacrifying, all we Christians are called a kingly Priesthood: because by Christ we offer to God that sacrifice of praise of which the Apostle speaketh, the fruit of lips that confects to his name. For neither do we with our gifts appeare in the sight of God without an intercessor: Christ is he, which being the Mediator comming between, we offer vs and ours to the Father. He is our Bishop, which being entred into the sanctuarie of heaven, hath opened the entrance to vs. He is the altar, upon which we lay our gifts, that in him we may be bold all that we are bold. It is he (I say) that hath made vs a kingdom and Priests to the Father.

18 What remaineth, but that the blinde may see, the deaf may heare, children themselves may understand and this abomination of the Maffe? which being offered in a golden cup, hath made drunke the kings and peoples of the earth, from the highest to the lowest, hath so striken them with drowfnesse and giddynesse, that being become more fenelesse than brute beasts, they haue set the whole cup of their fatfetic one-ly in this deadly devouring gulf. Truely Satan never did bende himselfe with a stronger engine than this to affaye and vanquish the kingdom of Christ. This is the Helene, for whom the enemies of the truth fight at this day with so great rage, so great furiousness, so great cruelty; and a Helene indeede, with whom they so defile them-selfes with spirittual whoredome, which is the most cursed of all. I doe not here so much as once touch with my little finger those grosse abuses wherewith they might colour the unholy pureness of their holy Maffe: howe ftiltie markettings they vfe, how vnheonest gains they make with their maffings, with how great rauning they fill their courtiousness. Onely I doe point vnto, and that with fewe and plaine wordes, what maner of thing is euon the verie holiest holinsie of the Maffe, for which it hath defuered in certaine ages past to be so honorable and to be had in so great reuerence. For, to haue these so great mysteries set out according to their wor-thinesse, requireth a greater worke: and I am unwilling to mingle herewith those filthy uncleannesse that commonly dwewe themselves before the eyes and faces of all men, that all men may understand, that the Maffe taken in her most pined pureness, and wherewith it may be set out to the best shew, without her appendances, from the roote to the top swarthe full of all kindes of wickednes, blasphemie, idolatrie, and sac-crifice.

19 The readers now haue in a manner almost all those things gathered into an abridgement, which we have thought behouefull to be known concerning these two sacramentes: the vse of which hath beene delivered to the Christian Church from the beginning of the new testament, to continue to the vertie end of the world:
namely, that Baptisme shoulebe as it were a certaine entrie into it, and an admission into faith: and the Supper should be as it were a continuall foode, wherewith Christ spiritually feedeth the family of his faithfull. Wherefore as there is but one God, one faith, one Christ, one Church his bodie: so there is but one Baptisme, and is not oft ministred againe. But the supper is from time to time distributed, that they which haue beeone receiued into the Church may understand that they be continuously fed with Christ. Beside thefe two as there is no other sacrament ordained of God, so neither ought the Church of the faithfull to acknowledge any other. For that, it is not a thing that lieth in the choice of man to raise and set vp new sacramentes, he shall easilie understandeth that remembreth that which hath beeone here before plainly enough declared, that is, that sacraments are appointed of God to this end, that they should instruct vs of some promis of his, and testifie to vs his good will toward vs: and he also that calleth to minde, that none hath beeone Gods counsellor, that might promis vs any certaintie of his will, or assure vs, and bring vs out of care, what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will give, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is also determined, that no man can set forth a signe to be a testimony of any will or promise of his: it is he himseld alone, that can by a signe giuen testifie to vs of himselfe, I will speake it more briefly, and peradventure more grozly, but more plainly, a Sacrament can not be without promise of salvation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themselves promise nothing of our salvation. Therefore neither can they of themselues set forth or set vp a Sacrament.

20 Therefore let the Christian Church be contented with these two, and let her not only not admit or acknowledge any third for the present time, but also not desire or looke for any to the ende of the world. For whereas certaine diuerse Sacramentes, beside those their ordinarie ones, were giuen to the Iewes according to the diuerse course of times, as Manna, Water springing out of the rocke, the brazen Serpent and such other: they were by this change put in minde that they should not stay upon such figures whose state was not very stedfast: but that they should looke for some better thing from God, which should continue without any decaying, & without any end. But we are in a farre other case, to whom Christ is openly shewed: in whom all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom are hidden with to great abundance and plenty, that either to hope for or looke for any new increase to these treasures, is verily to moue God to wrath, and to provoke him against vs. We must hunger for, seek, looke upon, learne, and thoroughly learne Christ alone, until that great day shall appear, wherein the Lord shall openly shew to the full the glory of his kingdom, and himselfe such as he is, to be holden of vs. And for this reason this our age is in the Scriptures signified by the last house, the last daies, the last times, that no man should deceive himselfe with vaine looking for any new doctrine of revelation. For many times and in many forts he spake before of his Prophets, in these last daies the heavenly Father hath spoken in his beloved Sonne, which onely can manifestly shew the Father: and in deed he hath manifestly shewed him to the full, so much as behooueth vs, while we now behold him by a glasse. As therefore this is now taken away from men, that they cannot make new Sacraments in the Church of God: so it were to be wished, that as little as were possible of mans invention might be mingled with those Sacraments that are of God. For like as when water is powred in, the wine departeth and is delayed: and as with leaven scattered among it, the whole lump of dowe waxeth fower: so the purenesse of the mysteries of God is nothing else but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we see how farre the Sacraments are swarved out of kinde from their natural purenesse, as they be handled at this day. There is echwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and gesturings: but of the word of God in the meanes time there is neither any consideration or mention, without which even the Sacraments themselves are not Sacraments. Yea and the very ceremonies that are ordened of God, in so great a rout cannot once lift vp their head, but lie as it were oppressed. How little is that scene in Baptisme, which only ought there to have shined and beene looked upon, as we have in another place rightfullie complained, even Baptisme it selfe? As for the Supper, it is vtilly buried, since that it hath beene turned into the Maffe, fauing that it is seene once every yeere but in a mangled and horse to ride Fashion.

The xix. Chapter.

Of the Five falsely named Sacraments: where as declared, that the other five which have beene hitherto commonly taken for Sacraments, are not Sacraments: and then is shewed what manner of thing they be.

Ovr former discourse concerning Sacraments might have obtained this with the sober and willing to learne, that they should not ouer curiously proceede A Sacrament defined to be a visible signe of invisible things.
Cap. 19. Of the outward means.

Grace, and this applied in the Schools of Rome to five other besides those two before handled.

any further, nor should without the word of God embrace any other Sacraments beside those two which they knew to be ordeained of the Lord. But forasmuch as that opinion of the seven Sacraments, being commonly held in all men's talk, having wandered through all schools and preachings, hath by very ancient and gathered roots, and is yet still settled in the minds of men: I thought that I should doe a thing worth the travaile, if I should solemnly and more secretly search those other five that are commonly adnurned among the true and natural Sacraments of the Lord, and wiping away all deceitful colour, should set them forth to be seen of the simple such as they be, and so falsely they have beene hitherto taken for Sacraments. First, There protest to all the godly, that I do not take in hand this contention about the name for any desiring of hearing, but that I am by weightie causes led to fight against the abuse of it. I am not ignorant that Christians are Lords, as of words, so of all things also, and therefore may at their will apply words to things, so that a godly sense be kept, although there be some unproper use in the speaking. All this I grant; although it were better that the words should be made subject to things, than things to the words. But in the name of Sacrament there is another consideration. For they which make seven Sacraments, doe therewith all glue to them all this definition, that they be visible forms of invisible grace: they make them altogether vessels of the holy Ghost; instruments of giving of righteousness, causes of the obtaining of grace. Yea and the matter of the sentences themselves denieth that the Sacraments of the law of Moses are properly called by this name, because they did not deliver in deed the thing that they figured. Is it, I beseech you, to be suffered, that those signs which the Lord hath hallowed with his owne mouth, which he hath garnished with excellent promises, should not be accounted for Sacraments; and in the mean time this honour should be conveyed away to those things which men either have devised of themselves, or at least doe obstinately without express commandment of God? Therefore either let them change the definition, or let them abstaine from the wrongfull using of this word, which doth afterward engender false opinions and full of absurdity. Extreme annoying (lay they) is a figure and cause of invisible grace, because it is a Sacrament: If we ought in no wise to grant that which they gather upon it, then truly we must refist them in the name it selfe, lest thereby we admit that it may give occasion to such an error. Again when they would pronounce it to be a Sacrament, they add this cause for that it consisteth of the outward signe and the word. If we finde neither commandment nor promise of it, what can we doe else but cry out against them?

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about the word, but doe moose a controversie not superfluous concerning the thing it selfe. Therefore this we must strongly holde fast, which we have with inuincible reason before confirmed, that the power to institute a Sacrament is in the hand of none but of God only. For a Sacrament ought with a certaine promise to rauie vp and comfort the confidences of the faithfull: which could never receiu this certainetic from man. A Sacrament ought never to be to vs a witnessing of the good will of God toward vs, wherefoene there are not such things but could not be sealed with bodily things and elements of this world, ynilce they be by the power of God framed and appointed thereunto. Therefore man cannot ordaine a Sacrament, because this is not in the power of man, to make that so great myserties of God should lie hidden under so base things. The word of God must goe before, which may a Sacrament to be a Sacrament, as Augustine very well teacheth. Moreover it is profitable that there be kept some difference betweene the Sacraments and other ceremonies, ynilce we will fall into many absurdities. The Apostles prayed kneeling:
kneeling: therefore men shall not kneele without a sacrament. It is said that the disciples prayed toward the East: therefore the looking into the East shall be a sacrament. Paul wiltheth men in every place to lift vp pure hands, & it is rehearsed that holy men oftentimes prayed with their hands lifted vp, then let the lifting vp of hands also bee made a Sacrament. Finally let all the gestures of the holy ones turne into Sacraments. Howbeit I would not also much passe upon these things, if so that they were not toyed with those other greater discommodities.

3 If they will presse vs with the authoritie of the olde Church, I say that they pretend a false colour. For this number of feuen is nowhere found among the Ecclesiastical writers: neither is it certaine at what time it first crept in. I grant indeed, that sometime they were very free in vSing the name of a sacrament: but what meane they thereby? even all ceremonies and outward rites, and all exercises of godlinece. But when they spake of those signes that ought to bee witnesses of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with these two, Baptisme, and the Supper. Least any man should thinke that I falsely boast of this, I will hence rehearse a few testimonies of Augustine. To Iamarcus he saith; First I would have thee to holde fast that which is the chiefest point of this disputation, that our Lord Christ (as he himselfe in faith in the Gospel) hath made vs subject to a light yoke and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the fellowship of the newe people with Sacraments very fewe in number, verie easie in obseruing, very excellent in signification. As are Baptisme hallowed in the name of the Trinitie, and the Communicating of the body and blood of the Lorde, and whatsoever else is set forth in the Canonical Scriptures. Againe, in his booke of Christian doctrine. Since the Lords resurrection, the Lord himselfe and the doctrine of the Apostles hath delured certaine few signes in stead of many, and those most easie to be done, most reverend in understanding, most pure in obseruing; as is Baptisme and the celebrating of the body and blood of the Lord. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of feuen? It is likely that hee would have passed it over, if it had been at that time ordained in the Church, specially sith he is otherwise in obseruing of numbers more curious then neede were? Yea, when he nameth Baptisme and the Supper, and speakest nothing of the rest: doth he not sufficiently signifie that these two mysteries do excel in singular dignitie, and that the other ceremonies do rest beneath in a lower degree? Wherefore I say that these Sacramentarie Doctors are deliure not onely of the word of the Lord, but also of the consent of the olde Church, how much more they glorifie of this pretence. But now let vs come downe to the the speciall things themselves.

Of Confirmation.

4 This was the manner in olde time, that the children of Christians, when they were growne to age of discretion should be brought before the Bishop: that they should fulfill that dutie which was required of them that being growne in yeares did offer themselves to Baptisme. For these sake among those that were to bee chiched, till being fully instructed in the mysteries of the faith, they could make a confession of their faith before the bishop and the people. Therefore they that were baptised being infantes, because they had not then made confesstion of the faith before the church, were about the end of their childhoodes or in the beginning of their yeares of discretion presented againe by their parents, and were examined of the Bishoppe according to the forme of the Catechisme, which they had then certaine and common. And that this doing, which otherwise ought worthily to bee grave and holy, might haue the more reverence and dignitie, there was added also the Ceremonie of laying on of hands. So that same childe, his faith being allowed, was let goe with solemn blessing. The old writers doe oft make mention of this manner. Leo the Pope wrioth: If any returne from Heretikes, let him not bee baptised againe (but which he wanted among the Heretikes) let the vertue of the spirite be giuen him by the Bishops laying on of his hands. Heere our aduersaries will erite out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in which the holy Ghost is giuen, but Leo himselfe doth in another place declare what he meaneth by those wordes: Who so (faith he) is baptized among heretikes, let him not be rebaptised, but with calling vpon the holy Ghost, let him be confirmed with laying on of hands: because he received onely the forme of baptism without sanctifying. Hierome also maketh mention of it, writing against the Luciferians. But although I do not denie that Hierome somewhat errreth therein, for for that he faith that it is an obligation of the Apostles: yet bee is most farre from these mens follies, and the very fame also he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this blessing is giuen to the Bishops onely, rather in honour of their priesthood than by the neede of life. Therefore such laying on of handes, which is done simple in feed of blessing, I praise and woulde that it were at this day restored to the pure use thereof.

5 But the later age having in a manner blotted out the thing it selfe, hath yet I not what faine confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They have faine that the vertue of confirmation is, to giue the holy Ghost to the encreafe of Grace, which in baptism was giuen to innocencie to strengthen them to bataille, which in baptism were newe begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annoyning, and with this forme of words, I figne thee with the signe of the holy croffe, & confirm the with the chrisme of salvation, in the name of the father, and of the foune, and of the holy Ghost. All this is gaily and trimly done. But where is the worde of God, that may promife heere the presence of the holy Ghost? They cannot bring forth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs, that their chrisme is the v Assault of the holy Ghost? We feen oyle, that it is a thicke and fat liquor and nothing else. Let the worde (faith Augustine) be added to the element, and there shall be made a Sacrament. Let them (I say) bring forth this worde, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vpon any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themselues minifters of the Sacraments, as they ought, we needed to haue no longer. This is the first lawe of a minifter, that he do nothing without commandement. Go to, let them bring forth any commandement of this point of minifttery, and I will not speake one word more. If they haue no commandement, they cannot excuse their boldnes full of sacrilege. After this manner the Lorde asked the Pharisees, whether the baptism of John were from heaven or from men; if they had answered, from men, then he had made them confess that it was trifling and vaine: if from heaven then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of John. Therefore leaff they should too much flander John, they durft not confess that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is prooued to bee vaine and trifling: if they will perswade vs that it is from heaven, let them prooue it.

6 They do indeed defend themselues with the example of the Apostles, whom they thinke haue done nothing rashly. This is well in deed: neither woulde we blame them, if they shewed themselues followers of the Apostles. But what did the Apostles? Luke reporteth in the Acts, that the apostles which were at Hierusalem, he they heard that Samaria had received the word of god, sent thither Peter & John: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receive the holy Ghost, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptized onely in the name of Iesus: when they had prayed, they laide their handes vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans received the holy Ghost. And of this laying on of hands he duers times maketh mention. I heare what the Apostles did; that is, they faithfully executed their minifterie. The Lorde willed that those visible and wonderfull graces of the holy Ghost, which he then poured out vpon his people, should be ministred and distributed of his Apostles by the laying on of handes. But under this laying on of.
of hands: I think there was not contained any higher mystery: but I expound it, that they adiouned such a ceremony, that by the very outward doing they might signify, that they commended and as it were offered to God him upon whom they laid their hands. If this ministrerie which the Apostles then executed, were yet still remaining in the Church, the laying on of hands also ought to be kept. But since that same grace hath ceas'd to be given, whereto serue both the laying on of hands? Truely the holy Ghost is yet present with the people of God, without whom being guider and director, the Church of God cannot stand. For we have the eternall promise and which shall endure in force, by which Christ calleth to himselfe them that thirst, that they may drink living waters. But those miracles of powers, and manifest workings, which were distribut'd by the laying on of hands, have ceas'd, neither behooued it that they should be but for a time. For it behooued that the preaching of the Gospell while it was new, should be gloriously set forth and magnified, with unheard of and unwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceas'd, he did not by and by forsake his Church, but taught that the royalty of his kingdom and the dignitie of his word was excellently enough disclosed. In what point therefore will these flagellayers say that they follow the Apostles? they should haue done it with laying on of hands, that the evident power of the holy Ghost might by and by new forth it selfe. This they bring not to passe: why therefore doe they boast that the laying on of hands makest for them, which we read in deed, that the Apostles saide, but altogether to an other ende?

7. This hath like reason as if a man should teach that the breathing wherewith the Lord breathed upon his Disciples, is a Sacrament whereby the holy Ghost is giuen. But whereas the Lord did this once, he did not also will that we should doe the same. After the same manner also the Apostles laide on their hands, during the time that it pleased the Lord that the visible graces of the holy Ghost should be distributed at their prayers: not that they which come after, should onely playerlike and without the thing in deed counterfeit an emptie and cold sign, as these Apes doe. But if they proue that in laying on of hands they follow the Apostles, (wherein they have no like thing with the Apostles, sauing I wote not what outwraynt wrongfull counterfeit) yet whence cometh their oyle which they call the oyle of salvation? Who taught them to seake salvation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of strengthening? Did Paul, which draweth vs farre away from elements of the world, which condemneth nothing more than the stickinge to such petty obseruations? But this I boldely pronounce not of my selfe, but from the Lord. Who saith oyle the oile of salvation, they forswear the salvation which is in Christ, they deny Christ, they have no part in the kingdom of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle, the Lord shall destroy both. For all these weake elements, which decay with very vfe, belong nothing to the kingdom of God, which is spiritual and shall never decay. What then? will some men say: doe you measure with the same measure, the water wherewith we be baptis'd, and the bread and wine vnder which the Supper of the Lord is giuen? I answere that in Sacraments giuen of God, two things are to be looke into: the substance of the bodily thing which is set before vs, and the forme that is by the word of God printed in it, wherein lieth the whole strength. In respect therefore that the bread, wine, and water that are in the Sacraments offered to our sight, doe keepe their owne substance, this saying of Paul alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God shall destroy them both. For they passe and vanish away with the fashion of this world. But in respect that they be sanctified by the word of God, that they may be Sacraments, they doe not hold vs in the flesh, but doe truely and spirittually teach vs.

8. But let vs yet more neerely looke into it, how many monsters this fat liquor fostereth and feedeth. These annotaters say, that the holy Ghost is giuen in batism,
Cap. 19. Of the outward meanes to innocencie: in confirmation, to encrease of grace: that in Baptifme, we are newe begotten into life: in confirmation, we are prepared to battle. And they are so past shame, that they deny that Baptifme can well be done without confirmation. O wickeftell! Are we not therefore in Baptifme buried together with Chrift, being made partakers of his death, that we may be also partners of his resurrection? But this fellowship with the death and life of Chrift, Paul expoundeth to bee the mortifying of our fleth, and quckning of our Spirit: for that our olde man is crucified, that we may walke in newnes of life. What is to be armed to batell if this be not? If they counted it a matter of nothing, to read vnder feette the word of God: why did they not yet at least reuerence the Churche, to whom they will in evert point feeme so obedient? But what can be brought forth more strong against their doctrine, than that decree of the Mileuitane councell? Who so faith that Baptifme is giuen only for forgiveness of sinnes, and not for a helpe of grace to come, accursed be he. But whereas Luke, in the place which we have alledged, faith that they were baptifed in the name of Jesus Chrift, which had not received the holy Ghost: he doth not simply deny that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghost, which beleuved in Chrift with hart, and confeded him with mouth: but meaneth of that receiving of the holy Ghost, whereby the open powers and visible graces were received. So is it said that the Apostles received the Spiritre on the day of Pentecost, whereas it had beene long before laid vnto them of Chrift, it is not you that speake, but the Spiritre of my Father which speake in you. Behold all ye that are of God, the malicious and poynsonous deceites of Satan. That thing which was truly giuen in baptifme, he lyingly faith to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by heathen lead you unaware from baptifme. Who now can doubt that this is the doctrine of Satan, which cutting away from baptifme the promises properly belonging to baptifme, doth contey away, and remoue them, to an other thing? It is found (I say) vpon what manner of foundation of this godly anointing standeth. The word of God is, that all they which are baptized in Chrift, have put on Chrift with his giutes. The word of the annointers is, that they received in baptifme no promise, by which they may be armed in battels. That is the voice of truth, therefore this must be the voice of lying. Therefore I can more truly define this confirmation than they haue hither defined it: namely, that it is a notable slander of baptifme, which darkeneth, ye abolishteth the vi of thereof: that it is a fale promise of the Deuill, which draweth vs away from the word of God. Or if you will, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the Deuill, which as it were by overspreading of darkenes deceueth the eyes of the simple.

9 They adde furthermore, that all the fauell ought after baptifme to receive the holy Ghost by laying on of hands, that they may be found full Christians: because he shall never be a Chriftian, that is not chrismed with the Bishops Confirmation. These be their owne sayings word for word. But I had thought that what fouer things pertained to Chriftianitie were all set forth in writing and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be sought and learned from else where than out of the Scriptures. Therefore the whole wil dome of God, the heavenly truth, the whole doctrine of Chrift, doth but beginne Chriftians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this sentence are damned all the Apostles, and so many Martyrs, whom it is most certaine to haue never beene chrismed: forasmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which being poured vpon them, they might fullfill all the parts of Chriftianitie, or rather might be made Chriftians which yet were none. But, though I hold my peace, they doe largely confute themselues. For how many of the number of their owne people doe they anoint after baptifme? why therefore doe they suffer such haile Chriftians in their flocke, whose imperfection might easily be holpen? Why doe they with so carelesse negligence suffer them to omit that which was not lawfull to be omitted without gretious offence? Why doe they no more severely call upon the keeping of a thing so necessarie, and without which salvation cannot be obtained, vnlesse peradventure some be prevented by death. Verily when they so freely suffer to be despised, they secretly confess it that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

10. Last of all they determine that this holy anointing is to be had in greater reverence than baptism: because this anointing is peculiarly ministred by the hands of the chiefe Bishops, but baptism is commonly distributed by every priest. What may a man here say, but that they are utterly mad, which so flatter their owne intentions, that in comparison of them, they carelessly despise the holy ordinances of God? O mouth that robbest God, dar'st thou set a farte liquor only defiled with the stinke of thine owne breath, and enchanted with murmuring found of words, against the Sacrament of Chrift, and to compare it with water hollowed with the word of God? But thy wickednes accounted this but a small matter, vnlesse thou didst also prefer it above the same. These be the answers of the holy sea, these be the Oracles of the Apostolike treffle. But some of them, euen in their owne opinion, begunne somewhat to qualify this vnbridled madness. It is (say they) to be worshipped with greater reverence: peradventure not for the greater vertue and profit that it glieeth: but because it is giv en of the worshiper men, and is made in the worshiper part of the body, that is, in the forehead: or because it bringeth a greater encrease of vertues, although baptism SSAU more to forgiuenesse. But in the first reason do they not betray themselves to be Donatists, which measure the force of the Sacrament by the worthines of the minister. But I will admit, that Confirmation bee called the worshiper by reason of the worthines of the Bishops hand. But if a man aske of them, from whence so great prerogative hath been given to bishops, what reason will they bring beside their owne lust? The Apostles alone vied that power, which alone distributed the holy ghost. Are the bishops alone apostles? Yea are they apostles at all? But let vs also grant them that: why do they not by the same argument affirm, that bishops alone ought to touch the Sacrament of the blood in the Supper of the Lord: which they therefore deny to lay men, because the Lord gaveto the Apostles alone? If to the Apostles alone, why do they not conclude: therefore to the bishops alone? But in that place they make the apostles, simple priests: but now the giddines of their head carrieth them another way, suddenly to create them bishops. Finally Ananias was no Apostle, to whom yet Paul was sent that he should receive his sight, be baptized, and be filled with the holy ghost. I will add this alio to the heape. If by the law of God this was the proper office of bishops, why have they been so bold to give it away to common priests? as we read in a certaine epistle of Gregorie.

11. As for their other reason, how trifling, fond, and foolish is it, to call their confirmation woorthier than the baptism of God, because in it the forehead is annointed with oyle, and in baptism the hinder part of the head, as though baptism were done with the oyle and not with the water? I call all the godly to witness, whether those loles do not endeavour themselves to this onely ende, to corrupt the purenesse of the Sacraments, with their leauen. I have already spoken this in another place, that in the Sacraments, that which is of God, scarcely glimmereth through at holes, among the route of the intentions of men. If any man did not beleue me therein, let him now at least beleue his owne masters. Lee passing over the water, and making no account of it, they highly esteeme the only oyle in baptism. Wee therefore on the contrarie side do say, that in baptism the forehead also is dipped in water. In comparison of this, we esteeme not your oyle woorth one peece of dung, whether it be in baptism or in confirmation. If any allege that it is foude for more: by this adding of price, the goodnes (if any were in it) is corrupted: so much lesse may they commend a moss filthie deceit by theft. In the third reason they betray their owne vngodliness, while they prate that in confirmation is given a greater increase.
Of the outward meanes

increase of vertues than in baptism. By the laying on of hands the Apostles distributed the visible graces of the spirit. In what thing do thes mens fit liquor shew it fells fruitfull? But away with thes qualifiers, that couer one sacrilege with many sacrileges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in sunder, than to laboure so much in vndoing it.

12 But now when they see themselves destitute of the word of God and probable reason, they pretend as they are won, that it is a most ancient observation and established by consent of many ages. Although that were true, yet they winne nothing thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but from heaven: not from men, but from God alone. They must prooue God to be the author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a sacrament. But why do they object antiquitie, whereas the old writers, when they mind to speake properly, do noe where rexon mee sacraments than two? If a forriffle of our faith were to be sought from men, we have an inuincible tower, that the old fathers never acknowledged those for sacraments which these men do lyingly fane to the sacraments. The old writers speake of the laying on of hands: but doe they call it a sacrament? Augustine plainly affirmeth that it is no other thing than praiser. Neither let them here baik against me with their stinking distinctions, that Augustine meat that not of the laying on of hands vsed to confirmation, but which was vsed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth and is abroad in the hands of men. If I vsett it to any other sense than Augustine himselfe wrote it, I gue them leave after their ordinarie maner to oppresse me not only with railing but also with spitting at me. For he speakeath of them that returned from schisme to the unity of the church. He demeth that they needed to be newly baptised: for he faith, that the laying on of hands sufficeth, that by the bonde of peace the Lord may gue them the holy Ghost. But for as much as it might seeme an abfurditie, that the laying on of hands should be done of new rather than baptism: he sheweth a difference. For (faith he) what other thing is the laying on of hands, than praiser upon a man? And that this is his meaning appeareth by another place, where he faith: Hande is laide upon Heretikes amended, for the coupling of Charitie, which is the greatest gifte of the holy Ghost, without which whatsoever holy things are in man they auale not to salvation.

13 But I would to God we did keepe still the manner which I haue saide to haue bene in the old time, before that this vntimely delivered image of a sacrament was borne: not that it should be such a confirmation as they faine, which cannot once be named without injury to baptism: but a catechising, whereby children or they that were necere to the age of discretion did declare an accompt of their faith before the Church. But it should be the best manner of Catechising, if a forme were written to that vse, containing and familiarly setting out a summe in a maner of all the articles of our religion, in which the whole Church of the faithfull ought without controversie to agree: that a child being ten yeres old should offer himselfe to the Church to declare a confession of his faith, should be examined of every article, and answer to every one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not understand it, he might be taught. So should he before the Church witnissing and beholding it, profess the only, true, and pure faith, wherewith the people of the faithfull doth with one minde worship the one God. If this discipline were at this day in force, truely the slothfulness of some parents would be whetted, who do carelessly neglect the in struction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to them, which then without open shame they could not omit: there should be among Christian people a greater content of faith, and not so great ignorance and rudenes of many: some should not be so rashly carried away with new and strange doctrines: finally all should haue as it were a certaine orderly instruction of Christian learning.
Of Penance.

14. In the next place they set Penance, of which they intreate so confusedly and disorderedly, that confences can bee away no sure or founde thing of their doctrine. We have alreadie in another place declared at large what we have learned out of the Scriptures concerning repentance, and then what they also teach of it. Nowe we have this onely to touch, what reason they had that raffed vp the opinion, which hath heeretofore reigned in Churches and Schooles, that it is a Sacrament. But first wil briefly say somewhat of the vsage of the old Church, the pretence whereof they have abused to italifie their fained invention. This order they kept in publike penance, that they which had fully done the satisfactions enjoined them, were reconciled with solemn laying on of hands. That was the signe of absolution, whereby both the penitent himselfe was raffed vp before God with trust of pardon, & the Church was admonished gentilly to receive him into favour, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Cyprian often times calleth, to give peace. That this doing might bee of great dignitie, and have more commendation among the people, it was ordained that the bishops authoritie should alway be vfed for the meane herein. From hence came that decree of the second councell at Carthage: But it not lawfull to a priest at the Maffe publikely to reconcile a penitent. And another decree of the councell at Arafuism, let those which in time of their penance depart out of this life, be admitted to the Communion without the laying on of hands vfed in the reconciling; if they recover of their sickness let them first and in the degree of penitents, & when the time is fully expired, let them receive of the bishop the laying on of hands vfed in reconciling. Againe the decree of the third councell at Carthage: Let not the priest without the authoritie of the bishop reconcile a penitent. At these tended to this end, that the feueritie which they would have to bee vfed in that behalfe, should not with too much lenitie grow to decay. Therefore they willed the bishop to bee judge of it, which was likely that he would be more circumspect in the examination thereof. Howbeit Cyprian in a certaine place calleth, that not onely the bishop, but also the whole clergie laid their hands on him. For thus he saith, At the full time they doe penance, then they come to the Communion, & by the laying on of hands of the bishop and the clergie they receive power to partake of the Communion. Afterward by prococle of time it came to this point, that beside publike penance they vfed this ceremony also in private absolutions. Heretofore came that distinction in Gratian betweene publike and private reconciliation. Iudge that same old vsage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to have bin holy and healthfull for the church; and I would that it were at this day restored. As for this latter, although I dare not disallowe it, or speake more sharply against it, yet I thinke it to bee lesse necessary. Howsoever it bee, yet wee see that the laying on of hands in penance is a ceremonie ordained of men, nor of God, which is to bee set among meane things & outward exercises: and those verily which are not to be despised, but which ought to bee in a lower degree then those that are commended vnto vs by the word of the Lord.

15. But the Romanists and Schoolemen, (which haue an ordinarie custome to corrupt all things with wrong expounding them) doe here very carefully travell in finding out a Sacrament. Neither ought it to seeme any maruell, for they feeke a knot in a rush. But where they have hit best, they leaue a thing entangled in unsense, vncertaine, and confounded and troubled with dieritie of opinions. They faie therefore that the outward penance is a Sacrament, and if it bee, that it ought to be taken for a signe of the inward penance, that is, of the contrition of hart, which shall bee the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacrament, not two Sacraments, but one full one. But, that the outward penance is onely the sacrament: then inward is both the thing and the sacrament: and that the forgivenells of sins is the thing, and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definition of a Sacrament which we have aboute fet, examine therby that wherefore men call a sacrament, and they shal finde that it is not an outward cere-monie ordeined of the Lord for the confirming of our faith. If they caull that my de-inition is not a law which they need to obey, let them heare Augustine, whom they faine that they eteeme as moxt holly. Visible Sacraments (faith he) were ordeined for carnall men's sake, that by degrees of Sacraments they may be conveyed from those things that are seene with cyes to those things that are understaund. What like thing do either they themselves fee, or can they shew to other in that which they call the sacrament of Penance? The same Augustine faith in another place: It is therefor called a Sacrament, because in it one thing is seene, and another thing is understaund.

That which is seene hath a bodily forme, that which is understaund, hath a spirituall fruit. Neither doe these things in any wise agree with the Sacrament of penance such as they faine it, where there is no bodily forme that may represent a spirituall fruit.

shall obtain the forgiveness of sins which is promised him in baptism. But that which Hierome hath spoken hardily and improperly, that by penance baptism is repaired (from which they fall away that deserre to be excommunicate from the Church) these good expostions draw to their wickedness. Therefore you shall most filly speake, if you call baptism the sacrament of penance, first it is given for a confirmation of grace, and seal of confidence, to them that purpose repentance. And least you should thynke this to be our deceive, beside this, that it agree with the words of the Scripture, it appeareth that it was in the olde Church commonly spoken like a most certaine principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is said to be Augustines, it is called the Sacrament of Faith and of penance. And why fee we to vncertaine sayings? As though we could require anything more plaine, than that which the Evangelist reciteth: that John preached the baptism of repentance vnto forgiveness of sins?

Of extreme vnction as they call it.

18 The third faine Sacrament is extreme vnction, which is not done but of the priest, and that in extremes (so they terme it) and with oile confecrate of the bishop, and with this forme: By this holy anointing, and by his most kinde mercie, God pardon thee whatsoever thou hast offended by seeing, by hearing, by smelting, flavoring, tasting. They faine that there be two virtues of it, the forgiveness of sins, and absolution of bodily sickness if it be so expedient: if not, the salvation of the soule. They say that the institution of it is set of James, whose words are these: Is any sick among you? Let him bring in the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oile in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall helpe the sicke man, and the Lord shall raise him vp: and if he be in sinnes, they shall be forgiven him. Of the same sort is this anointing, of which we have aboue shewed that the other laying on of handes is, namely a playrelike hypocrititie, whereby without reason and without fruit, they would resemble the Apostles. Mark reheareseth that the Apostles at their first anointing, according to the commandement they had receiued of the Lord, raiseth vp dead men, cast out devils, cleanseth leprous men, heals the sicke, and that in healing of the sicke they vsed oile. They anointed (faith he) many sicke men with oile, and they were healed. Hereunto James had respect, when he commanded the Elders to be called together to anoint the sicke man. That vnder such Ceremonies is contained no higher mysterie, they shall easie ly judge which mark how great libertie the Lorde and his Apostles vied in these outwared things. The Lorde going about to restore sight to the blinde man, made clay of dust and spettle, some he healed with touching, others with his word. After the same manner the Apostles healed some diseases with the word onely, some with touching, other some with anointing. And it is likely that this anointing was not (as all other things also were not) caufelyly put vp in vce, I grant: yet not that it should be a meane of healing, but onely a signe, that the dunklelly of the vnskilfull might be put in mindes from whence so great power proceeded, to this ende that they should not give the praife thereof to the Apostles. And that the holy Ghost and his gifts are signifieth by oile it is a common and vnaliue thing. But that time grace of healings is vanishe away, like as also the other miracles, which the Lorde willd to be shewed for a time, whereby he might make the new preaching of the Gospell maruellous for euere. Therefore though we grant neuer fo much, that this anointing was a sacrament of those powers which were then ministrad by the hands of the apostles, it now nothing pertaineth to vs to whom the ministration of such powers is not committed.

19 And by what greater reaflow doe they make a sacrament of this anointing, than of all other signes that are rehearsed to vs in the Scripture? Why doe they not appoint some Syloah to swim in, whereas to certaine ordinary recourses of time sicke

The anointing of the sick which was used in the time of the Apostles, no such matter as popish extreme vnction. James 5.14.

Pray not the anointing pretendedly for any physical act of miracles proper to this office? As if the Apostles said: though they might not anoint with their hands any sicke men, to recover them from sickness.

Mark.6.13. Pray for the sick, for thou shalt not neglect thy applications that thou mayest gain the approbation of God, and say: the sick should not be prayed for, unless they did return to God.

John.9.6. Where on earth did sight return? and did not? Math.10.3. etc. to con Luke.18.43. at times.

Sick man: incontinence to think the sickness words had no use in miracles, and are not worth their power.
Cap. 19. Of the outward meanes

Sick men may plunge themselves? That (say they) should be done in vaine. Truly no more in vaine than anointing. Why do they not lie along upon dead men, because Paul raised vp a dead childe with lying upon him? Why is not clay made of spittle and dust, a Sacrament? But the other were but singular examples: but this is gien of Iohn. 1. 32. Verily Iesu spake for the same time, when the Church yet full enjoyed such blessing of God. They affirm in deed, that there is yet full the same force in their anointing: But we finde it otherwise by experience. Let no man now marvel, how they have with such boldnesse mocked foules, which they know to beamen and blind, when they are spoiled of the word of God, that is, of their life and light: fis they are nothing ashamed to goe about to mock the living and feeling fenes of the bodie. Therefore they make themselves worthie to be scorned, while they boast that they are endued with the grace of healings. The Lord verily is present with his in all ages, and so oft as need is he helpeth their sicknesse with less than in olde time: but he doth not vto those manifest powers, nor distributeth miracles by the hands of the Apostles: because this gift both was but for a time, and also is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulness of men.

Therefore as not without cause the Apostles haue by the signe of oile openly testified, that the grace of healings committed to them was not their owne power, but the power of the holy Ghoft: so on the other side they are wrongdoers to the holy Ghoft, which make a stinking oile and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether as if one would say that all oile is the power of the holy Ghoft, because it is called by that name in Scripture: that every one is the holy Ghoft, because he appeared in that forme. But these things let them looke too. So much as for this present is enough for vs, we doe most certainly perceive that their anointing is no Sacrament: which is neither a Ceremonie ordained of God, nor hath any promise. For when we require these two things in a Sacrament, that it be a ceremone ordained of God, and that it haue a promise of God: we doe therewithall require that the same ceremone be giuen to vs, and that the promise belong vnto vs. For no man doth assume that Circumcision is now a Sacrament of the Christian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promise knit vnto it: because it was neither commanded to vs, nor the promise which was adjoynd to it was giuen to vs with the same condition. That the promise which they strongly boast of in their anointing, is not giuen to vs, we haue evidently shewed, and they themselues declare by experience. The Ceremonie ought not to haue bene vse, but of them that were endued with the grace of healings, not of these butchers that can more skill of slaying and murthering than of healing.

If S. James did command anointing as a thing to continue in the Church, yet not anointing at such uneasonable time, by such persons, with such oile, in such perswasion, as the Church of Rome vsed. Lam. 5. 14.

21. Howbeit although they obtaine this, that that which James commanded concerning anointing, agreeith with this age (which they are most farre from) yet even so they shall not haue much prevailed in proving of their vction wherevther they haue hitherto anointed vs. James willeth that all sick men be anointed: these men infect with their fat liqour, not sick men, but corpses halfe dead, when the life lieth already labouring at the top of their lips, or (as they themselues terme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a present medicine, whereby they may either ease the sharpenesse of diseases, or at least may bring some comfort to the soule, they are too cruel that doe never heale in time. James willeth that the sicke man be anointed of the elders of the Church: these men allowe no anointer but the pietie sacrificing Priest. Whereas they expound in James presbyteros the Elders to be Priestes, and fondly say that the plural number is there set for commoditie sake, that is but trifling; as though the churches at that time abounded with swarms of sacrificing Priestes, that they might goe in a long pompos shew to carry a pageant of holy oile. When James simply biddeth that sick men be anointed, I understand by it none other anointing but of common oile: and none other is founde in Markes.
Markes rehearfol. These men vouchsafe to have none other oile, but that which is hallowed of the Bishop, that is to say, warmed with much breathing on it, enchanted with much mumbling, and with the knee bowed nine times saluted in this manner: thrice haile holy oile; thrice haile holy christine: thrice haile holy balme. Out of whom have they sucked such coniurations? Iames faith: that when the sicke man is annointed with oile, and priauer hath bene pronounced over him, if he be in sinnes they shall be forgiven him: namely, that the guiltinesse being taken away, they may obtaine release of the paine: not meaning that sinnes are put away with fat liquor, but that the praiers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God, shall not be vaine. These men doe wickedly lie, that by their holy, that is to say, abominable anointing, sinnes are forgiven. Loe howe gaily they shall preuaile, when they have bene at large suffered to abuse the testimonie of Iames at their pleasure. And leaf we should neede to trauell long in proofe hereof, their owne chronicles doe discharge vs of this hardnesse. For they report that Pope Innocentius which in Augustins time governed the Church of Rome, ordained that not only priesters, but also all Christians should vse oile to annoint for their necessitie and others. Autor hereof is Sigebert in his Chronicles.

Of Ecclesiasticall Orders.

22. The fourth place in their register hath the Sacrament of Order, but the same so fruitfull, that it breedeth out of it selue seven little Sacraments. But this is very woorthe to be laughed at, that whereas they affirme that there be seven Sacraments, when they goe about to rehearse them, they reckon vp thirtene. Neither can they allege for themselves, that they are but one Sacrament, because they tend all to one priesthood, and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it. For such it is evident that in every one of them are seuerall Ceremonies, and they themselves say that there bee divers graces: no man can doubt but that they ought to be called seven Sacraments, if their opinions be received. And why shal we about it as though it were a thing doubtfull, for as much as they themselves doe plainly and severally declare seven? But first we will briefly knit vp by the way, how many and how vnauntur absurdities they thrust vnsto vs, when they goe about to commence to vs their Orders in stead of Sacraments: and then we will see whether the Ceremonie which Churches vse in ordering of Ministers, ought to be called a Sacrament at all. They make there- Lib.4. Sen. diff. fore seven Ecclesiasticall orders or degrees, which they gcommon with the name of a 34.cap.9. Sacrament. Those be doorekeepers, Readers, Exorcistes, Acouluthes or followers, Subdeacons, Deacons, Priesters. And seven they say that they be, for the seuenfold grace of the Holy Ghost, wherewith they ought to be endued that are promoted vnto them. But it is increased and more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Now the number it selu is hallowed with a wrongfull expounding of Scripture, when they thinke that they have read in Esay seven verses of the holy Ghost, whereas both in deede Esay there rehearseth but fixe, and also the Prophet meant not to comprehend them all in that place: for he is else where as well called the Spirit of life, of sanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirit of wise-dome, of understanding, of counsell, of strength, of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord. Howbeit some sufferer men make not seven orders, but nine, after the like-nesse (as they say) of the Church triumphant. But among them also there is Irisme: because some would have the hauing of the Cleargie to bee the first order of all, and Bishopricke the laft: other some excludinge hauing altogether, reckon Archbishopricke among the orders. Ifdore otherwise divideth them. For he maketh psalmists and Readers to be diuers: he appointeth the psalmists for songs, and the Readers to the reading of the Scriptures, wherewith the people may be instructed. And this distinction is kept by the Canons. Inso great diuerfitie what will they haue vs to follow follow or flee? Shall we say that there be seaven orders? So teacheth the master of the schoole: but the most illuminate doctors do otherwise determine. Againe they also disagree among themselves. Moreover the most sacred Canons call vs another way. Thus forsooth do men agree, when they dispute of godly matters without the word of God.

23 But this exceedeth all sille, that in every one of these they make Christ fellow with them. First (say they) he executed the office of dore-keeper, when he did with a whip made of cords, drue the buiers and sellers out of the temple. He signifieth himselfe to be a dorekeeper, when he saith, I am the dore. He tooke upon him the office of Reader, when he read Jesty in the Synagogue. He did the office of an Exorcist, when touching the toong and cares of the deafe and dumbme man, he restored to him his hearing. He teftified himselfe to be an Acoluth or follower in these words. He that followeth me walketh not in darkness. He executed the office of Subdeacon, when being girded with a linnen cloth he washed the disciples feete. He did beare the person of a Deacon, when he distributed his body and bloud in the Supper. He fulfilled the office of Priest, when he offered himselfe upon the croffe a sacrifice to his Father. These things cannot so be heard without laughing, that I maruell that they were written without laughing, if yet they were men that wrote them. Burmote notable is their subtletrie wherewith they plate the Philosophers about the name of Acoluth, calling him a Ceruser, a taper bearer with a wordse (as I thinke) of sorcerie, truly such a one as was never heard of in all nations and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greeke simpil signifieth a follower. Howbeit if I should earnestly tarry in confuting these men, I should my selfe also worthily be laughe at, they are so trifling and vene mockeries.

24 But that they may not be able yet still with false colours to deceiue euen very silly women, their vanitie is by the way to be vterted. They create with great pompe and solemnitie their Readers, Psalmists, Dorekeepers, Acoluthes, to execue those offices, whereunto they appoint very children, or those whom they call lay men. For who for the most part lightoth the candles, who poureth wine and water into the cruets, but a childe or some base fellowe of the laitte, that maketh his gaine thereupon? Doth not the same men sing, Do they not shut and open the church dores? For who euer saw in their temples an Acoluth, or a Dorekeeper executing his office? But rather he that when he was a boy did the office of an Acoluth, when he is once admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceaseth to be that which he beginneth to bee called, that they may seeme to will of purpose to cast off the office when they take upon them the title. Behold why they have need to be consecrate by Sacraments, to receive the holy Ghost, namely, that they may do nothing. If they allege for excuse, that this is the frowardnes of times, that they forfake and neglect their ministreries: let them therewithall confesse that there is at this day in the church no more fruit of their holy orders, which they maruellously advance, and that their whole Church is full of curte: because it suffereth tapes and cruets to be handled of children and prophane men, which none are worthy to touch but they that are consecrate Acoluthes: and because it committeth the songs to children, which ought not to be heard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorcists, to what end do they consecrate them? I heare that the Iewes had their Exorcists: but I fee that they were so called of the exorcisms or conjurations which they vfed. Of these counterfeit exorcistes who euer heard it spoken, that they shewed any example of their profession? It is fained that they have power given them to lay their hands vpon mad men, them that are to be catechized, and men polluted with diuels: but they cannot persuade the diuels that they have such power, because the diuels do not onely not yeeld to their commandements, but also vfe commanding authoritie over them. For a man can scarce finde euery tenth of them, that is not ledde with an euill Spire.
Spirite. Therefore whatsoever things they babble concerning their pettie Orders, they are patched together of foolish and vnfaulorie lies. Of the old Acoluthes, and Doorekeepers, and Readers, we have spoken in another place, when we declared the order of the Church. Our purpose here is onely to fight against that new found invention of the feuenfold sacrament in Ecclesiastical orders. Of which there is no where any thing read, but among these foolish praters the Sorbonists and Cancristes.

25 Now let vs consider of the ceremonies which they use about it. First whomsoever they receive into their order of Soldiers, they doe with one common signe enter them into Clergie. For they shewe them in the crowne, that the crowne may be known kingly dignifie, because Clerks ought to be kings, that they may rule themselves and other. For Peter speaketh thus of them, Yee are a chosen kinde, a kingly priesthood, a holy nation, a people of purchase. But it was sacrilege to take to themselues alone that which is given to the whole Church, and proudly to shew the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter speaketh to the whole Church: these fellowes wret it to a fewe thauen men: as though it were said to them alone: be ye holy: as though they alone were purchased by the blood of Christ: as though they alone were by Christ made a kingdome and priesthood to God. Then they assigne also other reasons: the top of their head is made bare, that their minde may be declared to be free unto the Lord, which with open face may behold the glorie of God. Or that they may be taught, that the faultes of their mouth and their eyes must be cut off: Or the shewing of their head is the putting away of temporall things, and the hairie comphate about the crowne are the remnantes of goods that are retained for their sustenance. All in signes: because forsooth the veile of the temple is not yet cut in sunder. Therefore being persuaded that they have gaily discharged their duties, because they have figured such things by their crowne, of the very things indeede they performe nothing at all. How long will they mocke vs with such false colours and deceites? The Clergie by shewing off a fewe hairies doe signifie that they have cast away the abundance of temporall goods, that they beholde the glorie of God, that they have mortified the lust of the cares and eies: but there is no kind of men more rauing, more foolishly dull, more luftfull. Why doe they not rather truly performe holiness, than with false and lying signes counterfeit a shew of it?

25 Moroweit when they say that the crowne of the Clergie hath the beginning and reason from the Nazarees: what other thing doe they allege than that their mysteries are sprung out of the Iewis ceremonies, or rather that they are meerie Iewishlinesse? But whereas they further say, that Prisella, Aelia, and Paul himselfe, taking a vow upon them did shewe their heads, that they might be purifie: they bewray their grosse ignorance. For it is no where read of Prisella and of Aelia alio it is doubtfull: for that same hearing may as well be referred to Paul as to Aelia. But, that we may not leave to them that which they require, that they have an example of Paul: the simplier must note, that Paul did never shew his head for any sanctification, but only to servue the weakeenesse of his brethren. I am woont to eschew the vowe of charity not of godliness: that is to say, not taken in hand for any favour of God, but to beare with the weaknesse of the weake: as he himselfe faith, that he was made a Lew to the Iewes, &c. Therefore he did this, and the same but once, and for a short time, that he might for a time fashion himselfe to the Iewes. These men when they will without any sicke counterfeit the purifying of the Nazarees, what doe they else but counterfeit another Iewishlinesse, when they wrongfully conte to follow the olde Iewishlinesse? With the same religionallnesse was that decretall Epistle made, which according to the Apostle, forbade the clearkes that they should not suffer their hair to growe, but there to round like a bowlie. As though the Apostle, when he teacheth what is comely for all men, were carefull for the round shearing of the Clergie. Hereby let the readers consider, of what force and woorthinellse are those other mysteries that

Cap. 19. Of the outward means.

The first occasion of the hearing in the Clergy, the delusion of kiers unto doorekeepers, the Bible unto readers, the forms of exorcism unto exorcists, of aper and cruets unto Acologists.

The order of Priesthood successively to Christ.

27 Whence the shearing of Clerkstook beginning, appeareth sufficiently even by Augustine alone. Whereas at that time none suffered their hair to grow, but nice men, and such as counted a sinnefull and trimmings not meete enough for men: it seemed to be a point of no good example, if that were permitted to the clergy. Therefore Clerks were commanded either to sheare their head or to shawe it, that they should not beare any shew of womanlike trimming. But this was so common, that certaine Monkes, that they might the more set out their holinesse with notable and seuerall attire from other men, did let their hair grow long. But afterward when the fashion turned to wearing of haire, and certaine nations were added to Christian-dome which alwayes beare long haire, as France, Germanie, and England: it is likely that clerks did euerie where shawe their heads, least they shoule seeme to couete the gaines of haire. At the last in a corrupter age, when all old ordinances were either perverted or gone out of kind into superstition, because they saw no cause in the shearing of the clerks (for they had retained nothing but a foolish counterfacing) they fled to a mysterie, which now they superstitiously thrust in vnto vs for the approoving of their Sacrament. Doorekeepers at their consecration receive the keys of the Church, whereby they may understand that the keeping of it is committed to them. The readers receive the holy Bible. The exorcists receive the forms of exorcisms, which they shoule vfe outer mad and them that are to be catechized. The Acololues receive their tapers and cruets. Lo, these are the ceremonies wherein (if God will) there is so much secret power, that they may be not only fignes and tokens, but also causes of insuillible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will have them taken among the sacraments. But to make an end in few words, I say it is an absurditie that in their schooles and canons they make these lesser orders Sacraments: whereas even by their owne confession that each this, they were vnsownen to the primitie Church, and deuised many yeres after. For sacraments, fith they containe the promise of God, cannot bee ordained of Angels, nor of men, but of God alone, whose office alone it is to give promise.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Sub-deaconrie (as they call it) was remoued into that number, since that the route of the smaller ones beganne to grow. But because they seeme to have a testimonie for these out of the word of God, they do peculiarly for honors sake, call them holy orders. But now it is to be seene, how crookedly they abuse the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will beginne at the order of the priesthood or the sacrificers office. For by these two names they signifie one thing, and so they call them to whom they say it pertaineth to offer vpon the altar the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ, to pronounce prayers, and to blisse the gifts of God. Therefore at their consecration they receive the patine with the hostes, for tokens of power given to them, to offer acceptable sacrifices to God. And their hands are appointed: by which signe they are taught, that they have power given them to consecrate. But of the Ceremonies we shall speake hereafter. Of the thing it selfe I say: it hath no title of the word of God which they pretend, that they could not more wickedly corrupt the order set by God. First verily this ought to stande for a thing confessed (which we have affirmed in entreating of the Popilh Masse) that they are all wrong doers to Christ, which call themselves sacrificers priestes, or offer a sacrifice of appeafilement. He was appointed and consecrate of the Father a priest with an oath, according to the order of Melchisedech,without any end, without any successour. He once offered a sacrifice of eternall satisfactorie cleansing, and reconciliation: and nowe also being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, he maketh intercession for vs, In him we are all sacrificing priestes, but to praises and giunings of thankes, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his singular office alone, with his offering to appease God, and and to purge sinnes. When these men take that upon them, what remaineth but that their sacrificing Priesthood is vngodly and full of sacrilege? Truely they are too wicked, when they dare garnish it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Priesthood, which is commended to vs by the mouth of Christ, I willingly account it in that degree. For therein is a ceremony, first taken out of the Scriptures, then fitted a one as Paul testifieth not to be vain nor superfluous, but a faithful signe of spirituall grace. But where as I have not yet it for a third in the number of Sacraments, I did it because it is not ordinarie and common among all the faithfull, but a speciall rite for one certaine office. But this honor is given to the Christian minstrie, there is no cause therefore why the Popish sacrificers should be proude. For Christ commanded distributers of his Gospell and mysteries to be ordered, not sacrificers to be consecrated. He gave them commandement to preach the Gospell and to feede the flocke, not to offer sacrificers. He promised them the grace of the Holy Ghost, not to make satisfactorie purging of sinnes, but rightly to execute and to maintaine the governement of the Church.

29 The ceremonies agree very well with the thing itselfe. Our Lord when he sent foorth the Apostles to preach the Gospell, did blow vpon them. By which signe he represented the power of the holy Ghost which he gav unto them. This blowing of these good men haue retained, and as though they did put foorth the holy Ghost out at their throate, they whisper ouer their silly Priestes that they make. Receive the holy Ghost. So leaue they nothing which they doe not outwardly counterfaite: I will not say like players (which whe their gesturings neither without art nor without signification) but like Apes, which counterfaite every thing wantonly and without any choice. We keepe (say they) the example of the Lord. But the Lord did many things which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lord said to the Disciples, Receive the holy Ghost. He said alio to Lazarus, Lazarus come foorth. He said to the Man sickle of the Palsie, Rize, and walke. Why doe not they say the same to all dead men and sickle of the Palsie? He shewed a proofe of his divine power, when in blowing vpon the Apostles he filled them with the grace of the holy Ghost. If they goe about to doe the same thing, they enuously counterfaite God, and doe in a manner chalenge him to trie with them: but they are farre from the effect, and doe nothing with this foolish gesturing but mocke Christ. Venile they be so shamelesse, that they dare affirme that they give the holy Ghost. But how true that is, experience teacheth, which crieth our that so many as be consecrated Priestes are of Horses made Asses, of fools made mad men. Neither yet doe I trie with them for that: only I condemne the ceremony it selfe, which ought not to have beene drawne to be an example, forasmuch as it was vsed of Christ for a singular signe of one myracle: so farre is it off, that the excuse of following his example ought to defend them.

30 But of whom receiued they the anointing? They answer that they received it of the Sonnes of Aaron, from whom their order also tooke beginning. Therefore they had rather alway to defend themselves with wrongfull examples, than to confesse that themselves haue densified that which they vse without cause. But in the mean time they consider not, that while they professe themselves the sucessors of the Sonnes of Aaron, they are wrong doers of the Priesthood of Christ, which alone was shadowed and figured by all the old sacrificing Priesthoodes. In him therefore they were all contained and fulfilled, in him they ceasid, as we have sometimes already repeated, and the Epistle to the Hebrews without helpe of any gestures testifieth. But if they be so much delified with the ceremonies of Moses, why doe they not hastily take Oxen, Calues, and Lambes to make sacrificers? They haue in deede a good part of the olde tabernacle and of the whole Jewish manner of worshipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they doe not sacrifice calues & oxen. Who cannot see, that this obstinatation of anointing is much more hurtfull than Circumcision.
Of the outward means of sanctification, specially when there is adjoined superstition and Pharisaical opinion of the worthines of the works. For the Jews did set in Circumcision, trust of righteousness: these men do set in anointing, spiritual grace. Therefore while they count to be counterfeiters of the Levites, they are made Apostates from Christ, and do put themselves from the office of Priests.

This is (if God will) the holy oyle that pricketh the marks that cannot be rased out. As though oyle could not be wiped away with dust and salt, or if it stick faster, with hope. But this mark is spiritual. What hath oyle to do with the Soul? Have they forgotten that which they oft chaunt to vs out of Augustine, that the word be taken from the water, it shall be nothing but water, and that it hath this from the word that it is a Sacrament? What word will they shew in their fat liquor? Will they shew the commandment that was given to Moses, concerning the anointing of the fonnes of Aaron? But there is also commandment given, of the coate, the ephod, the hat, the crown of holines, with which Aaron was to be garrained, and of the coates, girdles, and mitres, whereof the fonnes of Aaron were to be clothed. There is commandment given, to kill a Calf, and burne the fat of him for incense, to cut rammes and burne them, to sanctifie their ears and garments with the blood of another ram, and innumerable other observations, which being pass'd over, I maruell why the onely anointing of oyle pleaseth them. But if they love to be sprinkled, why are they rather sprinkled with oyle than with blood? Forsooth they goe about a witty thing, to make one religion of Christianitie, Jewishness, and pagonisme, as it were of patches fow'd together. Therefore their anointing finketh which is without the salt, that is, the word of God. There remaineth laying on of hands, which as I graunt in true and lawfull Orderings to be a Sacrament, so I deny that it hath any part in this place, where they neither obey the commandment of Christ, nor have respect to the ende whereunto the promise ought to lead vs. If they will not have the signe denied them, they must applic it to the thing itselfe, whereunto it is appointed.

About the order also of Deaconrie I would not strive with them, if that same ministerie which was in the Apostles time and in the purer Church, were restored to the uncorrupte state thereof. But what like thing have they whom those men faine to be Deacons? I speake not of the men (leaff they should complain that the doctrine is wrongfully weighed by the faultes of the men) but I affirme that for those whom they deliver vs by their doctrine, they most worthily fetch testimonie from the example of them whom the Apostolike Church ordained Deacons. They say that it pertaineth to their Deacons to stand by the Priests, to minister in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namely in Baptisme, in the Chresme, in the Patine, in the Chalice: to bring in the offerings and lay them upon the Altar, to make ready the Lords table, and to cover it: to carry the Croffe, to pronounce and sing the Gospel and Epistle to the people. Is there any one word of the true ministerie of Deacons? Now let vs heare the instituting of them. Upon the Deacon that is ordered, the Bishop alone laieth his hand. He laueth a prayer booke and a Stoale upon his left shoulder, that he may understand that he hath receiued the light yoke of the Lord, whereby he may subdue to the feate of God those things that pertaine to the left side. He giueth him the text of the Gospel, that he may perceiue himselfe to be a publisher oft. And what belong these things to Deacons? They doe even like as if a man would say that he ordened them Apostles whom he appointed onely to burne frankincense, to trimme the images, to swepe the Churches, to catche mice, to drive away dogges. Who could suffer such kind of men to be called Apostiles, and to be compared with the very Apostles of Christ? Therefore let them not hereafter lyingly say that those be Deacons, whom they intitulate onely for their entertainelike plaines. Yea and by the very name itselfe they suficiently declare what manner maner of office they haue. For they cal them Leuites, and will haue their order and beginning referred to the children of Leuit. Which I give them leave to do, so that they do not afterwaurs garnish them with the fethers of other.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpose is it to speake? For whereas indeed they were in old time appointed for care of the poore, they alligne to them I wot not what trifling businesse, as to bring the chalice and the patine, the little cruet with water, and the towel to the altar, to powere water to wash hands,... Now where as they speake of receuing and bringing in of offerings, they meane those which they dume as abandoned to their holy vfe. With this office very well agreeeth the forme of their consecrating. That he receve of the bishop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruet with water, the manuale, and such other baggage. Within these trifles they require to haue vs confesse that the holy ghoft is enclosed. What godly man can abide to graunt this? But to make once an ende, we may determine the fame of them that we do of the rest. Neither need we to reape further these things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the fober and willing to leaue (whom I haue taken in hand to instruct) that there is no Sacrament of God but where is shewed a Ceremonie joined with a promife: or rather verily but where is a promife seen in a Ceremonie. Here is not found one syllable of any certaine promife: therefore it were in vaine to seeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promife. Againe of those Ceremonies that vfe, it is not read that any one is instituted of God. Therefore heere can be no Sacrament.

Of Matrimonic.

34 The last is Matrimonic, which as all men confesse to be ordained of God, so no man vontill the time of Gregorie ever sawe that it was given for a Sacrament. And what sober man would ever have thought it? It is a good and a holy ordinance of God, so village, carpentrie, shoemakeres craft, barbers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacraments. For there is not only this required in a Sacrament, that it be the worke of God, but that it be an outward Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promife. That there is no such thing in Matrimonic, very children also can judge. But (say they) it is a signe of the holy thing, that is, of the spirituall confirminge of Christ with the Church. If by this word Signe, they understand a Token before vs of God to this end to raise vp the assurednes of our faith, they are far beside the truth. If they simply take a signe for that which is brought to expresse a fimilitude, I will shew how vitually they reason. Paul faith, As one star different from an other starre in brightnes, so shall be the resurrection of the dead. Loe here is one Sacrament. Christ faith, The kingdom of heauen is like a graine of mustard seede. Loe here is another. Againe, The kingdom of heauen is like vnto leauen. Loe here is the third. Esay faith, Behold, the Lord shall feed his flocke as a shepheard. Loe here the fourth. In another place, The Lord shall goe forth as a Giant. Loe here is the fifth. Finally what end or measure shall there be? There is nothing but by this means it shall be a Sacrament. How many parables and similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacraments there shall be. Yet and thefe shall be a Sacrament because it is written, the day of the Lord is like a thief. Who can abide thefe sophisters prating so foolishly? I graunt in deede that so oft as we see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrance that which Christ faith, I am a vine, ye be branches, my Father is the vine-dreffer. So oft as a shepheard with his flock commeth toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepheard, my sheepe heare my voice. But if any man addde such similitudes to the number of Sacraments, hee is meete to be sent to Anticyr (

35 But they full lay foorth the worde of Paul, in which he giueth to matrimonic the name of a Sacrament: he that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man ever hated his owne fleth, but nourisheth it and cheriseth it, even as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his body, of his fleth and of his bones. For this a man shall leave his Father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and they shall be two in one fleth. This is a great sacrament: but I say in Christ and in the Church. But to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heaven and earth together. Paul, to shew to married men what singular love they ought to have to beare to their wives, setteth forth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured forth the bowels of his kindness upon the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought every man to be affecti-ted toward his owne wife. It followeth after, he that loueth his wife loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Now to teach how Christ loued the church as himselfe, yea how he made himselfe one with his spouse the church, he applieth to him those things which Moses reporteth that Adam lpake of himselfe. For when Eve was brought into his sight, whom he knew to have been shapen out of his side: This woman (fith he) is a bone of my bones, and fleth of my fleth. Paul teacheth that all this was spiritually fulfilled in Christ: and when he faith that we are members of his body, of his fleth, and of his bones, yea and one fleth with him. At length he addeth a concluding, sentence, This is a great mysterie. And least any man should be deceived with the double signifying of the words, he expresseth that he speaketh not of the fisally con-joyning of man and woman, but of the spiruall mariange of Christ and the Church. And truly it is indeed a great mysterie, that Christ suffered a ribbe to be taken from himselfe, whereof we might be shapen: that is to say, when he was strong, he willed to be weake, that we might be strengthened with his strength: that now we may not our felues live, but he may lye in vs.

36 The name of Sacrament deceived them. But was it rightfull that the whole Church should suffer the punishment of their ignorance? Paul sayde Mysterie: which word when the translator might have left being not vned with Latin cares, or might have translated it a Secret: he chose rather to put in the word Sacrament, yet in no other senfe then Paul had in Greeke called it mysterie. Now let them goe and with crying oare against the skill of toongs, by ignorance whereof they have so long most bowly been blinde in an easie matter, and such as offereth it selfe to be perceiued of euere man. But why do they in this one place so earnestly fliecke upon this little word Sacrament, and some other times do paffe it ouer vregarded? For also in the first Epistle to Timothie the Translatore hath vsed it, and in the selfe same Epistle to the Ephesians: in euerie place for mysterie. But lett this slipping be pardoned them: at leaft the lyrers ought to have had a good remembrance. For, when they haue once set out Matrimonie with title of a Sacrament, afterwarde to call it vnclaneffe, de-line, and fleshly filthineffe, how giddy lightneffe is this? how great an absurdtie is it to debarre prieffes from a Sacrament? If they denye that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the luft of copulation: they escape not so away from me. For they teach that the copulation it selfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the uniting that we have with Christ in conformitie of nature: because man and woman are not made one but by carnall copulation. Howbeit some of them haue heere found two Sacraments: the one of God and the soule, in the betrothed man and woman: the other of Christ and the Church, in the husband and the wife. How-soever it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it is vnlawfull that any Christian should be debarred: Vnlesse peraduenture the Sacraments of Christians do so ill agree,that they cannot stand together. There is also another absurdite in their doc-times. They affirme that in the Sacrament is given the grace of the holy Ghost: they teach that copulation is a sacrament: and they deny that at copulation the holy ghost is at any time present.

37 And because they would not simply mocke the Church, how long a Rowe of errours, lies, deceites, and wickednesse haue they knihte to one errour? So that a man may say, that they did nothing but seek a Deane of abominations, when they made of Matrimony a Sacrament. For when they once obtained this, they drew to themselves the hearing of caules of Matrimony: for it was a spirituall matter, which prophane Judges might not meddle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they stabilishd their tyranny, but those partly manifestly wicked against God, and partly most vnust toward men. As are these: That marraiges made betwene young persons without consent of their parents, should remaine of force and stabilishd, that the marraiges be not lawfull betwene the kindesolk to the seuenthe degree: and if any such be made, that they be divorced. And the very degrees they taine against the lawes of all nations, and against the ciuill gouverment of Moses. That it be not lawfull for a man that hath put away an adulteresse, to marry an other. That spirituall kindesolk may not be coupled in marraige. That there be no marraiges celebrate, from Septuagefime to the vs of Easter, in three weeks before Midsummer, nor from Advent, to Twelfteide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to rehearse. At length we must creepe out of their mire, wherein our talke hath now tarryed longer than I would. Yet I thinke I have somewhat profited that I have partly plucked the Lyons skinner from these Aflses.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Ciuill gouverment.

Now whereas we have aboue set two kindes of gouverment in man, and where- as we have spoken enough of the one kind, which consisteth in the Soule or in the inward man, and hath respect to eternall life: this place requireth that we speake somewhat also of the other, which pertaineth onely to the ciuill & outwarde righteousness of manners. For the course of this matter feemeth to be seuered from the spirituall doctrine of Faith, which I tooke in hand to entreat of: yet the proceeding shall shew that I doe rightfully ioyned them together, yea that I am of necessitie compelled to doe it: specially sith on the one side, madde and barbarous men doe furiously goe about to overthrow this order stabilishd by GOD: and on the other side the flatterers of Princes, aduancing their power without measure, sticke not to set it against the Empire of God himselfe. Vnlesse both these mischiefes be met withall, the pureneffe of Faith shall be lost. Beside that it is not finally for our behoove, to know how loving God hath in this behalfe provided for mankinde, that there may flourish in vs a greater desire of godlineffe to witnesse our thankfullnes. Frist, we erect into the thing it selfe, we must holde fast that distinction which we have aboue set, lest (as it commonly happeneth to many) we vnwisely mingle these two things together, which have altogether diverse consideracon. For when they heare that libertie is promisde by the Gospell, which acknowledgeth among men no King and no Magistrate, but hath regard to Christ alone: they thinke that they can take no fruite of their libertie, so long as they see any power to haue preeminence ouer them. Therefore they thinke that nothing shall be safe, vnlesse the whole world be reformed into a newe fashion: where may neither be Judgements, nor Lawes, nor Magistrates, nor any fuch thing which they thinke to withstande their libertie. But who so ever can put difference betwene the body and the Soule, betwene this present and transtitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: he shall not hardly understand that the spirituall kingdom of Christ, and the ciuill governemnt are things farre a funder. Sith therefore that is a Jewish vanitie, to seeke & inclose the kingdom of Christ vnder the elements of the world: let vs rather thinking, as the Scripture plainly teacheth, that it is a spirituall fruite, which is gathered of the benefite of Christ, remember to keepe within the bonds thereof this whole libertie which is promised

and offered vs in him. For what is the cause why the same Apostle which biddeth vs to stand, and not to be made subject to the yoke of bondage, in another place forbidth bond servants to be carefull of their state; but because spiritual libertie may very well agree with ciuall bondage? In which sense also these his sayings are to be taken: In the kingdom of God there is no Iewe, nor Grecian, no male, nor female, no bondman, nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iew nor Grecian, Circumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freeman: but Christ is all in all. Whereby he signifieth, that it maketh no matter in what estate thou be among men, nor under the lawes of what nation thou luell: forasmuch as in these things consisteth not the kingdom of Christ.

2 Yet doth not this distinction tende hereunto, that we should think that the whole order of policie is an vnclene thing, nor pertaining at all to Christian men. So indeed doe the phrenitike men, which are delighted with unbridled licenciousnes, erie out and boast. For such we be dead by Christ to the elements of the world, and being remoued into the kingdom of God doe sit among the heavenly ones: they think that it is unworthy for vs, and farre beneath our excellence, to be occupie with these prophane and vnclene cares that are busied about affairs not pertaining to a Christian man. To what purpose (by they) are lawes without judgements and judgementes? But what hath a Christian man to doe with judgementes and lawes? yea if it be not lawfull to kill, whereo serue lawes and judgementes among vs? But as we haue euin now gien warning, that this kinde of government is severall from that spiritual and inward kingdom of Christ: so it is also to be known, that they nothing disagree together. For the Ciuill government doth now beginne in vs upon earth certaine beginnings of the heavenly kingdom, and in this mortall and vanishing life, doth as it were enter upon an immortall and incorruptible blessednesse: but the intent of his spiritual government is, so long as we shall live among men, to cherish and maintaine the outward worshipping of God, to defend the sound doctrine of Godlinessse and the stat of the Church, to frame our life to the fellowship of men, to fashion our manners to ciuill righteousnesse, to procure vs into friendship one with another, to nourish common peace and quietnes: all which I grant to be superfluous, if the kingdom of God, such as it is now among vs doe destroy this present life. But if the will of God be so, that we while we long toward the heavenly countrey, should be wayfaring from home vpone the earth: and such the vs. of such wayfaring neeth such helpe: they which take them from man, doe take from him his very nature of man. For whereas they alledge, that there is no great perfection in the Church of God, that hee own moderate government sufficeth ior lawe: they themselues doe foolishly imagine that perfection which can never be found in the common fellowship of men. For such as haue dominated the pride is so great, and the wickednesse so obstinate, as cannot be restrained with great sharpnesse of lawes: what thinke we that they will doe, if they see unpunished libertie open to their lewdnesse, which cannot even with force be sufficiently compelled not to doe euill.

3 But of the order of policie, there shall be an other fitter place to entreate. Now our meaning is to have this only understood, that to thinke to drive it away, is outrageous barbarousnesse, the view whereof is no lesse among men, than of bread, water, the Shane, and aire, but the dignitie much more excellent. For it tendeth not only hereunto (which is the only commonitie of all those things) that men may breath, eate, drinke and be refreshed (although in deede it comprehended all these things, while it maketh that they live together) yet I say, it tendeth not herewith: but also that idolatrie, sacrileges against the name of God, blasphemies against his truth, and other offences of religion may not vs: vs and be scattered among the people, that common quiet be not troubled, that every man may keepe his his owne safe and unappaited, that men may use their affaires together without hurt, that honesty and modestie be kept among them: finally that among Christians may be a common sheu of religion, and among men may be manlike civilitie. Neither let any man be moved, for that I do now referre the care of establisning of religion to the policie of men, which I feeme before to have set without the judgement of men. For I do no more here, than I did before, give men leave after their owne will to make lawes concerning religion and the worshipping of God, when I allowe the ordinancie of policie, which endoureth hereunto, that the true religion which is contained in the lawe of God, be not openly and with publique facrites freely broken and desiled. But the readers being holden by the verie plainnesse of order, shall better understand what is to be thought of the whole kind of ciuill governement, if we severally entreate of the partes thereof. There be three partes of it: the magistrature which is the gouernour and keeper of the lawes, the lawes according to which the people, which are governed by the lawes, and obey the Magistrate. Therefore let vs first consider of the office of the Magistrate, whether it be a lawfull vocation and allowed of God, what maner of office he hath, and howe great is his power, then with what lawes a Christian ciuill state is to be ordered: then last of all, what profit of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuerence is due to the Magistrate.

4. The Lord hath not onely testified that the office of Magistrates is allowed and acceptable to him, but also setting out the dignitie thereof with most honourable titles, he hath manuellously commended it unto vs. That I may rehearse a fewe of them. Whereas whatsoever be in place of magistrates are named Gods, let no man think to in that naming is small importance. For thereby is signified that they haue commandement from God, that they are furnished with the authority of God do altogether bare the person of God, whose heed they do after a certaine manner supplie. This is not my cauillation, but the explication of Christ. If the scripture(faithe he) called them Gods to whom the word of God was given: What is this else, but that God hath committed his businesse to them, that they should serve in his office, and (as Moses & Josaphat said to their judges whom they appointed in several citie of Israel) that they should sit in judgment, not for men but for God? To the same purpose maketh this that the wisedome of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that Kings reigne, and counsellors decree righteous things, that princes beare principali, and all the judges of the earth execute judgement. For this is all one in effect as if it had beene saide, that it commeth not to passe by the peruerse of men, that the governement of all things in earth is in the hande of kings and other rulers, but by the prudence and holy ordinance of God, to whom it so seemed good to order the matters of men: for as much as he is both prefent and president among them in making of lawes & in executing righteousnes of judgements. Which Paul plainly teacheth, when he recketh governments among the gifts of God, which being diversely distributed according to the diuerstie of grace, ought to be emploied of the servants of Christ to the edification of the church. For although he there properly speakeoth of a coucile of grate men, which in the primitivie Church were appointed that they shoule have the rule of ordering the publique discipline (which office in the Epistle to the Corinthians he calleth Government) yet for as much as we see that the ende of ciuill power commeth to the same pointe, it is no doubt but that hee commendeth vs to all kinde of iust governement. But he speakeoth more plainly, where hee purposely maketh a full discours of that matter. For hee both sheweth that power is the ordinance of God, and that there are no powers, but they are ordained of God: and that the Princes themselves are the ministers of God, to the well doers vs praise: to the euill, reuengers vs wrath. Hereunto may be added also the examples of holy men: of which Iom have possed kingdomes, as David, Josias, Ezekiel: othersome, lordships, as Joseph and Daniel: othersome, Civil governments in a free people, as Moses, Josue, and the judges: whole offices, the Lord hath declared that he alloweth. Wherefore none ought now to doubt that the civil power is a vocation not onely holy and lawfull before God, but also the most holy, and the most honest of all other in the whole life of men.

They which court to bring in a state without Rulers, take exception and say that although in old time there were kings and judges over the rude people, yet at this day that servile kind of governing agreeth not with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospel. Wherein they bewray not onely their ignorance, but also their diuine pride, while they take upon themselves perfection, of which not so much as the hundredth parte is scene in them. But what manner of men soever they be, it is easy to confute it: because where David exherteth all kings and Rulers to kiss the sonne of God; he doth not bidde them, giuing over their authority, to take themselves to a private life, but to submit the power that they beare to Christ, that he alone may have preeminence above all. Likewise Esay, when he promiseth that kings shall be fathers of the Church, and Queenes shall be nures, he doth not depeve them from their honours: but rather doth by an honourable title make them defenders to the godly worshippers of God. For, that prophecie pertaineth to the comming of Christ. I do wittingly passe over many testimonies which doe each where offer themselves, and specially in the Psalms wherein all governours haue their right maintained. But most cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admonishing Timothie that in the common assembly prayers must be made for kings, he by and by addeth a reason, That we may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlineffe and honifie: in which words he committeth the state of the Church to their defence and sauegarding.

Which consideration ought continually to busie the magistrates themselves, for as much as it may put a great spurre to, them whereby they may be pricked forword to their dutie, and bring them a singular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardnes of their office, which truly are both many & great. For with how great an employment of uprightness, wisdom, milderne, continency, & innocencie, ought they to charge themselves, which knowe themselves to be appointed ministers of the righteousnesse of God? By what assistance shall they admit vnjustice to their judgement seat, which they heare to bee the throne of the living God? By what boldnes shall they pronounce a wrongfull sentence with that mouth, which they understand to be appointed an instrument for the truth of God? With what conscience shall they subscribe to wicked decrees with the hande which they knowe to be ordaind to write the acts of God? In a summe, if they remember that they bee the vicegerents of God, they must watch with all care, earnestnes, and diligence, that they may reprent in themselves vnto men a certaine image of the providence, prescrution, goodnes, good will, and righteousnesse of God. And they must continually set this before their eies, that if all they be accused, that do execute in decet the worke of the vengeance of God, they are much more grievously accursed, that vse themselves deceitfully in a rightfull vocation. Therefore when Moses and Josaphat minded to exhort their judges to their dutie, they had nothing more effectuall to moue their minds withall, than that which we have before rehearsed, Looke what ye do. For ye eare in judgement not for man but for God: namely he which is nere to you in the cause of judgement. Now therefore let the fear of the Lord be vpon you. Looke and be diligent: because there is no peruersties with the Lord our God. And in another place it is said, the God stood in the assembly of the Gods, and seteth judge in the midst of the gods, that they may be encouraged to their dutie when they heare that they be the deputies of God, to whom they must oneday yeeld accompt of the government of their charge. And worthy this admonition ought to be of great force with them.
them. For if they make any default, they are not only wrong doers to men whom they wickedly abuse, but also slanderers to God himself, whose holy judgments they defile. Again, they have also whereupon they may Spiritually comfort themselves, when they consider with themselves that they are not buried in profane affairs and such as are not fit for the servant of God, but in a most holy office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

7 As for them that are not mowed with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bold to raise at this holy ministerie, as a thing disagreeing with Christian religion and godliness: what do they else but raise at God himself, this dishonour of whom cannot be joined with the reproach of his minister? And verily they do not excuse the magistrates, but do cast away God, that he should not reign over them. For if the Lord said this truly of the people of Israel: because they had refused the government of Samuel: why shall it be left truly to this day of them that give themselves leave to rage against all governmentes ordained of God? But sith the Lord said to the Disciples, that the kings of nations bear rule over them, but that among them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this saying it is forbidden to all Christians that they should not take kingdoms or government upon them. O handseome expositors! There rose a strife among the Disciples, which of them excelled other: the Lord, to suppress this vain ambition, taught them that their ministerie is not like unto kingdoms, in which one man hath preeminence above the rest. I beseech you, what doth this comparison make to the dishonour of kingly dignitie? yea what doth it prove at all, but that the ministerie of an Apostle is not the office of a king? Moreover although among the magistrates themselves there be diverse forms, yet there is no difference in this behalf: but that we ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doth comprehend them altogether, when hee faith that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimonie about the other, namely the power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all, except that one man to whose will it maketh all things subject in old time could left be allowed of noble and the excellent sort of natures. But the Scripture to meehe with their vainest judgements, expressly by name affirmeth, that it is the providence of Gods wisdom that kings do reign, and peculiarly commandeth the king to bee honored.

8 And truly it were very vain that it should be disputed of private men which should be the best state of policie in the place where they live: for whom it is not lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And also the same coulde not be firmly determined without rafliness; forasmuch as a great part of the order of this question consisteth in circumstances. And if thou compare also the states themselves together without circumstances, it shall not be easie to discern, which of them owre weieth the other in profitableness: they match so equally together. There is an easie way to fall from kingdom into tyrannie: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefest men to the faction of a fewe: but most easie of all from the peoples government, to sedition. Truely it those three forms of governments which the Philosophers set out, to be considered in themselves I will not deny that either the government of the chiefest men, or a state tempered of it and common government farre excelleth all other, not of it selfe, but because it most seldom changeth that kings so temper themselves that their wills swaureth from that which is suit and right: againe, that they be furnished with so great sharpennesse of judgement and wisdom that every one of them feeth so much as is sufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is fater and more tolerable that many should have the government, that they may mutually one helpe another, one teach and admonish another, and if any advance himselfe higher than is meete, there may be

be overseers and masters to restraine his wilfulnes. This both hath alway been approved by experience, and the Lord also hath confirmed it with his authoritie, when he ordeined among the Israelites a government of the best men vere neere vnto common government, at such time as he minded to haue them in best estate, till hee brought forth an image of Christ in David. And as I willingly grant that no kinde of government is more blessed than this, where libertie is framed to such moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly stablished to contiannse: so I count them also most blessed, that may enjoy this estate: and if they stoutly and constantly trauell in preferring and retaining it, I grant that they do nothing against their dutie. Yea and the magistrates ought with most great diligence to bend themselves heereunto, that they suffer not the libertie of the people, of which they are appointed governours, to be in any part mischance, much leaue to be dissolved: if they be negligent and little carefull therein, they are false Faithbrekers in their office, and betrayers of their country. But if they would bring this kind to themselves, to whom the Lord hath appointed an other forme of government, so that thereby they be moued to desire a change, the very thinking thereof shall not onely be foolish and superficous, but also hurtfull. But if thou bend not thine eies onely to one citie, but looke about or beholde the whole world together, or at least spread abroad thy sight into farther distances of countries, without doubt thou shalt finde that this is not unprofitable appointed by the providence of God, that diverse countries should be ruled by diverse kindes of government. For as the elements hang together but by an vn egal temperatuer, in countreys alfo are with their certain inequalitie very well kept in order. Howbeit all these things also are spoken in vaine to them whom the will of the Lord shal satisfie. For if it bee his pleasure to set kyngees ouer kingdomes, Senates, or officers ouer free citie, whomsoever hee maketh rulers in the places where we are conuerfant, it is our dutie to flicew our selues yielding and obedient vnto them.

9 Nowe the office of Magistrates is in this place to be declared by the way, of what sort it is described by the word of God, and in what things it consisteth. If the scripture did not teach, that it extendeth to both the tables of the law, we might learn it out of the prophane writers. For none hath intreated of the dutie of Magistrates, of making of lawes and of publike weale, that hath not begun at religion and the worshipping of God. And so haue they all confessed, that no policie can be happily frameed, vnlesse the first care be of godlines: and that those lawes be properous which neglecting the right or God, do prouide onely for men. Sith therefore with all the Philosophers religion hath the first place, and Sith the same hath alway bin obserued by the vnuerse consent of all nations, let Christian princes and magistrates be ashamed of their slothfulnes, if they endure not themselues to this care. And wee haue already shewed, that this dutie is specially enjoyed them of God: as it is meete, that they should imploy their trauell to defend and mainaine his honour, whose vicegerentes they be, and by whose benefite they governe. For this cause also cheefer are the holy kings praised in scripture, for that they restored the worship of God being corrupted or overthrown, or tooke care of religion, that it might flourish pure and safe vnder them. But contrarywise the holy historicke reckoneth states without governours, among faultes, saying that there was no king in Israel, and that therefore eu- teric man did what pleased himselfe. Whereby their folly is confuted, which would haue them, neglecting the care of God, onely to apply themselves to be judges of law among men. As though God appointed governours in his name to decide controversyes, and omitte that which was of much weightier importance, that he himselfe should be worshipped according to the preferit rule of his lawe. But a desire to innouate all things without punishment mooueth troublesome men to this point, that they with all reuengers of the breach of peace to be taken away. As for so much much as pertaineth to the second table,

Jer. 22.1.

I. because let to vame/akh that rfie mindes, to deliver the poore and needie, that they should render right to the poore and needie, deliver the poore and needie from the hand of the oppreffer. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whom he had sent in his stead: let them heare the cause of their brethren, and judge betweene a man and his brother and a stranger, & not know faces in judgement, that they heare as well the little as the great, and be not afraid of any man: because it is the judgement of God. But I speake not of these things: that kings should not get to themfelues multitudes of horses, not cast their minds to couctouinesse, not to be lifted vp above their brethren: that may be continually busied in studying vpon the lawe of the Lorde all the daies of their life: that judges swarne not to the one side, nor receive gifts: because in declaring here the office of magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the Magistrates themselues, as to teach other what Magistrates bee, and to what ende they are set of God. We see therefore that they be ordained, defenders and revengers of innocencie, honestie, and quietnesse, whose onely endevoure should be to provide for the common safetie and peace of all men. Of which vertues David professeth that he will be an examplar, when he shall be aduanced to the royall seate: that is, that he wil not content to any euill doings, but abhorre wicked men, flaunderers, and proude men, and get to himselfe from each where honest and faithfull men. But Sith they cannot performe this, vnlesse they defende good men from the wrongs of the euill, let them helpe the good with iuiceour and defence; let them also be armed with power whereby they may severally suppress euill euill doers and wicked men by whose lewdnesse the common quiet is troubled or vexed. For wee throughly finde this by experience which Solon said, that common weales consist of reward and punishment, and that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth and is dissolved. For the care of equitie, and iustice waxeth cold in the mindes of many vnlesse there be due honour readie for vertue: neither can the wilfulness of wicked men be restrained but by seueritie and chastisement of paines. And these two partes the Prophet comprehended, when hee biddeth kings and other gouernours to doe judgement and righteousnesse. Rightouinesse is, to take into charge of tuition, to imbace, to defende, to revenge, to deliver the innocent. Judgement is, to with and the boldnesse of wicked men, to repress their violence, to punish their offences.

But here, as it seemeth, doth arise a high and hard question. If by the lawe of God all Christians are forbidden to kill, and the Prophet prophesieth of the holy mount of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shall not afflic nor hurt: how many magistrates be together both godly and blood shedders? But if we understand, that the Magistrate in executing of punishments, doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the very same judgements of God, we shall be nothing concerned with this doubt. The law of the Lord forbidde to kill: least manslaughter should be unpunished, the law-maker himselfe giueth to the ministers the swords in their hand, which they shoulde drawe forth against all manlayers. To afflic and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, not to afflic, by the Lords commandement to revenge the afflications of the godly. I would to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is here done by the rashnesse of man, but all things by the authoritie of God: thirdly commandeth, which going before vs, we never swarne out of the right way. Vnlesse perhaps there be a bridle put vpon the rightouinesse of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any lawe to it, why shall we caull against the ministers of it? They beare not the sword in vaine, faith Paul: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, revengers to euill doers.

Rom. 13.4.

Therefore
Cap. 20. Of the outwarde meanes

Therefore if Princes and other rulers knowe that nothing shall be more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them applye this ministerie, if they desire to shewe their godliness, righteounesse, and uncorrupteness allowable to God. With this affection was Moses led, when knowing himselfe appointed by the power of the Lorde to be the deliuerer of his people, he raise his handes vpon the Egyptian. Againe, when by flaying of three thousand men in one day, he tooke vengeance of the factrilege of the people. David also when nie to the end of his life he gave commandement to Solomon his sonne to slay Joab and Semei. Whereupon he also rehearseth this among the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the lande, that all workers of wickednesse may be driven out of the cite of God. To which purpose also pertaineth the praise that is gion to Solomon. Thou haft loued righteounesse and haft hated wickednesse. How doth that milde and gentle nature of Moses burst out into so great crueltie, that being sprinkled with the bloud of his brethren, he runneth through out the camp to new slaughters? How doth David, a man of so great gздlenes in all his life, among his last breathings make that bloudie testament, that his sonne should not bring the hoare haire of Joab and Semei in peace to the graue? But they both when they executed the vengeance committed to them of God, so sanctified with cruel dealing their hands which they had defiled with sparing. It is an abomination with kings, faith Solomon, to doe iniquitie, because his throne is stablished in righteounesse. Againe, The king which sitteth in the throne of judgement spreadeth his eies vpon cuier cuill man. Againe, A wife king scattereth the wicked, and turneth them vpon the wheele. Againe, Take away the droffe from the siluer, and there shall come forth a vessell to the melters; take away the wicked man from the light of the king, and his throne shall be fast set in righteounesse. Againe, he that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abomination to the Lord. Againe, A rebellious man purchaseth cuill to himselfe, and a cruell messenger is sent vnto him. Againe, Who so faith to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations doe curse. Now if their true righteounesse bee, with drainen swordes to pursue guiltie and wicked men: let them put vp their swordes and holde their hands pure from bloud, while in the meane time desperate men doe range with murders and slaughters: then they shall make themelles guiltie of most great wickednesse, so much lesse shall they get thereby the praise of goodnesse and righteounesse. Onely let there bee no preiecte and cruell rigorous righteounesse, and that judgement seate which may woorthily be called the roccke of accussed men. For I am not he that either fauour extreme crueltie, or doe thinke that righteous judgement can bee pronounced, but while clemencie the best and surest counsellor of kings, as Solomon affirmeth, the preferrer of the kings throne is assistant, which a certaine man in olde time truly faide to be the principall gift of Princes. Yet a magistrate must take heed to both, that he doe neither with rigorous righteounesse of minde, wound rather than heale, or by superfitious affection of clemencie fall into a most cruell gentlenesse, if with soft and loose tenderneffe he be disolute to the destruction of many men. For this was in olde time not without cause commonly spoken vnder the empire of Nero, that it is in deede cuill to live vnder a prince vnder whom nothing is lawful, but much worse vnder whom all thinges are lawfull.

The lawfullnesse of warres mostly taken in hand.

II But litle sometime kings and peoples must of necessitie take swordes in hande to execute such publike vengeance, by this reason we may also judge that the warres are lawfull which are fo taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, whereby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may kepe downe the fuditious stirres of vnquiet men, whereby they may helpe the forceably oppressed, whereby they may punish cuill doings: can they at better seafons vter it, than to suppress his rage which troubleth both privately the rest of cuier man, and the common quiet of all men, which sediously maketh vprores, which committeth violent violent oppressions and haynous cuill doings; If they ought to be preservers and defenders of the lawes, they must also overthrow the enterprizes of all them, by whose wicked doing the discipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they wortheuly puni: all theues whole injuries have extended onely to a few: shall they suffer a whole countrey to be without punishment vexed and wafted with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether he be a king or one of the barrest of the commonaltye, that in-deth another countrie into which he hath no right, and spoileth it like an enemie:

al: are alike to be taken and punished for robbers. This therefore both natural equi-tie, & the rule of dutie teacheth that Princes are armed not onely to retraine private duties with judicatall punishmentes, but also to defende with war the dominions committed to their charge, if at any time they be enmimlike affailed. And such wars the holy Ghost by many testimonies of scripture declareth to be lawfull.

12. If it be objected against mee, that in the new Testament is neither witnes nor example which teacheth that warre is a thing lawfull for Chriftians: first I answere, that the same rule of making warre which was in old time remaineth also at this day, and that on the contrarie sute there is no cause that may debar magistrates from defending of their subiectes. Secondly that an expresse declaration of these matters is not to be found in the writings of the apostles, where their purpose is not to frame ciull statute, but to establish the spirittuall kinglyne of Chrift. Last of all I say that in them alio is shewed by the way, that Chrift hath by his comming changed nothing in this behalfe. For if Chriftian doctrine (that I may speake in Augustines own words) condemned all warres, this shoulde rather have bene faide tooulders when they asked counsell of salvation, that they shoulde cast away their weapons, and eternly withdraw themselves from the warre. But it was faide to them: Strike no man, do no man wrong, let your wages suffice you. Whom he taught that their wages ought to sufficce them, he did verily not forbidd them to warrie. But al: magistrates ought heere to take great heed, that they nothing at all follow their owne desires: but rather, if they must punish, let them not be borne away with a headlong angriness, let them not be violently carried with hatred, let them not brooke with unappeasable rigor, yea let them (as Augustines faith) pittie common nature in him in whom they punish his private fault. Or if they must put on armor against the enimie, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly seek occasion thereof, nor take it being offered vnlee they be druen to it by extreme necessitie. For if we ought to persoume much more than that heathen man required, which would have warre to terme a seeking of peace:

truely we ought first to attempt all things ere we ought to trie the matter by warre.

Finally in both kinds let them not suffer themselves to be caried with any priuate affection, but be led onely with common feeling. Otherwise they do very ill abuse their power, which is guen them, not for their owne commoditie, but for others benefite and ministerie. Moreouer of the same rightfull rule of making warre hangeth the order both of garrisions, and leagues, and other ciull fortificacions. Garrisones I call those that are placed in townes to defende the borders of the countrey: Leagues, which are made with Princes adjoyning for this covenant that if any trouble happen in their lands they may mutually helpe them, and lyone their forces in common together to suppress the common enimies of mankind: Ciull fortification, whose vse is in the arte of warre.

13. This alio I will last of all addde, that tributes and taxes are the lawfull recenuces of Princes, which they may chiefly employ to sustaine the common charges of their office: which yet they may likewise vse to their priuate royaltie which is after a certaine maner conioyned with honor of the princely state that they beare. As we see that David, Ezephias, Josias, Josaphar, and other holy kings, and Joseph also and Daniel, according to the state of the person that they did beare, were without offence of godlinesse lumpious of the common charge, and we read in Ezéchiel that there was

A false and foolish opinion that a state cannot bee well ordered by the common lawes of nations except the cuil lawes of Moses be observed.

14 Next to the magistrat in cuil states are lawes, the most strong sinews of common wealthes, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the soules, without which the Magistrate can not stand, as they againe without the Magistrate have no lively force. Therefore nothing could be more truely faile, than that the lawe is a dumbe Magistrate, and that the Magistrate is a luing law. But whereas I promised to speake, with what lawes a Christian cuil state ought to be ordered, there is no caufe why any man should looke for a long discourse of the best kinde of lawes, which both shoule be infinite, & perverted not to this present purpose and place: yet in a fewe words, and as it were by the way, I will touch what lawes it may vse godly before God, and be rightly governed by them among men. Which selfe thing I had rather to have vterly passed over with silence, if I did not understand that many doe herein perillously erre. For there be some that deny that a common weale is well ordered, which neglecting the cuil lawes of Moses is governed by the common lawes of nations. How dangerous and troublesome this tentine is, let other men consider, it shall be enough for me to haue knewed that it is false and foolish. That common division is to be kept, which diuideth the whole lawe of God publishted into morall, ceremoniall, and judicall lawes: and all the partes are to be severallly considered, that we may know what of them pertaineth to vs, and what not. Neither in the mean time let any man be combered with this doubt, that judicall and ceremoniall also pertain to the morall lawes. For although the old writers which haue taught this division, were not ignorant that these two latter partes had their vs about manners, yet because they might be changed and abrogatt, the morals remaining safe they did not call them morals. They called that first part peculiarly by that name, without which it could not have the true holines of manners, and the vnchangeable rule of liuing rightlie.

15 Therefore the morall lawe (that I may first begin theera) how it is contained in two chief points, of which the one commandeth simple to worship God with pure faith and godlyneffe, and the other to embrace men with vnfaimed love, is the true and eternall rule of righteousneffe prescribed to the me of all ages and times that will be willing to frame their life to the will of God. For this is his eternall and vnchangeable will, that he him selfe shoule be worshippes of vs all, & that we shoulde mutually love one another. The ceremoniall law was the schooling of the Iewes, where with it pleased the Lord to exercise the certaine childhood of that people, till that time of fulines came, wherein he would to the full manifestly shew his widsom to the the earth, and deliver the truth of those things which then were shadowed with figures. The judicial law given to them for an order of civil state, gave certaine rules of equity and righteousness, by which they might behave themselves harmlessly and quietly together. And as that exercise of ceremonies properly pertained in deed to the doctrine of godliness (namely which kept the Church of the Jews in the worship and religion of God) yet it might be distinguished from godliness itself: for this forme of judiciall orders (although it tended to no other ende, but how the same charitie might be kept which is commanded by the eternall lawe of God) yet had a certaine thing differing from the very commandement of loving. As therefore the Ceremonies might be abrogate, godliness remaining safe and undestroyed: so these judiciall ordinances also being taken away, the perpetuall duties and commandements of charitie may continue. If this be true, verily there is libertie left to every nation to make such lawes as they shall foresee to be profitable for them: which yet must be framed after the perpetuall rule of charitie, that they may in deed vaine in forme, but have the same reason. For I thinke that those barbarous and savage lawes, as were those that gave honour to theues, that allowed common copulations, and other both much more filthie and more against reason, are not to be taken for lawes: for as much as they are not onely against all righteousness, but also against naturall gentlenesse and kindnesse of men.

16 This which I have laid shall be plaine, if in all lawes we beholde these two things as we ought, the making and the equitie of the lawe, vpon the reason whereof the making it selfe is founded and staideth. Equitie, because it is naturally, can be but one of all lawes: and therefore one lawe, according to the kind of matter, ought to be the propounded end to all lawes. As for making of lawes, because they have certaine circumstances vpon which they partly hang, if so that they tend all together to one marke of equitie, though they be divers it maketh no matter. Now if it is certaine that the lawe of God which we call moral is nothing else but a testament of the naturall lawe, and of that conscience which is engraven of God in the minds of men, the whole rule of this equitie whereof we now speake is set forth therein. Therefore it alone must be both the marke and rule and end of all lawes. Whatsoever lawes shall be framed after that rule, directed to that marke, and limited in that end, there is no cause why we should disallow them, howsoeuer they otherwise differ from the Jewish lawe or one from another. The lawe of God forbiddeth to steale. What paine was appointed for theses in the civil state of the Jews, is to be scene in Exodus. The most ancient lawes of other nations punished theft with recompence of double: the lawes that followed afterward, made difference betweene manifest theft and not manifest. Some proceeded to banishment, some to whipping, some at last to the punishment of death. False wittes was among the Jews punished with recompence of egall paine, in some places one with great shame, in some places with hanging, in some with the croffe. Manslaughter all lawes universally doe revenge with blood, yet with divers kindes of death. Against adulterers in some places were ordained seuerall paines, in some places lighter. Yet we fee how with such discretion all tende to the same ende. For with one mouth they altogether pronounce punishment against all the offences which have beene condemned by the eternall lawe of God, as manslaughters, thefts, adulteries, false wittes: but in the manner of punishment they agree not. Neither is the same needful, nor yet expedient. There is some countrie, which wittles in the rigour with horrible examples against manslayers, should be immediately be destroyed with murders and robberies. There is some time that requireth the sharppnest of paines to be increas'd. If there aris any trouble in a common weale, the evils that are wont to growe there-of must be amended with new ordinances. In time of warre all humannie woulde in the noise of armoure fall away, wittles there were cast into men an unwomt fear of punishments. In barrenesse, in pestilence, vnleffe greater severitie be vsed, all things will come to ruine. Some nation is more bent to some certaine vice, vnleffe it be more sharply supprest. How malicious and envious shall he be against the publicke profite, that shall bee offended with such severitie which is most fit to holde fast the observance of the lawe of God? For, that which some say, that the lawe of God given by Moses is dishonoured, when it being abrogate, newe are preferred above it, is most vaine. For neither are other preferred above it, when they are more allowed, not in simple comparison, but in respect of the estate of the times, place, and nation: neither is that abrogate which was newer made for vs. For the Lorde gaue not the lawe by the hand of Moses, which should be published into all nations, and flourish euery where: bu but when he had received the nation of the Lewes into his faith, defence, and protection, hee willed to bee a lawemaker peculiarly to them, and like a wife lawemaker, he had in making of his lawes a certaine singular consideration of them.

17 Now remaineth that wee consider that which we have set in the last place, what profit of lawes, judiccall orders, and magistrates, commeth to the common fellowship of Christians. Wherewith also is coupled another question, how much private men ought to yeeld to magistrates, and how far their obedience ought to proceed. Many thought the office of Magistrate to be superfluous among Christians, because forsooth they cannot godlyly craue their aide, namely if they are forbidden to revenge, to lye in the lawe, and to have any controversie. But whereas Paul contrariwise plainly testifieth, that he is the minister of God to vs for good: wherefore by understand, that he is so ordained of God, that we being defended by his hande and succours against the maliciousnesse and injuries of mischievous men, may live a quiet and assured life. If he be in vaine giuen vs of the Lord for defence, vnleffe it be lawfull for vs to vsue such benefite: it sufficiently appeareth that he may also without vngodliness be called upon & sued vnto. But here I must have to doe with two kinds of men. For there be many men that boile with so great rage of quarrelling at the lawe, that they never have quiet with themselves vnleffe they have strife with other. And their controversies they exercise with deadly sharpnesse of hatred, and with mad greedinesse to revenge and hurt, and doe pursue them with vnappealable fitnesse even to the very destruction of their aduersarie. In the meanet ime, that they may not be thought to doe any thing but rightfully, they defende such peruerse with colour of lawe. But though it be granted thece to go to law with thy brother, yet thou must not by and by hate him, nor be caried against him with furious desire to hurt him, nor stubbornly to pursuie him.

18 Let this therefore be saide to such men, that the vsue of lawes is lawfull, if a man doe rightly vsue it. And that the right vsue both for the plaintiff to sue, and for the defendant to defend, as if the defendant being summoned doe appeare at an appointed day, and doth with such exception as he can, defend his caufe without bitternesse, but only with this affection to defende that which is his owne by lawe: and if the plaintiff being vnwoorthily oppressed either in his peron or his goods, doe refer to the defence of the magistrate, make his complaint, and require that which is equitable and confidence, but farre from all greedy will to hurt or revenge, farre from sharpenesse and hatred, farre from burning heat of contention, but rather readie to yeeld of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be caried with an enimie like minde against his aduersarie. Contrariwise when being filled with malice of minde, corrupted with envy, kindled with wrath, breathing out revenge, or finally so enflamed with the heat of the contention, they glie ouer any part of charitie, the whole proceeding even of a most iust caufe cannot but be wicked. For this ought to bee a determined principle to all Christians, that a controversie though it be neuer for righteous, can never be rightly pursued of any man, vnleffe he beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, aduersarie, as if the matter which is in the controuersie were already concluded and ended by composition. Some man will here peraduenture say, that such moderation is to never be used in going to law, that it should be like a miracle, if any such were found. I grant in deede, as the manners of these times bee, that there is seldomse see no example of a good contenter in law; yet the thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no cull, ceaseth not to be good and pure. But when we heare that the helpe of the Magistrate is a holy gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take heede, that it be not defiled by our fault.

10 As for them that precifely condemne all contendings at law, let them understand that they doe therewithall defile the holy ordinance of God, and a gift of that kinde of gifts which may be clean to the cleane: vnlesse peraduenture they will accuse Paul of wicked doing, which did both put away from himselfe the flanders of his accusers with declaring also their deceit and maliciousnes, and in judgment claimed for himselfe the prerogatiue of the CITIE of ROME, and when neede was he appealed from an unrighteous governour to the Emperours judgement seate. Neither withstandeth it, that all Christians are forbidden to desire reuenge, which we also doe drue farre away from Christian judgement seates. For, if the contention be about a common case, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocenter simplicitie, commit his cause to the Judge as to a common defender, thinking nothing leef than to render mutuall recompend of cull, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life and death, or any great criminall action be commenced, we require that the accuser be such a one, as commeth in to the Court being taken with no boiling heate of reuenge, and touched with no displeasure of private injurie, but only hauing in minde to withstend the enterprizes of a mischeuous man, that they may not hurt the common weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done against that commandement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Christians. But they are not onely forbidden to desire reuenge, but they are also comanded to wait for the hand of the Lord, which promiseth that he will be a present reuenger for the oppriffed and afflicted: but they doe prevent all reuenge of the heavenly defender, which require helpe at the Magistrates hand either for themselves or other.

Not so. For we must thinke that the Magistrates reuenge is not the reuenge of man but of God, which (as Paul saith) he extendeth and exerciseth by the ministratie of man for our good.

20 And no more doe we disagree with the words of Christ, by which he forbid- doth to retiue cuull, and commandeth to turne the rightチェック to him that hath given a blowe on the left, and to suffer him to take away thy cloke that taketh away thy coat. He willeth in deedere that the minde of his should so much abhorre from desire of recompensing like for like, that they should sooner suffer double injurie to be done to themselves, than desire to reacquire it: from which patience neither doe we also leade them away. For Christians truely ought to be a kind of men made to beare reproches and injuries, open to the malice, deceit, and mockages, of naughtie men: and not that onely but also they must be bearers of all these evils, that is to say so framed with all their harts, that hauing receivd one displeasure they make themselves ready for another, promising to themselves, nothing in their whole life but the bearing of a continuall cross. In the meanime also they must doe good to them that doe them wrong, and with well to those that curfe them, and (which is their onely victorie) ftrive to overcome cuull with good. Being so minded they will not secke eye for eye, tooth for tooth, as the Pharisees taught their Disciples to desire reuenge, but (as we are taught of Christ) they will fuffer their bodie to be mangled, and their goods to be maliciously taken from them, that they will forgive, and of their owne accord pardon those cuuls so soon as they are done to them. Yet this euemonie and moderation of minde shall not withstand,
Cap. 20. Of the outward meanes

but that the friendship toward their enemies remaining safe, they may see the helpe of the Magistrate to the preferring of their goods, or for zeal of publicke commodi-tie may not be a gullie and pestilent man to be punished, whom they know that he can not be amended but by death. For Augustine truly expoundeth that all these commandments tend to this ende, that righteous and godly man should be ready to beare patientlie the malice of them whom he seeketh to have made good men, that rather the number of the good may encrease, not that he should with like malice add to himselfe allso to the number of the euill: then, that they more pertaine to the preparation of the hart, which is inwardly, that to the worke which is done openlie: that in secret may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we see may be profitable to them to whom we ought to beare good will.

21 But this which is wont to be objected, that contentions in law are altogether condemned of Paul, is also falle: It may easily be perceived by his words, that there was an innumerable rage of struing at law in the Church of the Corinthians:
so farre tooth that they did make the Gospell of Christ and the whole religion which they professed, open to the cauillations and euill speaking of the wicked. This is the first thing that Paul blameth in them, that by their intemperance of contentions, they brought the Gospell in flander among the vnbelieuers. And then this point also, that in such sort they strued among themselves brethren with brethren.
For they were so farre from bearing of wrongs, that they greedily gapt one for an others goods, provoked one another, and being unprouoked did hurt. Therefore he inwight against that rage of contenting, and not simply against all controversies.
But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weakeynesse, that they did not rather suffer loose of their goods than to trauell euon to contentions for the preferring of them:
namely when they were so caufie mooued with euery damage, and for most small causes did runne to the Court of Lawe and to controversie, he faith that this is a proffe that they were of a minde too ready to anger and not well framed to patience. Christians verily ought to doe this, that they had alwaies rather to yield of their owne right than to goe to law, from whence they can scarcely get out againe but with a minde too much mooued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man feeth that without losse of charitie he may defend his owne, the losse whereof should be a fore hinderance vnto him: if he doth offend nothing against this sayling of Paul. Finally (as we haue taught in the beginning) charitie shall giue eu-ery man beth counsell, without which whatsoever controversie are taken in hand, and beyond which whatsoever doe procede, we hold it out of controversie that they be vnaught and wicked.

22 The first diuice of subjectes toward their Magistrates is, to think most honorable of their office, namely which they acknowledge to be a jurisdiction committed of God, and therefore to esteem them and reverence them as the minifters and deputies of God. For a man may finde some, which yeeld themselves very obedident to their magistrates, and would not that they should obey, because they do know it to be expedient for the common benefite: but the magistrates themselves they thinke no otherwise than of certaine necessarie euils. But Peter requireth somewhat more of vs, when he commandeth that the King be honored, and Solomon, when he commandeth God and the King to be feared: For Peter under the word of honoring conteneth a sycere and well deeming estimation:
and Solomon joyning the King with God, therewith that he is full of a certaine holy reverence and dignitie. This is also a notable commendation in Paul, that we obey not onely for wrath but for confidence. Whereby he meaneth that subjectes ought to be led not onely with fear of Princes and Rulers to be holden in their subjection (as they are wont to yeeld to their armed enimie, which see that vengeance shall readily.
readily be taken upon them if they resist) but because the obediences that are shewed to them are shewed to God himself, for as much as their powers is of God. I speak not of the men, as if the viole of dignities did cover foolishne, or sluggishnes, or cruelties, or wicked manners and full of mischievous doing: But I say that the decree it selfe is worthy of honour and reverence: that whosoever be rulers may be esteemed with vs, and have reverence, in respect of their being rulers.

23 Of this then also followeth another thing: that with minds bent to the honouring of them, they declare their obedience in proofs to them: whether it be to obey their proclamation, or to pay tribute, or to take in hande publike offices and charges that are for common defence, or to do any other of their commandments. Let every soule (faith Paul) be subject to the higher powers. For he that refisteth the power, refisteth the ordinance of God. The same Paul writeth to Titus: Warn them that they be subject to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magistrates, that they be ready to execute good workes: And Peter faith, Be ye subject to euere humaine creature (or rather as I translate it, Ordinance) for the Lords sake, either to the king as most excellent, or to the rulers that are sent by him, to the punishment in deed of euill doers, but to the praise of well doers. Moreover that they should testify that they do not abuse subjection, but are sincerely and heartily subject, Paul addeth that they should commend to God the safcetie and prosperitie of them vnder whom they live. I exhort (faith he) that there be made prayers, beseechings, intercessions, thanksgivings for all men, for kings and for all that be set in superiortie, that wee may live a peaceable and quiet life with all godlinesse and honestie. Neither let any man here deceaue himselfe. For sith the Magistrate cannot be refistit, but that God himselfe must also be refistit: although it may bee thought that an unarmed magistrat may freely be despisit, yet God is armed which will strongly take vengeance on the despising of himselfe: Moreover vnder this obedience I containe moderation, which private men ought to bnde themselves to keepe in cases touching the publike state, that they do not of their owne head entermedle in publike businesse, or rashly breake into the office of the Magistrate, and entreprise nothing publikely. If any thing shall in a publike ordinate be behoouesfull to be amended, let not themuffles raife vprores, nor put their hands to the doing of it, which they all ought to have fast bound in this behaife: but let them commit it to the judgement of the Magistrate, whole hande alone is herein at libertie. I mean, that they presume to doe nothing vncommanded. For when the commandement of the ruler is adjoyned, then are they also furnished with publike authoritie. For as they are woont to call the counsellers of a king, his cares and cies: so not vnhil a man may call them the hands of the Prince, whom by his commandement he seteth in authotie for the doing of things.

24 Now for as much as we have hitherto described a magistrat such as is in deed the same that he is called, namely the father of the country, and (as the Poet calleth him) the pastor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteounesse, the reuener of innocence: he is worthy to be judged a mad man, that alloweth not such a government. But whereas this is in a manner the experience of all ages, that of princes some being careless of all things to the foresaying whereof they ought to haue beene heedfully bent, do without all care slothfully wallow in delites: other some addicted to their gaine, do set out to faile all lawes, privileges, judgments, and grauntes: other some spoile the poore communallitie of monie which they may after waste upon madde prodgall expendings: other some exercise meere robberies, in pilling of houses, deseling of virgins and matrones, murdering of innocents: many cannot be perfwaded that such should be acknowledged for princes, whose authority they ought to obey so far as they may. For in so great harms vnworthines among doings, so much contrary to the duty not only for a magistrat, but also of a man, they

they behold no forme of the image of God which ought to shine in a magistrate: when they see no token of that minister of God, which was given for praise to the good and for vengeance to the evil: so neither do they also acknowledge such a governor, whose dignity & authority the scripture commendeth unto vs. And truly this feeling of affection hath always been naturally planted in the minds of men, no lese to hate and abhor tyrants, than to love and honor lawfull kings.

25 But if we goe to the word of God, it will lead vs further, that we be subject not only to the government of those princes which execute their office towards vs well and with such faithfulness as they ought, but also of them, which by what meanes soever it be, have the dominion in possession although they performe nothing lese than that which pertaineth to the duty of princes. For though the Lord teheheth that the magistrate is a special great gift of his liberalitie for preferving of the safetye of men, and appointeth to magistrates themselves their bounds: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what form soever they be, they have not their authenticity but from him: that those in deede, which rule for benefit of the common weale, are true exemplars and patrons of hisountnifieus: that they that rule vniustly and wilfully, are raised vp by him to punish the wickednes of the people: that all equally have that maniefull wherewith he hath furnished a lawfull power. I will proceede no further, till I have added some certain testimonies of that point: Yet wee neede not much to labour to prove, that a wicked king is the wrath of God upon the earth, for as much as I think that no man will say the contrary, and otherwise there should be no more fai'd of a king than of a common robber that violently taketh away thy goods, and of an adulterer that defileth thy bed, of a murderer that seeketh to kill thee, whereas the scripture reckoneth all such calamities among the curses of God. But yet vs rather terme upon proving that which doth not so easily settle in the minds of men: that in a most noightie man, and most vnworthie of all honour if so that he have the publike power in possession, remaneth that noble and divine power which the Lord hath by his word given to the ministers of his righteousnes and judgement, and therefore that he ought of his subjectes to be had in as great reverence and estimation, so much as pertaining to publique obedience, as they would have the best King if he were given them.

26 First I would haue the readers to perceive and diligently mark that providence and singular doings of God, which is in the Scripture not without cause so oft rehearsed vs to, in distributing of king domes and making kings whom it pleaseth him. In Daniel, it is said: The Lord changeth times and courtes of times, he causeth away and maketh kings. Again: That the hewing may know that the Highest is mightie in the kingdome of men, and he shall give it to whom he will. With which manner of sentences whereas the whole scripture aboundeth, yet that same prophecye of Daniel specially swarchethful. Now what manner of king was Nebuchadnezzar, he that conquered Hierusalem, it is sufficiently known, namely a strong intruder & defroster of other. Yet in Ezekiel the Lord affirmedeth that he gave him the land of Egypt for the service that he had done to him in waiting it. And Daniel said to him: Thou king art king of kings, to whom the king of heauens hath given a mighty, and glorious, and glorious kingdome: to thee, I say, he hath given it, and all the lands where dwell the children of men, the beasts of the wood and foules of the aie: he hath deliuered them into thy hand, and hath made thee to beeare rule over them. Again he said to his sonne Belshazzar: the highest God hath given to Nebuchadnezzar thy Father kingdome and royaltie, honour and glory: and by reason of the royaltie that he gave him, all peoples, tribes, and languages were trembling and feareful at his light. When we heare that a king is ordained of God, let vs thereof call to remembrance those heavenly warnings concerning the honour and fearing of a king: then we shall not doubt to accompt, a most wicked tyrant in the same place wheresoe the Lord hath vouchsafed to set him: Samuel when he gave warning to the people of Israel, what manner of things they should suffer at the hands of their kings, saith: This shall be the right of the King that shall reign over you: he shall take your sons and put them to his chariot, to make them his horsemen, and to plow his land, and reap his crop, and to make instruments of warre. He shall take your daughters, that they may be his dressers of ointments, his Cookes and Bakers. Your Lands, your Vineyards, and your best Olive plantes, he shall take away and give to his bond seruantes. He shall take tithes of your Secedes and Vineyards, and shall give them to his enunes and bond seruantes. He shall take away your bonde men, your bonde women and your Attles, and set them to his worke. Yea and he shall take tithes of your flocks, and ye shall be his bond seruantes. Verily Kingses should not have done this of right, whom the law did very well instruct to all commencement: but it was called a right over the people which it behooved them of necessity to obey, and they might not resist it: as if Samuel had said. The willfulness of Kingses shall runne to such licentiousnes, which it shall not be your part to resist, to whom this onely thing shall be left, to obey their commandements and hearken to their word.

27 But chiefly there is in Jeremie a notable place and worships to be remembered, which although it be somewhat long, yet I will be content to rehearse, because it most plainly determineth this whole question. I have made the earth and men, faith the Lord, and the living creatures that are on the out face of the earth in my great strength and stretched out armes, and I will deliver it to him whom it pleaseth in mine eyes. And now therefore I have given all these landes into the handes of Nebuchadnezzar my seruant, and all nations and great Kings shall serve him, till the time shall come of that land. And it shall be as a nation and a kingdome that hath not feared the King of Babylon. I will visite that nation in sword, famine, and pestilence. Wherefore teme ye the King of Babylon and live. We see with how great obedience the Lord willed that cruel and proud tyrant to be honored, for no other reason but because he posstilled the kingdome. And the same was by the heavenly decreee, that he was set in the throne of the kingdome of Babylon, and taken vp into kingly majestie, which it was unlawful to violate. If we have this continually before our minde and eyes, that even the worst Kingses are ordained by the same decreee by which the authority of Kings is stablished, these seditious thoughts shall never come into our minde, that a King is to be handled according to his deservings, and that it is not meete that we should shew our slues subiects to him that doth not on his behalf shew himselfe a King to vs.

28 In vaine shall any man object that this was a peculiar commandement to the Israelites. For it is to be noted with what reason the Lord confirmeth it. I have given (faith he) the kingdome to Nebuchadnezzar: Wherefore servye him and live. To whomsoever therefore it shall be certaine that the kingdome is given, let vs not doubt that he is to be obeyed. And soone as the Lord auanceth any man to the royall estate, he therein declareth his will to vs that he will have him reigne. For thereof are generall testimonies of the Scripture. Salomon in the xxviiij. Chapter, Many Princes are because of the wickednesse of the people. Againe Iob in the xij. Chapter. He taketh away subjection from Kings, and girdeth them againe with the girdle. But this being confessed, there remaineth nothing but that we must servye and live. There is also in Jeremie the Prophet an other commandement of the Lord wherein he commanded his people to feke the peace of Babylon, whither they had beene led away captiue, and to pray to him for it, because in the peace of it should be their peace. Behold the Israelites being spoyled of all their goods, plucked out of their houses, led away into exile, and cast into miserable bondage, are commanded to pray for the saufety of the Conqueror: not as in other places we are commanded to pray for our persecutors: but that the kingdome may be preservd to himselfe and
If Princes breake their dutie, we may not therefore transgress ours.

If Princes breake their dutie, we may not therefore transgress ours.

If Princes breake their dutie, we may not therefore transgress ours.

Finally we owe this affecion of reverence yea and devotion to all our Rulers, of what fort soever they be, which I doe therefore the oftener repeate, that we may learne not to search what the men themselves bee, but take this for sufficient, that by the will of the Lord they beare that perfonage in which the Lord himselfe hath imprinted and ingraued an immutabile maiestate. But (thou wilt lay) Rulers owe mutuall duties to their subiectes. That I have alreadie confest. But if thou thereupon conclude, that obedience is to be renderd to none but to just Gouernours, thou art a foolish reasoner. For, husbands also are bound to their wives and parents to their children with mutuall dutie: Let Parents and Husbandes depart from their dutie. Let parents shew themselves so hard and vnpleasable to their children, whom they are forbidden to provoke to anger, that with their peevishness they doe vnmeasureably wearie them: let the husbands most despitefully use their wives, whom they are commanded to loue, and to spare them as weake vessels: shall yet therefore either children be leffe obedient to their parents, or wives to their husbands? but they are subject both to euel parents and husbands and such as doe not their dutie. Yea, where as all ought rather to endeavor themselves not to looke behind them, but to the bagge hanging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of another dutie, but every man let before him that which is his owne dutie: this ought chiefly to have place among those that are under the power of other. Wherefore if we be vnmercifully tormentes of a cruel Prince, if we be raenously spoyled of a cowetous or rioulous Prince, if we be neglected of a slothfull Prince, finally if we be vexed for godlinesses sake of a wicked and vngodly Prince: let vs first call to mind the remembrance of our sinnnes, which vndoubtedly are chastised with such scourges of the Lord. Thereby humilitie shall bridle our impatience. Let vs then also call to minde this thought, that it pertaineth not to vs to remedie such euils: but this onely is left for vs, that we crave the helpe of the Lord in whose hands are the harts of Kings, and the bowings of kingdoms. He is the God that shall stand in the assemblie of Gods, and shall in the midst judge the Gods, from whose face all Kings shall fall, and be broken, and all the Judges of the earth that shall haue not killed his annointed, that haue written vnjust lawes to oppresse the poore in judgement, and doe violence to the caufe of the humble, to make widowe a pray, and rob the fatherlesse.

30 And here both his maruillous goodness, and power, and providence sheweth it selfe: for sometyme of his servants hereafter vn open enemys, and furnisheth them with his commandement, to take vengeance of their vnjust government, and to deliuer his people many wares oppressed out of miserable difficulties: sometyme he directeth to the same end the rage of men that contend and goe about an other thing. So he deliuered the people of Israel out of the tyranny of Pharaon by Moses: and out of the violence of Chusbas King of Syria, by Othomiel: and out of other thralldomes, by other Kings or Judges. So he tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Egyptians: the insolence of the Egyptians, by the Assyrians: the fiercenes of the Assyrians by the Chaldees:
Chaldees: the boldnes of Babylon, by the Medians, and by the Persians when Cyrus had subdued the Medians. And the unthankfulness of the kings of Juda and Israel, and their wicked obstinacy toward his so many benefactors, he did beat down and bring to diuerte sometime by the Assyrians, sometime by the Babylonians, albeit not all after one manner. For the first sort of men, when they were by the lawfull calling of God sent to do such acts: in taking armour against kings, they did not violate that majestie which is planted in kings by the ordinance of God: but being armed from heaven they subdued the lesser power with the greater: like as it is lawfull for kings to punish their Lords under them. But these latter sort, although they were directed by the hand of God whether it pleased him, and they unwittingly did worke, yet purposed in their minde nothing but mischief.

31 But howsoever the vrie doings of men be judged, yet the Lord did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloody scepters of proud kings, and overthrew their intolerable governments. Let Princes heare and be afraid. But we in the meane time must take great head, that we do not despise or offende that authoritie of Magistrates full of reverend majestie, which God hath established with most weightie decrees, although it remaine with most vnworthy men, and which do with their wickednesse, so much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of unbridled government be the reuengement of the Lord, let vs not by and by thinke that it is committed to vs, to whom there is given no other commandement but to obey and suffer. I speake alwaye of private men. For if there be at this time any Magistrates for the behalfe of the people, (such as in olde time were the Ephori, that were set against the kings of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, against the Roman Consuls: or the Demarchi, against the Senate of Athens: and the same power also which peraduenture, as things are now, the three estates have in euerie Realme, when they hold their principall, assemblies:) I do so not forbid them according to their office to withfitt the outrageous licentiousnesse of kings: that I affirme that if they winke at kings wilfully raging out and treading downe the poore communallie, their dissemblings is not without wicked breach of faith, because they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they know themselves to be appointed protectors by the ordinance of God.

32. But in that obedience which we have determined to be due to the authorities of Gouernours, that is always to be excepted, yea chiefly to be observed, that it do not leade vs away from obeying of him, whose will the desires of all kings ought to be subject to, whose decrees all their commandements ought to yecelde, to whose majestie their maces ought to be submitted. And truly how vnoorderly were it, for the satisfying of men to runne into his displeasure for whom men themselves are obeyed? The Lord therefore is the king of kings, who when he hath opened his holy mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and above all: next to him we bee subject to those men that are set ouer vs: but no other wise than in him. If they command any thing against him, let it have no place and let no accompt be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing stay upon all that dignitie where with the Magistrates excell, to which there is no wrong done, when it is brought into order of subjection in comparision of that singular and truely souereigne power of God. After this reason Daniel denieth that he had any thing offended against the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: because the king had passe his bounds, and had not onely become a wrong doer to men, but in lifting vp his hornes against God he had taken away power from himselfe. On the other side the Israelites are condemned because they were too much obedient to the wicked commandement of the king. For when Jerobeam had made golden calues, they forsook the Temple of God, and did for his pleasure turne to newe superstitions. With like lightnesse their pestiferous inclined themselues to the ordinances of their kings. With this the Prophet sharply reprocheth reproch them, that they embraced the commandements of the king: so farre is it off, that the pretence of humilitie may deserve prais, wherwith the flatterers of the court do cover themselves and deceiv the simple; while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commanded them of their princes: so though God resigned his right to mortall men, giving them the rule of mankind: or as though the earthly power were miniished, when it is made subject to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers do humbly tremble for feare. I know how great and how present perill hangeth over this constancie, because kings do most displeasantly suffer themselves to be despised, whose displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But soh this decree is proclaimed by the heavenly herald Peter: That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that we then performe that obedience which the Lord requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatfoever it be, than swarue from godlines. And that our courageous should not faint, Paul putteth also another spurre to vs: That we were therefore redeemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, that we should not yeeld our selues in thralldom to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bound to ungodlinesse.

Praise be to God. T.N.

The first number signifieth the Book, the second the Chapter,

The fall of Adam proceeded not of intemperance of gluttonie, but of insinceri-ty: for he despiteful the word and truth of God, turned out of the way to the lies of Sathan: which insincerity opened the gate to ambition and pride, wherunto was addjoyned vnhankfulness: and ambition was the mother of disobedience 2.1.4.

By the fall of Adam all other creatures
haue bene after a fore deformed, it is no matter, that all mankind was corrupted, that is to say, swarued out of land from his first original, and made subject to curse;
This the old doctors called Original sin, but yet did not so plainly set forth this point of doctrine as was convenient. In the meane time it is proued by reasons and testimonies of scripture, that Pelagius fooly erred whē he said that by imitation only, not by propagation, sin passed from the first man into all his posterity 2.1.5,6.

And though the petilence of sinne do principally abide in the soule, yet it doth not therefore pertaine to the discoursing of this Doctrine, to dispute whether the soule of the childe commeth of the gendering substance of the father: for as much as the cause of the infection is not in the substance of the fleth or of the soule, but because it was ordained of God, that those gifts which he at the first had giuen to man, man should haue and loose them for him and his. Finally it maketh not against this doctrine, that the children of the faithfull are sanctified 2.1.7.

That by the fall of Adam the natural gifts in man were corrupted and the supermatural were taken away, is a saying that many haue vried, but few haue vnder-stood 2.2.4,16. which saying is expounded 2.2.12. that is to say, that the supernatural gifts, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, desirous endeavour of holines and righteousnes were taken away, but are restored by Christ: & that the natural gifts, namely the vnder-standing mind, & the hart are corrupted, because the soundnesse of vnderstanding and the vprightnesse of hart were both taken away: Also that reason in man was not vterly blotted out, but partly weakened and partly corrupted: and to wil, because it cannot be seuered from the nature of man, was not vterly destroied, but made thrall to corrupt desires 2.2.12.

It is proued by the testimonies of Augustine and of the scripture, that God not onely foreseee or sufferte, but also by his will disposed the fall of the first man, & in him the vaine of his posterity 3.23.7,8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God although Moses do not express them in the histo-rie of the creation 1.14,3.

Of the time or order wherein they were created, it is not expedient to inquiere, for as much as the scripture (which we ought to follow for our rule) declareth nothing thereof.
The Table.

why the heavenly spirits are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, Principalities, powers, dominions, thrones, gods. 1.14.5

Concerning Angels the Scripture teacheth so much as is available for our comfort and for the confirming of our faith, namely that they are distributors & ministers of God's bountifulnes toward vs, and the same by ducers waies. 1.14.6,9.

Not only one Angel hath special care of every one of vs, but they all with one content doe watch for our safety: and therefore it is superfluous to inquire whether every man have his seuerall Angell assigned to be his keeper. 1.14.7.

Of the number & degrees of Angels, it is curiousnes to inquire, and rashnes to determine: And why, whereas they be spirits, the Scripture painteth them with wings vnnder Cherubin and Seraphin. 1.14.8.

Against the Sadduces and such other fantatical men, it is proved by sundry testimonies of the Scripture, that angels are not qualities or inspirations without substance, but very spirits in deed. 1.14.9.

That superstition is herein to be avoided, and that wee give not to Angels those things that belong onely to God and Christ. 1.14.10.

For avoiding of this peril, we must consider that whereas God vseth their service, he doth it not of neede, as though he could not be without the, but for the comfort of our weakeffe. 1.14.11. And therefore whatso ever is said of the ministry of Angels, ought to be referred to this end, that overcoming all distrust, our truft in God shoule be thereby the more strongly estabished, & not that they should lead vs away from God. 1.14.12.

That the Angels also were created after the likenesse of God. 1.15.3.

Of the ascending of Christ into heaven.

Although Christ in his rising againe began more fully to shew forth his glorie and power: yet in his ascending into heaven he first truly began his kingdom, because he then powred out greater abundance of his spirit, more royally adued his regne, & shewed greater power both in helping them that are his, & in overthrowing his enemies. And yet that he is so abcent according to the presence of his flesh, that he is alwaye every where according to the presence of his maiesty, & with the faithfull according to his unspakeable and inuisible grace. 1.14.16.

B.

Baptifme.

The definition of Baptifme. The first end thereof is to seue our faith before God, the other end, to seue our confession before men. It bringeth to our faith three things, first that it is a signe of our cleansing, affliging vs, that al our finnes are done away. 4.15.1. which is prooved by testimonies of the Scripture, and that it is not the water that cleanseth vs, but the blood of Christ. Sect. 2.

The force of Baptifme is not restrained to the time past: but we are by it washed and cleansed once for al our life: and yet that we may not hereof take a libertie to finne from thence forward. 4.15.3.

The power of the keyes (as they call it) that is to say, the ministrie of the Church, by which the forgiveness of finnes is daily preached vnto vs, is not to be feuered from Baptifme. 4.15.4.

The second fruit of faith by Baptifme, is that it sheweth vs our mortifying in Christ, and a new life in him. 4.15.5.

The third fruit is, that it testifieth that we are so vnite to Christ, that we are partakers of all his good things. For which cause Christ is called the proper object of Baptifme, and the Apostles baptised into the name of Christ, in whom we do so obtaine the matter both of our cleansing and of our regeneration, as we obtaine the cause thereof in the father, and the effect in the holy Ghost 4.15.6.

It is prooved that the Baptifme was al one which was ministrated of John and of the

the Apostles, although some of the olde Doctors thought otherwise 4.15.7. and that it maketh not to the contrary, that more abundant graces of the Spirit are poured out, since the resurrection of Christ. But yet there is in baptism a difference to be made of the person of Christ from Iohn, and from the Apostles and other ministers.4.15.8.

Both our mortifying and our cleansing were as by shadow signified among the people of Israel, by the passage through the sea, and the comfortable calling of the cloud.4.15.9.

It is false which some have taught, that by baptism we are restored to the same righteousness and purities of nature which Adam had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God doe remain yet some leaunings of sinne, although the same reign not in them: which doth whet their endeavours, & doth not give them occasion to flatten themselves.4.15.10,11. the same is proved by Paul. Sect. 12.

How baptism doth confirm our confession before men.4.15.13.

What is the order to the baptism, both for confirmation of our faith, and for a confession before men. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not enclased in the Sacrament, so as they be given to vs by the vertue thereof.4.15.14,15.

Baptism is nothing increas'd by that he doth minister it, nor diminished by his unworthiness: against the Donauists, & our Cataphytes which require a rebaptising, because we have bin baptized in the kingdom of the Pope.4.15.16. their arguments are confuted Sect. 17,18.

Baptism is a continual Sacrament of repentance for all our life, so that we need no other Sacrament of penance. 4.19.17.

Of the pouring of the water, the waxe candel, the chiafme, the blowing, the sipple, and such other things added to the simple ceremonie of Christ: and the order of purely ministring it in the church is shewed.4.15.19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the ministers of the church and not to private men, much lese to women: and the contrary objections are confuted 4.15,20,21,22.

Baptisme of infants.

The baptising of infants doth very well agree with Christes institution, and with the nature of the signe,4.16.&c.

Baptisme succeed in the place of Circumcision, wherein they be like, and wherein they be unlike.4.16,33,4.

Infants are not to bee debarred from baptism, for the Lord doth make them partakers of the thing signified in baptism.4.16,5. & that the Lord doth regenerate infants. Sect. 17,18,19.

Sith it is certaine that the same covenent, which it pleased God to make with Abraham, is sealed in infants with the outward Sacrament, therefore ought baptism also to have place among them 4.16,6.

Baptising of infants is well prooved by this that Christ embraced children and laid his hands upon them.4.16,7.

A confutation of certaine arguments of the enemies of infants baptism, 4.16,8,22,23,25,27,28,29.

There commeth great fruitu by the baptizing of infants, both to the faithfull parents & to the children.4.16,9. Which fruitu Satan travaileth by the Anabaptistes to take from vs.4.16,32.

A confutation of the adversaries arguments, saying, that there be other things signified in baptism than there are in Circumcision: that our covenant differeth from the olde covenant: that other are called children at this day than were at that time.4.16,10,11,12,13,14,15.

A confutation of their other taine differences betweene Circumcision and baptism. Sect 16. Alfo of this objection, that baptism is a Sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infants.4.16,20,21.

In them of ripe age, faith and understanding ought to go before baptism: but in infants, the baptism of the faithful goeth before understanding.4.16,24.

A confutation of their errors, which condemneth eternall death all that are not baptised.4.16,26.

Bearing of the Cross.

It behooueth that we deny our selves, that we may beare the crosse, because it is Gods will to exercise all his vsder the crosse, beginning at Christ his first be-gotten sonne, Which fellowhipp with Christ doth alreadie giue vs great ground of patience and comfort. 3 8 1.

It is for many causes necessarie for vs to lead our life vsnder a continual crosse: first to beare downe our arrogances and truft of our owne strength, And this reme-die even the most holy do need, as is proved by the example of David. 3 8 2. Here-by our truft in God is confirmed, and our hope encreased. Sect. 3.

Secondly, that our patience may bee tried, & we may be framed to obedience. 3 8 4. Which is most needfull for vs, as the wantonnes of our flesh is so great to make vs shake off the yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently. Sect. 5.

Sometime also to punish our offences committed: wherein wee acknowledge that hee doth the office of a good father towardes us, but contrariwise the vnfaith-ful are oftentimes made more obstinate. 3 8 6.

A singular comfort when we suffer either shame or losse, or any other calamities for righteousnes: which crosse most properly belongeth to the faithfull. 3 8 7.

How necessarie it is for the faithfull, in the bitternes of afflictions, to be furnished with this thought, that God loveth them, but is angrie with their faults. 3 4 34.

Bishops.

The name of Bishops in the old church was given to some one in every feueral company of ministers, for politike order, and not that they should beare a Lordlie rule over other. 4 4 2.

It was the office as well of the Bishop as of other priests, to preach and mini-ster the Sacraments. 4 4 3.

do make man a worker with God. Also against them that hang election upon that which followeth election. 3.24.3.

The certainties of our election is to be known by the word and calling of God, and we ought not to precast into the eternal counsel of God. 3.24.4.

The father hath chosen us only in Christ, in him therefore let vs behold the steadfast ground of our election. 3.24.5, and to that thereof also we may conceive a sure confidence of perseverance to the end. 3.24.6,7,8,9.

Two kinds of calling univerful, and special. 3.24.8.

It is proved by divers examples and testimonies of scripture, that the elect before their calling doe differ nothing from other men, and that it is fall worse which from men doe dreame, that there is a certaine seed of election planted in their harts even from their nativity. 3.24.10,11.

It is shewed at large that as God doth by the effectualnesse of his Calling towards the elect, make perfect the salvation to which he had by his eternal counsel appointed them; so hee hath his judgments against the reprobates, whereby he puteth his purpose concerning them in execution, and maketh a way for his predestination. 3.24.12,13,14, &c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals first began, and how they have so suddenly start vp to so great honour. 4.7.30.

Ceremonies.

The old Ceremonies are taken away, as touching their vice only, but not as touching their effect, for we have the same effect at this day most evidently & effectually in Christ. And this doth nothing diminish their holiness, as it is proved 2.7.16. & being weighed by themselves & without Christ, they are worthily called of Paul handwritings against vs. 2.7.17.

The ordinances concerning Ceremonies in the Popes law, doe command observation for the most part unprofitable, and sometime also foolish although they have a great seeming of wildome: moreover they oppose the Sciences with their infinite multitude. 4.10.11,12,13.

The Popish Ceremonies can not be executed by this colour, that they be ordained for the instruction of the ignorant, as the ceremonies of the law were: because there appeareth in this point a manifest difference between vs and the people before Christ. 4.10.14.

The popish ceremonies are beclouded to be sacrifices cleansing sins, & defending eternall life: they are without doctrine, and are snares to catch monie. 4.10.15.

Charitie toward our neighbour.

It is proved, against the Sorbonists that Charitie is the love of our neighbor and not of our selves. 2.8.54.

Under the name of neighbour is contained every man, be he neerer so much a stranger to vs, and our enemies. 2.8.55. & therefore the Schoolemen are condemned of ignorance, which of the commandments of God, not to desire revenge, & to love our enemies, have made counsels, to the necessarie keeping whereof Monkes alone doe binde themselves: & it is proved that the olde doctors of the Church, yea & Gregorie himselfe, thought otherwise. 2.8.56,57.

We have need of patience, that we be not weare of doing good to other. And we ought not to have respect to the vnworthinesse or other qualities of men which might withdrawe vs, but to God which so commaundeth vs. 3.7.6.

To the fulfilling of all the parts of charitie, it is not enough if we performe all the dutifull deeds of Charitie, but wee must doe it with a sincere affection of hart. Wherein the chief point is, that we take vpon our selves the person of him whom we see to neede our helpe. So that wee aavide disdainfull pride and other corruptings of Charitie. 3.7.7.

Christ and the Apostles in rehearsing the summe of the lawe doe sometime leave out the first table: not for that it more availeth to the summe of righteousnes to live innocently with men, than to honour God with godliesse: but because vnfailed Charitie is the proofe of true godlinesse. 2.8.52,53.

Of the invisible Church: and of the visible Church, the signes whereof are the pure preaching of the worde and ministritation of Sacraments. 4.8.7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

Wherefore those signes are, we ought not to depart from that fellowship. 4.8.12.

There may some fault crepe in, either in doctrine or in ministirnation of Sacraments, for the which yet we ought not to cast off the communion of that Church, and much lesse for the imperfection of life and corrupptneffe of manners. And herein the Anabaptists are reproved. 4.1.12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

The Church is none otherwise holie, but that it alway hath many faults, & yet it ceaseth not to bee the Church, as is prooved by testimonies of Scripture and the experience of all ages. 4.1.17, 18, 19.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is prooved by the exaiple of the Apostles and Prophets, & of Christ himselfe, that whatsoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not given to men, but to the worde, the ministiration whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was never lawfull for the Church, to teach any other thing, than that which she received of the Lord. 4.8.1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9.

Christ hath euer taught his Church: and yet he hath vset divers manners of teaching according to the diererisitie of times, ere the law was written, in the time of the law & the Prophets, and last of all since that he himselfe was openly shewed in the flesh. 4.8.5, 6, 7.

False Church.

The use of confessing to a Priest was very ancient, but yet free as a politike order, not as a law set by Christ or his Apo-istles : and afterwarde the fame was abrogate by Nectarius Bishop of the Church of Constantinople, because of a Deacon which had vnder that pretence abused a woman. This tyrannous law was not laid vpon Churches

wherewith poor consciences were by divers circumstances tormented therein. 3. 4. 17.

By a similitude is described how a great part of the world hath hitherto obeyed such illusions. That it is an impossible lawe, and maketh men hypocrites. And then is shewed a most certaine rule of confession according to the example of the publicane. 3. 4. 18.

A confutation of this article, that finnes are not forgiven, and that the gate of Paradise is shut, &c. unless there be first firmly conceived a vow of confessing, where also their objection is confused that judgement cannot be pronounced till the cause be heard, that is to say, that abolution cannot be gien till all the finnes be rehearsed. 3. 4. 18.

It is no manuell that we condemn and abolish auricular confession, and our adversaries doe falsely affigne so great profits unto it, for so much as on the other side it arrieth men to boldnes of sinning 3. 4. 19.

They doe falsely pretend that they have the power of the keyes, both they are not the successors of the Apostles, nor haue the holy Ghost, forasmuch as they doe daily without consideration loose those things which the Lord hath commanded to be bound, and binde those he hath commanded to be loosed. 3. 4. 20.

It is prooved false that they say that the power of the keyes may sometime be used without knowledge, forasmuch as by that mean the abolution should be vncertaine. Where also is spoken of the abolution or condemnation which the ministers of the Gospel or the Church doe pronounce according to the word, and of the certainty thereof. 3. 4. 21.

The abolution of the Priests in the Papacie is vncertaine, as well on the behalf of him that affoleth as of him that confesseth: but contrariwise it is in the abolution of the Gospel, which hangeth upon this onely condition, if the sinner feeleth his purging in the onely sacrifice of Christ, and to yeeld to, the grace offered vnto him. 3. 4. 22.

The Popish Doctors, when they alledge for themselfes the power of loosing given to the Apostles, doe wrongfully wret to auricular confession those sayings which Christ spake partly of preaching of the Gospel, and partly of Excommunication. True Confession.

What kinde of confession is taught vs by the word of God, namely to confess to God the knowe of our harts and of all our thoughts. 3. 4. 9.

Out of this secret confession made to God, followeth a voluntarie confession before men, so as it is behoouefull for the glory of God or the humbling of our selues. And of this second kinde there was an ordinarie vs in the olde Church, and is also in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a speciell manner to be vsed, whensoever it shall happen that the people be guiltie in any generall offense, or to be plagued with any calamity. Of the proife of such confession. 3. 4. 10-11.

Of two other sorts of private confession: of which the first is vsed for our own cause, when we require comfort of our brethren, because the feeling of finnes doth vex and trouble vs: in which case we must chiefly resort to our Pasteors: and this remedy is warlie and moderately to be vsed, that no bondage be brought in. The other sort is to appease and reconcile our neighbour, if he be in any thing offended by our fault, under which kinde is contained their Confession which haue sinned so far as to the offence of the whole Church. 3. 4. 12,13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kinds of Confession. Of the fruit which they that confess doe receive thereby, because they know that forgivenes of finnes is declared to them by the meffinger of Christ. 3. 4. 14.

Of Counsell.

Creation of the world.

the Creation of things, yet least the faithfull should fall away to the fained inceptions of the heathen, his will was that the historie of the creation should remaine written, and the time thereof expressed in the Scripture 1.14.

minde to create heauen and earth 1.14.1.

For the same purpose it is rehearsed that God ended his worke, not in a moment, but in fixe daies: and likewise the order is set foorth, namely that Adam was not created til God had first furnished the world with all plente of good things 1.14.2,22.

chius concerning two originall beginnings
1.14.3.

It is provoued by the Scriptures that the knowledge of God which appeareth in the workmanship of the world can not by it selfe alone bring vs into the right way 1.5.13. &
yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sec.

Although the beholding of heauen and earth and the consideration of the ordering of things pertaining to men, do moue vs to worship God, yet of these things passe away without profit, even from the wisest philosophers 1.5.10.

gods, & the contrarities of opinion among the feites of Philosophers concerning God

a certaine manner presented himselfe to be sense, 1.5.1.

The wisedome of God is testified, not only by those things which philosophers and learned men do finde by speculation in heaven and earth, but also which common men do perceive by the onely helpe of their eies, 1.5.2.

That we may with true faith conceiue so much as behoueth vs to know concerning God, it is good to learne the historie of the Creation of the world, in such sort as Moses hath set it forth, the chief points whereof are briefly rehearsed 1.14.20.

The consideration of the works of God, that is to say, of the Creation of all things, ought to bee applied to two principall ends: first that we do not with unthankfull negeting or forgetfulness passe over his vertues which he presenteth apparently to bee seene in his creatures, 1.14.21. Secondly, that wee may learne to apply them to our selues whereby we may strive vp our selues to the truth, invocation, praise, and love of him, 2.14.22.

Deacons.

Of Deacons and the two sorts of them.

In the old Church the office of Deacons was the same that it was in the apostles time. Of subdeacons and archdeacons, and when they first began, 4.4.5.

Of Popish subdeacons, and their trifling office, and the fond maner of their ordering, 4.19.33.

Of Popish Deacons and their institution, 4.5.15.

The Papists have no true Deaconrie left, so much as all the disposition of Church goods among them is openly turned to sacrilege and robbery, 4.5.16, 18, 19.

A coruertation of the shamelesnes of certain Papistes, which say that the riotous excelle of priests and of all the Popish church, is the gloriousnes of the kingdom of Christ which the holy prophets spake of before, 4.5.17.

Death of Christ.

Although Christ hath by the whole course of his obedience, that is to say, by his whole life and all the partes thereof, redeemed vs, yet the Scripture to set forth more plainly the manner of our salvation, doth ascribe the same as peculiar and proper to the death Christ. In the which the voluntarie yeelding of Christ hath the first place, which yet was so voluntarie as hee gave over his owne affection not without strife. Also his condemnation is to be considered: Wherin two things are to be noted, namely that Christ was reputed among the wicked, and yet that his innocencie was oftentimes testified even by the judges owne mouth, 2.1.5.

The manner of his Death is to be marked, that is to say, the accursed cross. And it is declared by many testimonies of Efaie and the Apostles, that this behoued so to be, that the curse which was due to vs being cast vpon him and so overcome and taken away, we should be delivered. And this was figuratively represented in the sacrifices of Moses lawe, which at the last was performed in Christ the Original truth of all figures, 2.1.6.

Both in the Death and burial of Christ a double benefit is set before vs that is to say, deliverance from Death whereunto we were in bondage and the mortifying of our flesh, 2.1.6.

Descending of Christ to hell.

The Descending of Christ to Hell containeth the mysteries of a great thing, and is of no small importance to the effect of our redemption. Divers expositions of this article are rehearsed and confuted, 2.16.8, 9.

A true, godlie, holie and comfortable exposition thereof out of the word of God, which is also confirmed by the testimonie of the old doctors, that Christ did not only suffer a bodily death, but also did feele the rigour of Gods vengeance, whereby hee might both appease his wrath and satisfie his inr judgement: and therefore it behooved that hee shoulde, as it were hand to hand wrestle wrestle with the power of hell and with the horror of everlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemie, or angrie with him. But he did suffer the greuoulines of Gods feueritie, in respect that he being striken and beaten with the hand of God, did feele all the tokens of Gods wrath, and punishment 16.10.11.

A confutation of certaine wicked and unlearned men, which at this day do finde fault with this expositions crying out that the Sonne of God hath wrong done to him, & that he is charged with desperatio, which is contrarie to Faith. Therefore it is proved against them with manifet testimonies, that these two things doe very well stand together, that Christ feared, was troubled in Spirit, was afraid, was tempted in every point as we are, and yet that he is without sinne 2.16.12.

Diuels.

Those things that the Scripture teacheth concerning Diuels, tend commonly to this end, that we should be carefull to beware of their deceits, and furnish ourصلues with those weapons which may be able to beate backe the most mightie enemies 1.14.13.

That we should be the more stirred vp to doe so, it sheweth us that there is not one or two Diuels, but great armies of euill spirites that make warre against vs and in what sense it sometime speaketh of the Diuell in the singular number 1.14.14.

This ought to enflame vs to a continuall warre with the Diuell, for that he is euerie where called enemie to God & vs 1.14.15.

The Diuell is naturally wicked, a murderer, a tyrant, and enemie of all maliciousnesse 1.14.15. But this evilnesse of nature is not by creation but by corruption 1.14.16.

It is curiositie to enquire of the cause, maner, time and fashion of the fall of the euill Angels, forasmuch as the Scripture leaueth it unspoken 1.14.16.

This the Diuell hath of himselfe and of his owne naughtinesse, defirously and purposely to finde against God, but he can doe and perfoure nothing vnlesse God be willing and graunt it 1.14.17.

God so tempereth this government, that he granteth Satan no reign over the Soules of the faithfull, forasmuch as in the ende they ever obtaine the victorie, although in some particular doings they be wounded and beaten downe: but he onely giueth the wicked to him to governe, and to use his power upon their Soules and bodiues 1.14.18.

A confutation of them which say that Diuels are nothing else but euill affections or perturbations: and it is proved by testimonies of Scripture, that they are mindes or spirites endued with senfe and understanding 1.14.19.

Discipline.

Discipline is a thing most necessary in the Church 4.12.1.

Of private admonishings, which is the first foundation of the discipline of the Church 4.12.2.

Of the Ecclesiastical Senate, that is to say, the Seniors or Elders, which together with the Bishops haue the ouersight of manners 4.3.8.

Princes as well as the common people ought to be subject to the Discipline of the Church, and so was it wont to be in the old time 4.12.7.

Of the olde Discipline of the Clergie, and the yeerely assembling of provinciall synodes: and how this order is buried in the Papacie, fauing that they keepe certaine shadowes thereof 4.12 22.

Excommunication.

W hat is the power of the jurisdiction of the Church, and how necessary and auncient it is 4.11.1, 4.

Of the power of binding and loosing so much as pertaining to Discipline, wherein there is spoken of Excommunication 4.11.2.

This power of the Church is distinct from the Ciuill power, and the one is a helpe to the other. Therefore the opinion of some men is false, which thinke that it ought to have no place where are Christian Magistrates 4.11.13, 8.

This is a stayed and continuall order in the Church, and not enduring onely for a time 4.11.4.

Of exercising the discipline of the church according to the proportion of sines, forasmuch as some be private & some be publick, some be negligent defaults, some be hainous offences, 4.12, 3, 4, 6.

In Excommunication seueritie ought to be tempered. And in this behalfe is noted the extreme rigorouſhness of them in old time, 4.12, 8.

Every private man ought to esteem them that be Excommunicate as strangers from the Church, but not to accompt them past hope, but to endevour to the vttermost of their power to bring them into the way againe, 4.12, 9, 10.

If the bench of Elders doe not so diligently correct faults as they ought, or if the Pasteurs cannot amende all things as they would, yet private men ought not to depart from the Church, neither ought the Pasteurs to take of their ministerie, 4.12, 11.

Against the precepts of the old Donatsites and of the Anabaptites of our dayes, which doe acknowledge no congregation of Chrift, but where there is in euerie point an Angelike perfection, 4.12, 12.

If the corruption of any sinne have infected the whole multitude, the rigorouſhness of discipline must bee tempered with the mercie, left the whole body be destroyed, 4.12, 13.

F.

Faith.

The name of Faith otherwise taken among holy writers than it is among the prophanes, 4.22, 13.

How it is to be understande that God is the object of Faith, 2.6, 4.

Of Faith, And here the Sophisters are reproved, which understand nothing else by this word Faith, but a common affent to the historic of the Gospell, and doe simply call God the object of Faith, in the meantime leaving out Christ, without whom there is no Faith, nor any access to God, 3.2, 1.

A confutation of the Schoole mens doctrine concerning vnexpressed Faith, whereas Faith requireth an expresse reknowledging of the goodness of God, in which standeth our righteousness, 3.2, 2.

Our Faith, so long as we are wauering in the world, is enwrapt with many remnants of ignorance, and in all things indefinitie is ever mingled with Faith, whereof many examples are seene in the Disciples of Chrift before that they came to perfect light, yet this is still most true, that understanding is ever royned with Faith, 3.2, 3, 4.

There is a certaine obedience to Chrift, and aptneffe to learne, with a desire to profit, which is called by the name of Faith, whereas it is but a preparation to Faith, and that same may be called an vnexpressed Faith: yet it faire differeth from the Papists invention, 3.2, 5.

The true Faith or knowledge of Chrift, is when we conceiue him in such sort as he is offered of the Father, that is to say, clothed with his Gospell. And Faith hath a mutual relation to the word and the word to Faith, because the word is the fountain of Faith, the ground of Faith, and the mirror in which Faith beholdeth God, 3.2, 6.

Faith, although it affect to all the parts of the word of God, yet most properly it hath regard therein to the good will and mercie of God, that is to say, the promises of grace grounded vpon Chrift, for the understanding & certaine whereof, the holy Ghost lightenth our minds and strengtheneth our harts. Hereupon is gathered the definition of Faith, 3.2, 7.

A confutation of the Sophisters distinctio of Faith, formed and formecke, whereby it appeareth that they never thought of the singular gift of the holy Ghost, for as much as Faith can in no wise be feuered from a godly affection, 3.2, 8.

This word Faith hath diverse significations, and is sometime taken for the power to doe miracles, with which gift of God, sometime the wicked are endued: Sometime it is figuratiuely taken for that knowledge of God which is in some wicked men, which is rather a shadow & image of Faith, of.
of which faith there are divers sorts in them.

3.2.9,10.

The reprobate have also sometime such a like feeling as the elect have, yet they do not fully conceive the force of spiritual grace, but only confess it. Nevertheless the same is a certain inferior working of the holy ghost. But this feeling differeth far from the peculiar testimonies which the elect.

Yet is not the Spirit deceitfull, which lightly sprinkles the reprobate sometime with such a knowledge of the Gospel, and feeling of the love of God as afterward doth vanish away. Sometimes also there is stirred vp in their hearts a certain desire of mutual love towards God, but such a love as is a byred and not a harte love. At length it is concluded that there be some which do not frame a faith, and yet do lacke the true faith. Which is also proved by testimonies.

3.2.12.

And such a feeling is in the Scripture called faith, although it be vnpertly so called.

3.2.13.

Faith is sometime taken for the found doctrine of religion, & the whole summe thereof: contrariwise sometime it is restrained to some particular objects, and sometime it signifies the ministrie of the Church.

3.2.13.

Faith is most rightfully called knowledge and science, and yet it is such a knowledge as rather consisteth of certaine perswasion than of vnderstanding, for so much as that which our minde conceiued by faith is most infinite.

3.2.14.

Faith is not content with a doubfull opinion or a darke conceiuing, but requireth a full and settled assurednesse: and hereunto are to bee referred all those titles of commendation wherewith the holy Ghost setteth forth the authority of the word of God.

3.2.15.

Many doe so conceive the mercie of God, that they receive very little comfort thereof, because they doubt whether he will be mercifull to themselves or no: but there is a farre other feeling of the abundant store of Faith, the chiefest whereof is that we do not thinke the promises to bee true without our selves only, but rather that by inwardly imbracing them we may make them our owne. Hereupon is gathered, who may truly be called faithfull.

3.2.15,16.

Though the faithfull in reknowling the goodness of God toward them are not onely oftentimes tempted with vnquietnesse, but also are sometime shaken with most grievous terrors: yet this withstanding not but that faith bringeth assurednesse with it, because howsoever they be troubled, yet they never fall and departe from that pure assiance which they have conceived of the mercie of God, but resting with their owne weakenesse they alway get the upper hand at last: which is proved by many examples in David.

3.2.17.

A description of the battell of the Hebr & the spirit within a faithfull soule.

3.2.18.

The assurednes of Gods good will.

3.2.18.

A constestation of the most pestilent little reasoning of certaine halfe Papistes, which although they confess that so oft as we looke vpon Christ, we finde plentifull matter to hope well, yet will needs haue vs to waver and doubt in consideration of our owne vnworthinesse. And it is proved that we ought not to looke for assured saluation, forasmuch as Christ by a certaine maruellous communion doth daily grow together more and more into one bodie with vs.

3.2.24.

So soone as we haue any one drop of faith we begin to beholde God mercifull vnto vs, although a farre off in deed, yet with so assured sight, as we know we are not deceived: Both these points are proved by testimonies of Paul.

3.2.19,20.

It is shewed by examples, how Faith arrieth and fortifieth it selfe with the word of God to bee the violent assaults of tentations, and how the godly minde neuer suf-fereth the affiance of Gods mercie to be plucked away from it, although it be assailed with many remnants of vnbeliefe and distrust.

In the good will of God: which faith is said to haue respect vnto, although faith do chiefly looke vnto the assured expectation of eternall life, yet there are also contained promises of this present life and a perfect suretie of all good things, but the same faith as may be gathered of the word: both these points are confirmed by testimonies.
of Scripture. 3.2.28.

Faith although it embrace the wordes of God in suere pointe, that is to saie, in the commandements also and in the prohibitions and threatenings, yet hath her foundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in the free promise of mercy: and for this reason the Gospel is called the word of faith, and is set as contrarie to the law. 3.2.29.

Yet doe we not by this distinction teare faith in sunder as Pighius shamefully cauleth 3.2.30.

Faith doeth no leffe neede the wordes of God, than the fruit doth neede the liuely roote of the tree, and with the wordes must be ioyned a consideration of the power of God, without the which mens eares will either not willingly, heare the worde, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered: in that that it is effectuall, that is to say, by the worke of God, and by his benefits either particular or auncient, & such as he hath bestowed upon the whole Church. 3.2.31.

The faithfull oftentimes do behaue themselves, that some errors are mingled with their faith, & they seeme to passe the bounds of the word, but yet so that faith hath alway the upper hand: This is proved by the examples of Sara and Rebecca, whom in the crooked turnings of their mind, God did by a secret bridle hold fast in the obedience of his word. 3.2.32.

By reason of our blindness and stiffneskednes, the worde sufficeth not to make vs haue faith, vnlesse the spirit of God do enlighen our minde, and strengthen our hart with his power: and the same spirit is not onely the beginer of our faith, but also doth increaseth it by degrees 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the most parte of men a most strange doctrine, that no man can beleue in Christ, but he to whom it is giuen, yet is proved to be most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and examples 3.2.34.

Therefore faith is called the Spirit of Faith, the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gift, which he giueth by singular priviledge to whom he will, as it is proved by notable sentences taken out of Augustine. 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the mind be enlightened with understanding of the word, vnlesse also the assurednes of the word be poured into the verie heart, both which things the Spirit worketh, which is therefore called the seale, the pledge, and the spirit of promise 3.2.36.

Although faith be tossed with divers dubbings, yet it alway at the last, escapeth out of the gulf of ostenations, & receieth most sweete quietnes. 3.2.37.

A conuation of the damnable doctrine of the Schoolmen, which say that we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God toward vs, than by moral coniecture. 3.2.38.

They are proued to be miserably blinde, in saying that it is rafelines for vs to conceive an undoubted knowledge of the will of God: A good comparison of them & Paul in this point of doctrine 3.1.39.

A conuation of their trifling shift that although wee may take upon vs to judge of the grace of God according to the present state of righteousness, yet the knowledge of perfecting to the end abideth in supene. 3.2.40.

It is proued that the definition of faith taught in this chapter, Sect.7. agreeith with the Apostles definition : Heb. cap. 11. And the error of the Schoolmen, that charitie is before faith and hope, is confuted by the testimonie of Bernard. 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendred of faith, and is the undoubted companion of faith, so that who soever lacketh hope, is proued also to have no faith. Also faith is nourished and strengthened by hope, and how necessarie are the helps of hope to stablilsh faith, which is affailed with so many sortes of tentations. 3.2.42.

By reason of this conjoyning and alliance of faith and hope, the scripture doth many times vs those two wordes without difference, and sometime ioyneth them together. A conuation of the error of Peter Lombarde, which makeith two foundations of faith, that is to say, the grace of God, & the merit of works. 3.2.43.

Fear

The faithfull are oftentimes troubled with Fear and distrust by reason of the feeling of their owne weaknesses. 3. 2. 17.

Another kind of Fear conceived in a bodily hart, either by examples of goddes vengeance against the wicked, or by consideration of his owne miserie: Such fear is so much not contrarie to faith, that the faithfull are much exhorted to have it. Neither is it any maruell, if there be in a faithfull soule both fear and faith, sith on the other side in the wicked there are both dull negligence and carelesnes. 3. 2. 22, 23.

The fear of God procedeth out of a double feeling, namely when we honor god as our father, and feare him as our Lorde: Neither is it any maruell if one minde hate both those affections.

This fear differeth from the feare of the vnfaithfull, which they commonlie call a seruile feare. 3. 2. 27.

Of forsaking of our selues.

The first beginning of framing our life after the rule set forth in the law, is to consider that we are not at our owne libertie, but hallowed and dedicate to God. And therefore we ought to forsake our selues, and our owne reason (which as the Philosophers thinke, ought alone to be obeyed) to the end that we may be governed by the word and Spirit of the Lord. 3. 7. 1.

Also that we ought not to seeke those things that are of our owne, but those things that are according to the will of the Lorde, and so to centre in aduance his glorie. And that this is the forsaking of our selues, without which there is a world of vices enclosed in the foule of man, and if there be any seeming of vertue at all, the same is corrupted with wicked desire of glorie. 3. 7. 2.

The forsaking or mortifying of our selues, is partly in respect of men, and partly, yea, and chiefly in respect of God. Towards other men, the scripture commandeth vs to do two things: namely to preferre them in honour before our selues, and with unfaied truth to employ our selues wholly to procure their commodities. How the first of these points is to bee performed is taught in the 3. 4. 7 and also how the scripture leadeth vs by the hand to the second point is shewed in the 3. 7. 5.

See certaine things pertaining to this purpose. 3. 20. 43.

Frewill.

Man was endued with Frewill in the first estate of his creation. 1. 15. 8, which hee lost by his fall. Of this the Philosophers were ignorant, and so all such as follow them, giving freewill to man, are vnterly deceived. 1. 15. 8.

The pliablenesse or weak power of freewill, which was in the first man, doth not excuse his fall. 1. 15. 8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glory of God, to acknowledge all our strength to be but a staffe made of reede, yea, but a snoffe. In the meane time we must beware, that while we take all yprightnesse from man, wee doe not thereof take occasion of slothfulness. But rather wee ought thereby to bee stirr'd vp to seeke in God all the goodnesse whereof we our selues are void: The defenders of freewill doe rather throw it downe headlong than stablish it. 2. 2. 1.

The Philosophers determine three powers of the soule, Vnderstanding, Sense, and Will or Appetite: and they thinke that the reason of mans understanding sufficient for his good governace: that will is by
The Table.

The Ecclesiastical writers, although they acknowledged the soundnesse of understanding, and the freedome of will to have been sore wounded by sinne, yet haue spoken too much Philosophically of this matter. The olde writers did it for this purpose, first because they were loth to teach a thing that should bee an absurditie in the common judgement of men, and also specially lest they should give a newe occasion of slothfulness to the flesh being alreadie too much dull to goodnesse, as appeareth by manie sayings of Chrysostome and Hierome. The Greeke doctors aboute all other, and specially Chrysostome, doe exceede measure in advancing freewill. But all the olde writers generally, except Augustine, do so varie and waver in this point of doctrine, that there can almost no certaintie bee gathered of their writings. They which came after the fell one after another to woofe and wooffe. The definitions of freewill out of Origen, Augustine, Bernard, Anselme, Peter Lombard, and Thomas 2.2.4.

In what things they do commonlie give freewill to man, and of the three sortes of mans will, 2.2.5.

Also of the common distincion of the three sortes of libertie, 2.2.5.

Whether man bee wholly depruied of power to doe good, or whether hee haue yet some power though it be weake: Where it is spoken of the common distincion of grace working and grace working together, and what is amisse in the same distincion, 2.2.6.

Forasmuch as it can not otherwise bee said that man hath free will, but because he doth euill of his owne will, and not by compulsion, it had bin very good for the church that this worde freewill had neuer bin vfed, which had raised vp men to a damnable trust of themselves. The old writers also doe ofte declare what they meane by that worde, specially Augustine, out of whom there are many places alleaged, where he weakeneth and mocketh the strengthe therof, both when he calleth it Bondwill, and when he expoundeth the thing it selfe as it is at large, 2.2.7,8.

Although the old Ecclesiastical writers doe sometime too much aduaunce freewill, and haue spoken doubtfully and diuertly in that matter: yet it appeareth by very manie of their sayings, that they little or nothing esteeming mans power, gaue the whole praisse of all goodnesse to the holy Ghost. Many such sentences are rehearsed out of Cyril, Augustine, Eucherius, Chrysostome, 2.2.9.

The power of mans will is not to bee weyghe by the succeffe of things, but by the choife of judgement and the affection of will. 2.4.8.

It is proued against the defenders of freewill that sinne is of necessitie, and yet nevertheless ought to be imputed: also that it is voluntarie, and yet cannot be avoided, 2.5.1.

A solution of another objection of theirs, where they say that vnlesse both vertues and vices proceed of free election of will, it were no reason that man shoulde either be punishd or rewardd. 2.5.2.

Also another objection, where they saie that if this were not the power of our will, to choose good or euill, then of necessitie either all men should be good, or all men euill, 2.5.3.

Against the same men also it is proued that exhortations, admonitions, and rebukings are not in vaine, although it be not in the power of the sinner to obey: and there is shewed what effect the same do worke both in the wicked and in the faithful. 2.5.4,5.

It is not to be gathered by the commandements and law of God, that man hath free will and strengthe to performe them, for God doth not onely command what ought to be done, but also promiseth grace to obieie. 2.5.6,7,9.

This is proued as well in the commandements which require the first conversion to God, as also in those which speake simplicite of the obseruing of the lawe, and those which command men to continue in the received grace of God. For the
The Table.

The fame God which requireth those things, doth testifie that the conversion of a sinner, holiness of life, steadfastness of constance, are his free gifts: and the praise thereof is not to be parted betweene God and man. 2, 5, 8, 9, 11.

The conditionall promises, as, if ye will, if yee heare, and such like, do not proue that there is man in power of willing or hearing: yet it is proued that God doth not mocke men in so bargaining with them. Also what is the vfe of such protestations, both toward the godly and toward the vn-godly. 2, 5, 10.

The reproochings, wherein God faith to his people that they were the caufe that they received not all kinde of good things at his handes, doe not proue that it was man power to escape the enuis wherewith they were afflicted. And there is spoken of the vfe of such reproochings as well toward them that obstinately goe forward in their faults, as toward the conformable that are converted to repentance. Also whereas the Scripture doth sometime gie to vs the office of doing, it doth so for no other reason but to awaken the slothfullnesse of the hen. 2, 5, 11.

The saying of Moses, The commandement is nere to thee, in thy mouth, and in thy hart &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of free will, for as much as hee there speaketh not of the bare commandements, but of the Evangelicall promises of the Law. 1, 5, 12.

No more do those places make for them, where it is saide that the Lorde looketh and watcheth to see what men wil doe. 2, 5, 13.

Also those places where good works are called ours: and wee are saide to doe that which is holy and pleasing to the Lord. And here is shewed that the onely Spirit of God worketh all good motions in vs, but yet not as in stocks. 2, 5, 14, 15.

G. God,

T He Scripture teaching the immeasurable and spirittuall substance of God, doth overthrow not onely the follies of the common people, but also the subtile inventions of prophan philosophie, and the errore of the Manichæes concerning two originall beginnings, and the false opinion of the Anthropomorphites concerning a bodily God. 1, 13, 1.

Gospel.

Christ, although hee were known to the Iewes in time of the lawe, was yet shewed in deede onely by the Gospel: and the holy Fathers tasted of that grace, which is nowe offered to vs with full abundance: they sawe the day of Christ albeit with a dim light, the glory whereof now thineth in the Gospel, without any veile betweene vs and it. 2, 0, 1, 2.

In the same place also is shewed, that the Gospel is properly and specially called the publishing of the grace gien in Christ, and not the promises that are written by the Prophets concerning the remission of sins. Against the doctrine of Sermettus, which taketh away the promises vnder this pretence, that by the faith of the Gospel we haue the fulfilling of all the promises, it is proued that though Christ offer to vs in the Gospel a present fulnesse of spirittuall good things, yet the enjoying thereof lieth hidden vnder the custodie of hope so long as wee liue in this worlde, and therefore we must yet rest upon the promises. 2, 9, 3.

A confutation of their error, which compare the law with the Gospel, none other-wise than the defervings of worke with the impuation of free rightousnesse. 2, 9, 4.

H. Holy Ghost.

Testimonies whereby the Godhead of the holy Ghost is prooued. i.13.14.15.

The holy Ghost is the bond wherewith Christ doth effectually binde vs to him, and without it, all that Christ hath suffred and done for the saluation of mankind doth nothing profit vs.3.1.1.3.

Christ came after a singular maner furnished with the holy Ghost, to teach vs from the world, and therefore he is called the Spirit of sanctification. Why he is sometime called the Spirite of the Father, and sometime the Spirite of the Sonne. He is called the Spirite of Christ, not only in respect that Christ is the eternal word, but also according to his person of Mediator.3.1.2.

An exposition of the titles wherewith the Scripture setteeth forth the holy Ghost: and there is erected of the beginning and whole restoring of our saluation: The titles be these, the Spirite of adoption, the earnest and seal of our inheritance, life, water, oyle, ointment, fire, a fountain, the hand of God, &c.3.1.3.

Faith is the cheefe worke of the holy Ghost, and therefore to it for the most part are all those things referred which are commonly founde in the Scripture to expresse the force and effectuall power of the holy Ghost.3.1.4.

Humilitie.

It is not the true Humilitie which God requireth of vs vnlesse we acknowledge our selues vitally void of all goodnesse and righteousnesse.3.12.6.

Of this Humilitie there is an example shewed in the Publicane.3.12.7.

That we may give place to the calling of Christ, both presumption and carelesnesse must be far away from vs,3.12.8.

There is no danger least man should take too much from himselfe, so that he learne that which wanteth in himselfe is to be recovered in God. It is a devilish worde, although it be sweete to vs, that lifteth vp man in himselfe: for repulsing whereof, there are recited out of the Scripture many weightie sentences, which doe rigorously throwe downe man: and also there are recited certaine promifes, which doe promife grace to none but to them that doe pine away with feeling of their owne pouerietie.2.2.10.

Certaine notable layings of Chrysostome and Augustine concerning true Humilitie. 2.2.11.

I.

Idoles.

The Scripture setteeth out God by certaine titles of addition and marks, not to the intent to binde him to one place or to one people, but to put difference betweene his holy Maiestie and Idols.2.8.15.

An exposition of the first commandement: where is shewed that worshipping, truft, invocation, and thankesgiuing, belong wholly to God, and no whit thereof may be concuied any otherwhere without great inuiron to him to whose cies all things are open.2.8.16.

An exposition of the second commandement: where is spoken of Idols and Images.2.8.17.

The Scripture, to the intent to bring vs to the true God, doth expressly exclude all the gods of the Gentiles, i.10.3. and specially all Idols and Images 1.1.1.

God is feuered from Idols, not onely that he alone shoulde have the name of God, but that he alone shoulde bee wholly worshipped, and nothing that belongeth to the Godhead should be concuied to any other. 1.12.1.

The glorie of God is corrupted with faffe lying, when any forme is appointed to it. 1.11.1.

It is prooued by textes and reasons, that God generally misliketh al Portraiture and Images that are made to expresse a figure of him, and this prohibition pertained not to the Jewes onely.1.11.2.

God did in old time to shew his presence by visible signes either to the whole people or to certaine chosen men, that the same signes admonished them of the incomprehensible substance of God.1.11.3.

It is prooued euen of Inmalts testimonie that the Papists are read, which defende the Images of God & of Saints with the example.

Iustification of faith.

Of the Iustification of faith, and first of the definition of the name, and of the thing itself. 3.11.1.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iustification of faith is of great importance. 3.11.1.

It is shewed by the scripture what it is to be justified by works, and what it is to be justified by faith. 3.11.2.3.4.

A confutation of the error of Osmander, concerning essentiall righteoufnes, which taketh from men, the earnest feeling of the true grace of Christ. 3. 11. 5, 6, 7, &c. to the 13.

A confutation of Osmanders inuention, that whereas Christ is both God and Man, hee was made righteousnes to vs in respect of his nature of Godhead and not of his Manhood. 3.11.8.9.

Against them which imagine a righteoufnes compounded of faith and workes, it is prooued that when the one is established, the other must needs be overthrown. 3.11.13, 14.15.16.17.18.

It is prooued by the scripture against the Sophisters, that this is a sure principle, that we are justified by faith onely. 3.11.19.20.

It is prooued by testimonies of scripture, that the righteoufnes of faith is reconciliation with God, which consisteth onely upon the remission of sins. 3.11.21.22.

By the onely intercession or mean of the righteoufnes of Christ, we obtaine to be justified before God. 3.11.23.

That we may be throughly persuade of the free Iustification, wee must lift vp our minde to the judgement feate of God: before which, nothing is acceptable but that which is whole and perfect in every behalfe, the dreadfull misteke whereof is described by many places of scripture, 3.12.1.2.

All godly writers do shew that when men have to do with God, the onely place of refuge for conscience is in the free mercie of God, excluding all trust of works: And this is prooued by testimonies of Augustine and Bernard, 3.12.3.

Two things are to be obscrued in free Iustification: the first, that the Lord keepe fast his glorie vnminished: which is done when he alone is acknowledged to be righteous, for they glory against God, which glorie in themselves. 3.13.1.2. the seconde, that our consciences may have quietnes in the sight of his judgement. 3.13.3.4.5.

Knowledge of God.

To knowe God, is not onely to conceiue that there is some God, but to understa unde so much as behoueeth vs to knowe of him, and so much as awaileth for his glorie, and is expedient. 1.2.1.

The Knowledge of God ought to tende to this ende, first to frame vs to feare and reverence: and then that by it guiding and teaching vs we may learne to aske all good things of him, and to account the fame receiued at his hand. 1.2.2. & 1.5.8.

The Philosophers had no other Knowledge of God than that which made them vnexcusable, but did not bring them to the truth. 2.2.18.

This perswasion is naturally planted in all men, that there is some God. 1.2.3. and that to this ende, that they which doe not worship him, may bee condemned by their owne judgement 1.2.1.

Though all men knowe by nature that there is a God, yet soome become vaine in their superstitions, and other soome of set purpose doe maliciously depart from God. 1.4.1.

Laws.

The Lawe, that is to say, the forme of religion set forth by Moses, was not giuen to holde the olde people still in it, but to nour birth in their harts the hope of salvation in Christ untill his coming: which is professed by this that Moses repeate the mention of the covenant: and by the order of the ceremonies appointed as well in sacrifices as in waltings, also by the office of priesthood of the tribe of Levi and the honor of kingdome in David and his posteri
tie. The lawe also of the ten commandements was giuen to prepare men to seke Christ. 2.7.1.2. and that is done, when it maketh vs vnexcusable being on every side convicted of our finnes, to move vs to seke for pardon of our guiltiness. 2.7.3.4.

It is proved by the Scripture and declared that the obseruing of the lawe is impossible. 2.7.5.

There are three vnes and offices of the moral Lawe: The first is, that shewing vnto vs the righteousnesse which onely is acceptable vnto God, it may be as a glasse for vs, wherein we may behold our weakness, and by it our wickednesse, and finallie by them both our accuetednes: Neither turneth this to any dishonour of the Law, but maketh for the glory of the bountifulnes God, which both with helpe of grace aiding vs to doe that which wee are commanded, and by mercie putteh away our offences. Neither yet doth this office altogether cease in the reprobate. 2.7.6.7.8.9.

The second office, is to restraine the reprobate with feare of punishment, lest they unbridledly commit the wickednesse which inwardly they alway nourish and loue: and also to draw backe the children of God before their regeneration from outwardly centialonnesse. 2.7.10.11.

The third office, concerneth the faithfull: for the Lawe although it bee alreadie written with the finger of God in their harts, yet proficeth them two woes: For by studying vpon it they are more confirmed in the understanding of the will of the Lorde, and are sturred vp and strengthened to obedience, that they doe not out of kinde by the sluggyfnesse of the flesh. 2.7.12.13. For as touching the curse of the Lawe, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extend it selfe against them in damning and destroying them. 2.7.14.

By the ten commandements of the Lawe wee learne the same things which wee but slenderly taste by instruction of the lawe of nature: First that we owe to God reverence, loue, and feare, that righteousnesse pleaseth him, and wickednesse displeaseth him: finally, that examining our life by the rule of the Lawe, we are vnworthy to be accounted among the creatures of God, and
The Table.

The Lawe teacheth not onely certaine introductions and principles of righteouſnesse, but the very accomplishment thereof, the expressing of the image of God, and the perfection of holincffe: which Lawe is all contained in two points, that is to say, the loue of God and of our neighbour.2.8.51.

Lawes Politike.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magiſtrate, nor the Magiſtrate without Lawes. A confutation of them which say that a commonweale is not well ordered, vnleſſe it be governed by the politike Lawes of Mofes. For this purpose is rehearsed a diuision of the Lawes of Mofes into morall Lawes, ceremonies, and judicill Lawes, and the ende of every one of them being discouered, it is prooued that it is lawfull for every general nation to make politike Lawes, 4.20.14,15. so that they agree with that natural equitie, the reason whereof is set forth in the morall Lawe of Mofes. Therefore it is shewed by examples that they may alter the ordinances of penalties according to the diversitie of the country, time, and other circumstances.4.20.16.

Lying.

An exposition of the ninth commandement, wherein the Lorde forbiddeth falsehood, wherewith we by Lying or backbiting doe hurte any mans good name, or hinder his commoditie.2.8.47.

We many times sinne against this commandement, although we doe not Lie, but in this point there must be a difference wisely made betwixt the slandering which is here condemned, and judicall accusation or rebuking, which is vfi'd upon desire to bring to amendment.2.8.48.

Life of a Christian man.

The Law containeth a rule how to frame a mans Life, and divers places also of the Scripture doe here and there declare it, and not without an orderly manner of teaching, although not so exquisite and curious as the Philosophers doe.3.6.1.

Herein the Scripture doth two things: it stirreth vs vp to the loue of righteouſnesse and teacheth a rule how to follow the same.
The Table.

The first point it worketh by divers arguments and reasons. 3.6.2, and herein the Scripture layeth much better foundations, than can be found in all the books of the Philosophers. 3.6.3.

Against them that pretend a knowledge of Christ, when their life and manners resemble not the doctrine of Christ. 3.6.4.

Though perfection were to be wifhed in all men, yet we must also acknowledge for Christians the most part of men which have not yet proceeded so farre. We must alway endeavour forward, and not depaire for the smallnesse of our profiting. 3.6.5.

Out of a place of Paul these are gathered to be the parts of a well framed Life: consideration of the grace of God, for taking of wickednesse and of worldly lustes, sobernes, righteousness, godliness, (which signifies true holinesse) and the blessed hope of immortalitie. 3.7.3.

Life present, and the helps thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the best way how to vs the goods of this Life. 3.10.4,5.

Two faults must be annoyed: that we doe neither bind our conscience with too much rigorounesse nor giue loose reins to the intemperance of men 3.10.13.

God both in clothing and in food provided not onely for our necessitie, but also for our delight. 3.10.2.

It is most neceffarie, that every one of vs in all the doings of his Life doe looke vp on his vocation, that we attempt nothing rashly or with doubled conscience 3.10.6.

God disdained not to pro vide alfo for the necessitie of our earthly body, and in what sense we aske of him our dayly bread. 3.20.44.

Life to come.

God doth by divers mysteries teach vs the contempt of this present Life, that we may earnestly desire Life to come. 3.9.13.4.

Such a contempt of this Life is required of vs, that we neither hate it nor be unthankfull to God, of whose clemencie it is a testimonie to the faithfull. 3.9.3.

An admonition to them which are holden with too much feare of death, that Christians ought rather to desire that day which shall make an end of their continuall miseries, and fill them with true joy. 3.9.5.6.

Of the incomprehensible excellencie of the eternall felicite (which is the end of the Resurrection) the taste of the sweetenesse whereof we ought here continually to take, but yet to avoid curiosity whereupon doe arise trifling & noysome questions, yea and hurtfull speculations. And there shall be an equal measure of glory to all the children of God in heaven. 3.25.10.11. In which place also is an answer to the questions which some men do moue concerning the state of the children of God after the resurrection.

In what sense eternall Life is sometime called the reward of works. 3.18.2.4.

M. Magistrates.

The office of Magistrates is not only holy and lawfull before God, but also the most holy and honorable degree in all the life of men, and this is proued by diuerse titles wherewith the Scripture doth set it forth, and by the examples of holy men, which have borne civil power. 4.20.4.

This consideration is a pricke to godly Magistrates to moue them to the doing of their dutie, & alfo it is a comfort to eale the hard travellers of their office. 4.20.6.

A confusion of them, which say that though in the old time under the law Kings and Judges ruled over Gods people, yet this seruile kind of gouernement doth not agree with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. 4.20.5.7.

They errore which exclude the Magistrates from the charge of religion, forasmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the law. It is proued by Scripture, that they are ordered Protectors and defenders as well of the worshipping of God as of common peace and honestie, which they can not thorowly performe without the power of the sword. 4.20.9.

A declaration of this question by Scripture, how the Magistrates may be godlie, and also draw their swordes, and shed the blood of men, and it is proued, that they are so farre from sinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, and a proof of their godlines. Herein the Magistrates must beware of two fautes namely
The Table.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himselfe not only moued to seeke God, but also led as it were by the hand to finde him. 1.1.1.

The creation of Man is a notable shew of the power, wisdome, and goodnesse of God: Wherefore Man is by some of the Philosophers called a little world. 1.5.3.

The unthankfulnesse of men which seeing tokens of the prouindence of God both in their Soule and body, yet doe not give God praise. 1.5.4.

Two sorts of knowledge of our felues, the one in our first Original estate, the other after Adams fall, and the latter is not to be received without considering the first, lest we should seeme to impude corruption to God the Author of nature. 1.5.1.

The knowledge of himselfe is most necessarie for Man, which consisteth in this (as the truth of God preserueth) that first considering to what ende he is created and endued with excellent gifts, he should hang altogether upon God, of whom he hath all things by gift: then, that weighing his owne miserable estate after the fall of Adam, he should truly both himselfe and conceive a new desire to seeke God, that in him hee may recover these good things, of which he himselfe is found vitally void and emptie. Wherefore we must beware that in this point we hearken not to the judgement of the flesh and to the books of Philosophers, which while they withhold vs in considering oneley our good things, would carry vs away into a most wicked ignorance of our felues. 2.1.1,2.3.

Man can never come to the true knowledge of himselfe, vnlesse he haue first beholding the face of God, that is to say, till he haue begun to know and weigh by the word of God what and how exact is the perfection of his rightousnesse, wisdome, and power, to the which we ought to be made of like forme. 1.1.2.

Even the most holy men were stricken with feare and astonishment, when God did extraordinarily shew his presence and glory vnto them. 1.1.3.

That whole Man is corrupted in both partes of him (that is to say both in understanding, minde, and in heart or will) is proceed namely extreme rigorouesnes, and superstitious desire of pitie. 4.20.10.

It is the dutie of subiectes towards Magistrates, to thinke honorable of them as of the Minifters and Deputies of God, forasmuch as concerneth their degree, but not that they should esteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4.20.22.

It is also their dutie with minde hartily bent to the honoring of them to declare their obedience to them, whether it be in following their decrees or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their safetie and prosperitie, to raise no tumults and not to thrust themselves into the office of the Magistrate. 4.20.23.

Even wicked Princes of cruel life, and which rule tyrannoufly (for somuch as pertaineth to publike obedience) ought to be had in as great reuerence and honor as we would giue to the best King that might be, 4.20.24,25: because euen they also have the publike power not without the prouidence and fingular power of God. Which is proued by diuerfe testimonies and examples of Scripture: and there is shewed with what consideration these subiectes ought to bridle their owne impatience which liue vnder such vngedly and wicked tyrantes. 4.20.26-27. 28. 29. 31.

It is not lawfull for private men to rife vp against tyrants, but onely for them which by the lawes of the Kingdome or of the countrie, are the defenders of the liberty of the people. 4.20.31.

The Lorde by his manuall goodnesse and prouidence, doth sometime raise vp some of his sentences to punish tyrantes, and sometime also hee directeth thereunto the rage of wicked men while they intende an other thing. 4.20.30.

In the obedience which is due to the commandementes of Kingses and Rulers this is alway to be excepted, that it draw vs not away from the obedience of God: Neither is any wrong done to them when we refuse to obey them in such things as they command against God: And this is our dutie, how great and present peril souer doth hang vpon such constancie. 4.20.32.
prooued by diuers titles wherwith the scripture describeth him, specially when it faith that he is flesh: And there is declared that this worde flesh is not referred onely to the sensuall part, but also to the superiour part of the soule. 2.3.7.

That men do in vaine seek for any good thing in their owne nature, is prooued by Paul, which intreating of the vnuerfall kindred of the childre of Adam, & not rebuking the corrupted maners of some one age alone but aculing the perpetual corruption of nature, taoketh from men righteousnes, that is to lay, vprightnes & purenes, and then understanding, and last of all the fear of God. 2.3.2.

A confutation of the oblication concerning certain heathen men, which forasmuch as they were al their life long by the guiding of nature bent to the endeoure of vertue and honestie, do seem to warne vs, that we should not esteeme the nature of Man, altogether corrupt. Therefore it is declared that in the vnbeleeuers God doth not inwardly cleanse the corruption of nature wherewith Man is in the part defiled, (as he doth in the elect) but by this prudence sometime he brideth it in them, that it breake not forth into deedes, and refraineth it by diuers waies, so much as he knoweth to be expedient for preserving of the vnuerfall state of things. 2.3.3.

Those vertues which wee reade to have beene in heathen Men, are not sufficient prooues of the purenesse of nature, for as much as their minde was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or some other poisson, and not directed with desire to set forth the glorie of God: and also forasmuch as those vertues are not the common giftes of nature, but the speciall graces of God, which he diuersly and by a certaine measure giueth to prophanne Men, as oftentimes to kings, and sometime to private Men. 2.3.4.

Marriage.

An exposition of the seuenth comman- dement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication and requireth chastitie and clean- nesse, which we ought to keepe and preserve both in our mind, and in our cies, and in the apparell of our bodie, and in our toong, and in the moderate vse of meate and drinke. 2. 8.41, 44.

Continence is a singuler gift of God, which he giueth not to all men, but to some, yea and that sometime for a seacion: As for them to whom it is not granted, let them alway flee to Marriage, which is ordained of the Lord for the remedie of mans necessitie. 2.8.41, 42, 43.

Married persons must beware that they commit nothing vnbeemeing the honeftie and temperance of Marriage: Otherwise they seeme to bee adulterers of their owne wives, and not husbands. 2.8.44.

The Papists do wrongly call mariage a Sacrament: And their reasons are confuted. 4.19.34. It is prooued that the place of Paul, wherewith they seek to cloke themselves, maketh nothing for them. 4.19.35.

In the meane they disagree with themselves when they exclude prietes from this sacrament, and do say that it is vnclaneenes and delissing of the fleth 4.19.36.

By this false colour of Sacrament, the Pope with his clergie have drawen to themselves the hearing of caus, of Matrimony, & haue made lawes of mariage, which partly are manifestly wicked against God, and partly most vnjust toward men, which lawes are rehearsed 4.19.37.

Mediator Christ.

It behooved that Christ, to the ende that he might performe the office of Mediator, should bee made man, for as much as God had so ordained, because it was best for vs, both that none other could be the meane for restoring of peace betweene God and vs, none other could make vs the children of God, none other could assure vs to the inher- tance of the heavenly kingdome, none other could for remedie set mans obedience against mans disobedience. 2.12.1, 223.

A confutation of their fantastical conceit, which affirme that Christ shoulde have become man, although there had needed no remedie for the redeeming of mankinde. And it is prooued by many reasons and textes, that for as much as the whole

Scripture
Scripture crieth out that he was cloathed with flesh, to the ende that he might be the redeemer, therefore it is too great rashnes to imagine any other cause or purpose. 2:12. 4.

Neither is it lawful to search further concerning Christ: and those that doe search further, do with wicked boldnes runne forwarde to the faining of a new Christ: And herem of Sander is reprooved, which hath at this time renewed this question, and affirmeth that this error is confuted by no testimonie of Scripture. 2:12.5.

And the principle is overthrown which hee buildeth on, that man was create after the image of God, because he was formed after the likenesse of Christ to come, that hee might resemble him whom the father had alreadie decreed to cloath with flesh. And thereis shewed that the image of God in Adam, was the markes of excellencie wherewith God had garnished him, which doeth also shine in the Angels. 2:12.6,7.

A solution of other objections or absurdities which the same Sander feareth: namely, that then Christ was borne and create after the image of Adam but as it were by chance; and that the Angels shoulde have lacked their head, and men should have lacked Christ their king. 2:12.6,7.

How the two natures do make one person of the Mediator in Christ: Which is shewed by a similitude taken of the joyning of the soule and body in one man: And then it is reproved by divers places that the scripture doeth many times gue unto Christ those things which properly belongeth to the Godhead, and sometime those things which must be referred onely to the manhooe, and sometime giueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figure and manner of speach is called Communicating of properties. 2:14.12, and sometime also giueth to Christ those things which doe comprehend both natures together, but doeth seuerally well agree with neither of them. Which last point the most parte of the olde writers have not sufficiently marked: Yet it is good to be noted, for the disturbing of manie doubts, and for avoinding of the errors of Neformus and Euthices. 2:14.3,4.

A confutation of the error of Servettus, which had put in the stead of the sonne of God, an imagined thing made of the substance of Gods spirit, flesh, & three elements whereof: His suttletic is disclosed, and there is reprooved (which thing he denieth) that Christ was the sonne of God, even before that he was borne in the flesh, because he is that word begotten of the father before all worlds. 2:14.5.

Also it is reprooved that he is truely & properly the sonne of God in the flesh, that is to say in the nature of Man, but yet in respect of his Godhead, and not of his flesh, as Servettus babbleth. 2:14.6.

An expostion of certaine places which Servettus and his disciples do enforce for defence of their error: There is also another caullation of his disclosed, that Christ before that he appeared in the flesh, is in no place called the sonne of God but under a figure. 2:14.7.

Also there is opened the error of al them which do not acknowledge Christ the Sonne of God but in the flesh: And there are briefly rehearsed the groffe suttlettes of Servettus, wherewith he hath bewitched himselfe and other, overthrowing that which pure faith beleeveth concerning the person of the sonne of God: And thereupon is gathered that with the craftie suttlettes of that filthie dog, the hope of salvation is utterly extinguisht. 2:14.8.

Merit of Christ.

It is truely and properly laide that Christ merited for vs the grace of God and salvation. Where it is reprooved that Christ was not onely the instrument or minister of salvation, but also the author & principal doer thereof: And in so saying, the grace of God is not defaced, because the merit of Christ is not set against mercy, but hangeth upon it. And those things which are Subalternas, light not as contraries. 2:17.1.

The distinction of the Merit of Christ and of the grace of God is proved by many places of Scripture. 2:17.2.

There are alleged many testimonies of Scripture, out of which it is certainly and soundly gathered, that Christ by his obedience hath truely purchased and deferned favour.
The Table.

It is a foolish curiosity to enquire whether Christ hath decreed any thing for himself: and it is rashness to affirm it. 2, 17.6.

Merites of works.

The boastings that are made of the Merites of works, doe overthow as well the praise of God in giving righteousness, as also the certaintie of salvation. 3, 15, 1.

Whosoever first applied the name of Merite to good works in the sight of God's judgment, he did against the pureneffe of Faith. And though the olde Fathers vfed that name, yet they so vfed it that they have in many places shewed that they attribute nothing to works. 3, 15, 2.

An expostion of certaine places, wherewith the Sophists go about to prooue that the name of Merite toward God is found in the Scripture 3, 15, 4.

It is proued by authortie of the Apoftles and Augustine, that the rewardes of righteousness doe hang vpon the meere liberallitie of God. 2, 5, 2.

It is proued that this is a false saying, that Christ Merited for vs only the first grace, and that afterward we doe Merite by our owne works. 3, 15, 5, 7.

There be certaine things touching Merites in the title of Justification by Faith.

Ministerie of the Church.

Of the Ministerie of the Church, and of them which despise this maner of learning. 4, 1, 5.

Of the efficacie of the Ministerie. 4, 5, 6.

God, which might teach the Church either himselfe alone or by Angels, yet doth it by the Ministerie of men for three causes. 4, 3, 1.

The Ministerie of the Church is garnished with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture. 4, 5, 2, 3.

Of Apoftles, Prophets, Evangeliftes, Pastors, and Teachers: and what is the feuerall office of every of them. 4, 3, 4, 5.

The chief partes of the office of Apoftles and Pastors are to preach the Gospell, and Minister the Sacraments. 4, 3, 6.

Pastors are so bound to their Churches, that they may not remoue to any other place without publike authoritie. 4, 3, 7.

They are called in the Scripture Bishops, Priests, Pastors and Ministers which govern Churches. 4, 3, 8.

No man ought to thrust in himselfe in the Church to teach or govern: But there is a calling required. 4, 3, 10.

The preaching of the worde of God is compared to seede which is scattered in the grounde: Whereby we understand that the whole encreas proceeding of the blessing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghost 4, 14, 11.

What manner of men ought to be chosen Bishops, and in what sort and of whom they are to be chosen, and with what forme or ceremony they are to be ordered. 4, 3, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

The olde Church before the Papaie, divided all their Ministers into three degrees, Pastors, Elders, and Deacons. 4, 4, 1.

Of the commision to remit and retaine sinnes, or to binde and loose, which is a part of the power of the keyes, and pertaynteth to the Ministerie of the word. 4, 11, 1.

Monkerie.

Monasteries in olde time were the seede plottes of Ecclesiastical orders: And there is described out of Augustine the forme of the olde Monkerie, and how they were wont at that time to get thier living with the labor of their hands. Whereby appeareth that at this day the maner of Popish Monkerie is faire otherwise. 4, 13, 8, 9, 10.

Of the proude title of perfection whereby the Monkes doe set out their kinde of life 4, 13, 11, because they binde themselues to keepe the counsels of the Gospell (as they call them) whereunto other Christian men are not bound. Sect. 12. and because they have forsaken all their positions. Sect. 13.

As many as goe into Monasteries, doe depart from the Church, Sith they openly affirme that their Monkerie is a forme of second Baptisme. 4, 13, 14.

The Popish Monkes do in manners much differ from the olde Monkes. 4, 13, 15.

Some things are to be mifliked even in the professiiton of the olde Monkerie, and they that were the Authors thereof brought a perilous example into the Church. 4, 13, 16.

Monkes with their vows doe consecrate themselves.

Offences.

What offences are to be avoided, & what to be neglected: what is an Offence gien, and what an Offence taken. 3.19.11.

It is declared by the doctrine and example of Paul who be weak, to whom we must beware that we gie no Offence. 3.19.12.

Whereas we are commanded to beware that we offend not the weake, the same is meant onely in things indifferent: Therefore they doe wrongfully abuse this doctrine which say that they heare Masse for the weakes fake. 3.19.13

The orders of Pfalmists, Doorekeepers and Acoluthes, are vaine names among the Papistes, forasmuch as they themselfes doe not execute the Offices, but some boy, or any layman. 4.19.24.

Of the shewing of the Clergie, and the signification thereof by the doctrine of the Papistes. 4.19.25.

Original Sinne.

A definition and expounding of Originall sinne. 4.15.10.11,12.

mind and bottome of the heart, so that there is no part of the soule free from corruption. 2.1.8.9

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faults, because we say that men are naturally faultie: And there is proved, that man is corrupt by natural viciousnesse: (to the ende that no man should thinke it to be gotten by euill custome) but yet such as proceeded not from nature, but is an accidental qualitie, and not a substantiall propertie from the beginning. 2.1.10.11.

Patience.

A Part of the forsaking of our felues, in respect of God, is contentation of mind and suffrance: Which we shall performe, if in seeking the commoditie or quietnes of this present life wee yeeld our selues wholly to the Lord, and do not desire, hope for, or thinke upon any other meanes of prospering than by his blessing, 3.7.8.

So shall it come to passe that we shall never seeke our owne commodities by unlawfull meanes or with wronging of our neighbours: also that we shall not burne with unmeasurable desire of riches or of honors: finally if things prosper well with vs, we shall yet beholden from pride, and if they happen ill, we shall yet be restrained from impatience, 3.7.9. Which extendeth to all channes whereunto our present life is subject, whereof the faithfull doe alwaies acknowledge the hand of God their father, and not fortune, to be the governor, 3.7.10.

The Patience of the faithfull is not such as is without all feeling of sorrow, but such as being upheld by godly comfort, figheth against the natural feeling of sorrow. Therefore the Patience of the Stoikes is rejected: neither is it in it selfe any fault to weep or feare, 3.8.8.9.

A description of that triuing which is ingendered in the hearts of the faithfull by the feeling of nature, which feeling cannot be clean done away, & by the affection of godlines wherewith that same feeling must bee subdued and tamed, 3.8.10.

There is a great difference between Philosophical & Christian patience: Forasmuch as the philosophers doe teach vs to obey because we so must of necessitie: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also because it is profitable for vs, 3.8.11.

Pardons.
The so long continuinge of pardons declareth in how deepe darkenes of errors men have been drowned these certaine ages past, 3.5.1.

Either the Gospel of God must lie, or pardons must be lying deceits. And there is shewed what seemeth to have been the beginning of them, 3.5.5.

Penance, the Papish Sacrament.

Prayer.

True faith cannot bee idle from calling vpon God 5.20.

How necessarie & how many wais profitable is the exercitue of praying, 3.20.12, although the Lorde will not ceale while we crave not, nor needeth any to put him in munde. Sect. 3.

The first rule of well framing our prayer, is that we be no otherwise disposed in hart and minde than be commeth them that enter into talk with God. 3.20.45.

The second rule, is that in praying we alwaye feele our owne needes, & that earnestly considering that we want all these things that wee ask, wee ioyn with our praver an earnest and fervent desire to obtaine. 3.20.6.

Wee ought to prawe at all tyme, and in the greatest quietnes of our states, the oneely remembrance of our sinne ought to be no small provocation to moue vs to that exercise. 3.20.7.

The thirde rule of praying well, is that wee forake all confidence of our owne glory, least if wee preumptuously take any thing, be it never so little, into our futures, we with our vaine pride, fall downe from his face. 3.20.8.

The beginning of praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble & plaine confession of offence. 3.20.9.

Predeftination.

It is prooed that the doctrine of predeftination is a doctrine of most fyeeete fruite. There are rehearsed three principall profits thereof: and they are admonished which being moved with a certaine curiousitie doe beyond the bounds of Scripture brake into the secrets of the wisdome of God. 3. 1. 1. 2. and also they which would have all mention of Predeftination to bee buried. These two sayings do not disagree that God by the outward preaching of the word calleth many, and yet he giueth the gift of faith to few. 22.10.

Against them which so confute election, that yet they deny any to be reprobate of God. 23.1.

The reprobate do in vaine contend with God, for as much as God oweth them nothing, and wilhelth nothing otherwise than righteously, and they themselves may finde just causes of their damnation in themselves. 23.2.3.4.5.

An anfwere to the wicked question of certain men, why God should blame men for these things whereof he hath layed a necessity upon them by his Predestination. 23.6.8.9.

A definition of Predestination. 23.8.

A confutation of them which gather of the doctrine of Predestination, that God hath respect of persons. 23.10.11.

Against those hogs which vnder colour of Predestination doe goe carelessly forward in their times: and against all them which say that if this doctrine take place, all endeavour of well working deceieth. 23.12.

Against them which say that this doctrine overthroweth all exhortations to godly life, it is proved by Augustine that preaching hath his course, & yet the knowledge of Predestination is not hindered thereby. 23.13.

In this point of doctrine we must so temper our manner of teaching the truth, that so far as we may, we wisely beware of offence. 23.14.

Whereas some obey the preaching of the word of God, and other some despise it, or be more blinded and hardened thereby, although this come to passe by their owne malice and unthankfulness, yet wee must therewith also know, that this diversitie han-eternal saluation, secondly, that it fortifieth vs with strength and vertue against the diuell and all his assaults. And so Christ reigneth for vs rather than for himselfe, whereupon wee are rightfully called Christians: Where it is saide that at the last day he shall yeeld vp his kingdom to God and his father, and such like sayings, the same maketh nothing against the eternitie of his kingdom, 4.15.4, 5.

As touching his Priesthood, that the efficacie and profite thereof may come to vs, it is shewed that wee must beginne at the death of Christ. Hereupon it followeth that hee is an everlafting intercesour, by whose mediation we obtaine favoure, whereas arifeth to godly consciences both boldneffe to pray, and quietneffe: finally that he is so a Priest, that hee ioyneth vs in the fellowship of so great an honour, to the end that the Sacrifices of prayers and praise which come from vs, may be acceptable to God. 2.15.6.

Promises.

Not without cause all the Promises are concluded in Christ: for as much as every promise is a testifying of the lawe of God toward vs, and none of vs is beloved of God without Christ. Neither was Natan the Syrian, Cornelius the Captaine, nor the Eunuch to whom Philip was caried, without knowledge of Christ, although they had but a very small taste to him, and a faith in some part unexpressed. 3.2.32.

The Lord, to the end to fill our harts with love of righteounesse and hatred of wickedneffe, was not content to set forth bare commandements only, but addeth Promises of blessings both of this present life and of eternal blessedness, and also threatenings both of present miseries, and of eternall death: The threatenings declare the great pureneffe of God: the Promises doe shewe his great love to riighteounesse, & his wonderfull goodnesse toward men. 2.8.4.

Of the Promise of Gods mercie to be extended to a thousand generations. 2.8.21.

calleth the one his blessing, and the other his curse and vengeance. 1.16.5.

The prouidence of God in gouerning the world, is chiefly to be considered in mankind, and in the diverse estate of all men, and diverse disposing of successes. 1.16.6, 7.

Against them which caule, that this doctrine of the Prudence of God, is the Stoickes doctrine of fate or deftine. 1.16.8.

Whether any thing happen by fortune or chance: Where is reheard the saying of Basilius Magnus, that Chance and Fortune are words of heathen men: also the saying of Augustine, that he repented that he had vsed the name of Fortune. Yet those things may be faide to happen by fortune in respect of vs, which being considered in their nature, or weighed according to our knowledge doe seeme fo, although in the secrete counsell of God they be necessarie: Alfo all things that are to come, may bee faide to bee happening, insomuch as they be vnecertaine to vs. 1.16.8, 9.

What things are to be considered, that the doctrine of the Prudence of God, may be referred to a right hand, that we have the profit thereof: and where the causes of those things that happen, appeare not vnto vs, wee must beware that wee doe not thinke, that things are rolled by the fway of fortune: but we must so reverence his secrete judgements, that wee obtaine his will the moft sute cause of all things. 1.17.1.

Against certaine dogges which at this daie doe barke against the Prudence of God, it is prooued by the Scripture that whereas God hath so revealed his will in the Lawe and the Gospell that hee illuminateth the munides of them that bee his with the spirts of understanding, to perceive the mysteries therein contained, which otherwise are incomprehensible, yet the order of gouerning the world is called a bottomlesse depth, because when we knowe not the caues thereof, yet we ought reverently to honor it. 1.17.2.

Such prophanee men do foolishly combre themselues, when they allege that if the doctrine of the Prudence of God be true, then the prayers of the faithfull in which they aske anie thing for time to come are vaine, no counsell is to be taken for things to come, and then men which do any thing against the Lawe of God, doe not finne: These dangerous errors they shall avoid, which in considering the Prudence of God, shall frame themselfes to true mode-

As concerning things to come, it is prooued that the Scripture doth well ioyne the aduements of men with the Prudence of God: because wee are not hindered by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne things: For the knowledge of consulting and taking heed, are inspired in to men by the Lord, whereby we may serue his Prudence, in the preterning of our owne life. 1.17.4.

In all successes of time past the will of God doth gouerne: and yet the doovers of wicked deeds are not excused, because they are accused by their owne conscience, and doe not obey the will of God, but their owne lust. They are indeed the instruments of Gods prouidence, but so, that they finde the whole cuill in themselues, and in God is founde nothing, but a lawfull vse of their euilnesse. 1.17.5. and 1.18.4. Where alfo the same thing is shewed in the election of king Jeroboam, the tenne tribes forsaking the house of David, the slauhther of the sons of Ahab, and in the betraying of the sonne of God.

A godlie and holie meditation of the Prudence of God, which is taught by the rule of godliness: first that being certainly persuaded that nothing happeneth by fortune, wee alway cast our eyes to God the chiet cause of all things: then that wee doubt not that his singular Prudence watcheth for vs, whether we have to do with men as well euill as good, or with his other creatures: To which vse we must apply the promises of God in the Scripture which te-stifie the same, the examples whereof are rehearsed. 1.17.6.

We must also adioyne those testimonies of Scripture which teach that all men are vnder the power of God, whether we neede to get their good wills or restraine the ma-flice of our enimies: which last pointe God worketh diuerse wais, sometime by taking taking away their wit; sometime when hee granteth them wit, he fraieth them that they dare not go about that which they have conceiued: and sometime also when he sufficeth them to go about, he breaketh their enterprises: Vpon which knowledge necessarie followeth a thankfulness of minde and so prosperous success of things. 1.17.7.

In aduerstitie when wee are hurt by men, is required patience and quiet moderation of minde: Which is shewed in the examples of Joseph being afflicted of his brethren, Job persecuted of the Chaldees, and David railed vpon of Semei. If we happen to be disstressed with any mytery without the worke of men, this selfsame doctrine is the best remedie against impatience because the Scripture telesphith, that even aduerstities also do come from God. 1.17.8.

A Godly man principally regarding the providence of God, yet will not leave inferiour causes vnmarked. Therefore if hee have received a benefite of any man, he will hartily know and confess himselfe to be bound vnto him. If hee have taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or want of heede, he will impute it unto himselfe, much lesse will he excuse his owne offences. In things to come chiefly hee will have consideration of inferiour causes, but yet so that in determining he wil not be carried away with his owne wit, but commit himselfe to the wisdome of God; neither shall his trust so flie vpon outward helpe, that he will carelessely rest vpon them if hee have them, nor be dismaid for feare if hee want them. 1.17.9.

A large description of the inestimable felicitie of a godly minde which telespheth upon the providence of God: and on the other side the miserable carefulnes wherewith we must needs be disstressed when the weakenes of this earthly cottage maken vs subject to so many diseases, fith our life and safetie is besieged with infinite dangers at home, abroad, vpon the land, in the water, by men, and by duels. 1.17.10.11.

Those places of Scripture, where it is saide that God repented him: make nothing against the doctrine of Providence, forasmuch as therein (like as also when he is saide to be angrie) the Scripture applying it selle to our capacitie describeth him, not such as he is, but such as we feele him to be. Likewise, where he spared the Ninevites, to whom hee had threatened destruction within forrie daies: whereas he prolonged the life of Ezechias for many yeres, to whom he had declared present death: bicaufe such threatenings containe an vnexpressed condition. Which is well proued by a like example in king Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abraham’s wife. 1.17.12.13.14.

A confusion of them which coueting to get a praise of modestie, goe about to maintaine the rightoufnesse of God with a lying defence, when they say: that those things which Satan and all the reprobate do naughtily, are done by the sufferance of God, and not by his providence and will. And it is proued by the affliction of Job, the deceiving of Ahab, the killing of Christ, the inceltous adulterie of Absolon, and many other examples, that men doe worke nothing but that which hee hath alreadie decreed with himselfe: and doth appoint so to be by his secreter direction. 1.18.1.

And this hath place, not onely in outward doings, but also in secret motions. For it is proued by the hardning of Pharan, and other testimones, that God worketh even in the mindes also and harts of the wicked. Neither maketh it any thing to the contrarie, that oftentimes the worke of Satan is vied therein: for God worketh nevertheless, but after his owne manner, vsing a luft reuenge. 1.18.2. therefore God is not the author of sins. Sect 4.

They are proued guilty of intollerable pride, which refuse this doctrine vnder pretence of modestie. A confusion of their objection when they say, that if nothing happen but with the will of God, then hath hee in himselfe two contrary wils, as much as hee doth appoint those things to be done by his secreter counsell, which he hath openlie forbidden by his lawes. And there is shewed, that God doth not disagree with himselfe, that the will of God is not changed, that hee doth not faime himselfe to fell that which hee willeth: but whereas there is in God, but one simple will, the same to vs appeareth diversely.
diversly both willeth not, and willeth one selfe thing to be done. Finally it is prooved by Augustine, that man sometime with good will willeth some thing which God willeth not: and sometime willeth that thing with euell will, which God willeth with good will. 1.1.8.3.

The consideration of Gods power in governing this frame of heaven and earth, and all the partes that are in them. 1.5.5.

The fellowship of men is to governed by the prudence of God, that hee sheweth himself liberall, mercifull, righteous, and feuere. 1.5.6.

Those things which in the life of men are counted chancnes, as well of prosperitie as aduersitie are so many tokens of the heauenly providence, 1.5.7. and ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect. 9.

How God worketh in the harts of them that be his, and Satan in them that be his, but yet so, that they are not excused. 2.4.1.

God worketh also in the wicked, and even in the same worke wherein Satan worketh, and yet is not God so faid to be the author of sinne, neither is Satan or the wicked excused, but there is difference between the one and the other, both in the end and manner of doing. 2.4.2.5.

The olde writers oftentimes referred these things, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or sufferance, least the wicked should thereby take occasion to speake irreverently of the worke of God. But the Scripture when it faith that God blindest, hardeneth, and such like, declareth somewhat more than a sufferance: although God doe worke two wates in the reprobate, namely by forstakings them, and taking his Spirit from them, and also by deluyerings them to Satan the minister of his wrath. 2.4.3.4.

The ministerie of Satan is vse to stirre forwarde the reprobate, when fouere the Lord by his prudence directeth themither or thither. 2.4.5.

Purgatorie.

Wee ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatorie, for as much as it is a damnable inention of Satan which makes void the cross of Christ, &c. 3.5.6.

An exposition of certaine places of scripture which the Papistes doe wrongfully wrest to the confirmation of their Purgatorie. 3.5.7.8.9.

An answere to the objection of the Papists, that it hath beene an ancient usage of the Church that prayers should be made for the dead. Where is shewed that this was done by them in the olde time, without the word of God, by a certaine wrongfull imitation, lest Christians if they were slowe in having care of funerals and the dead, should seeme worse then heathen men. Yet herein was a great difference between this flipping of these old men, and the obstinate error of the Papists. 3.5.10.

R.

Redeemer Christ.

The knowledge of God the Creator is unprofitable vnto vs, vnlesse faith doe also follow, setting him forth in Christ a Father and Redeemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the world in all ages hath beene holden among the children of God. 2.6.1.

It is prooved by divers arguments and testimonies of scripture, that the happy state of the Church hath alway beene grounded upon the person of Christ. For both the first adoption of the chosen people, and the presencing of the Church, the deliverance of them in perils, and the restoring after their dissipation, did alway hang upon the grace of the Mediator. And the hope of all the godlie was never repose anywhere than in Christ. 2.6.2.3.4.

It is to be diligently considered how Christ hath fulfilled the office of redeemer, that we may finde in him all things necessarie for vs, as (as Bernard saith) he is to vs light, meate, oyle, salt, &c. 2.16.1.

An exposition how we should say that God was our enemy vntill he was reconciled to vs by Christ, whereas to give Christ to vs, and to present vs with mercie, were signes of the love wherewith he before imbraced vs. And there is shewed that the Scripture with this speech and such others, to apply it selfe to our capacitie: and yet it doth not the same falsely. And all this is prooved by the authoritie of Scripture, and the testimonie of Augustine. 2.16.2.3.

Regeneration.
The Table.

Regeneration.

Against certaine Anabaptists, which invent a phreniteke intemperance instead of spiritual Regeneration, namely that the children of God being now restored into the state of innocencie, ought no more to be careful to bridle the lust of the flesh: but onely to followe the spirite for their guide. 3.3.14.

The rest pertaining to this matter, see in the title of Repentance.

Religion.

Necessitie enforceth the reprobate to confesse that there is some God. 1.4-4.

They are deceived which say that Religion was devised by the futtletie of certaine men to holde the simple people in order. 1.3.2.

The very wicked and godlike men are compell'd whether they will or no to feele that there is a God. 1.3.2. and in what sense David faith, that they thinke that there is no God. 1.4.2.

Remission of Sinnes.

Against them which dreme a perfection in this life, which taketh away neede of asking pardon. 3.20.45.

Of Remission of Sinnes: and in what sense Sinnes are called debts, and how we are saide to forgive other that haue offended against vs 3.20.45.

Of the distinction of fault and paines: where with most strong testimonies of Scripture the doinge error of the Papists is confuted, namely that when the fault is forgien, yet God retaineth the paine, which remaineth to bee redeemed with satisfaction. 2.4.29-30. and there also is shewed that they cannot scape away with their distinction betwene everlasting paine and temporal paines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they goe about to confirme their error: where is declared that there are two kindes of the judgement of God: the one of Vengeance, the other of chastisement, which are wisely to be distinguished atunder. 4.4.31.

The first of these, that is to say, vengeance, the faithfull haue alwaye earnestly praised to escape: the other that is to say, chastisement they haue received with quiet minde, because it hath a testimonie of loue. And where it is saide that God is angrye with his Saints, the same is not meant of his purpos or affection to punish them, but is spoken of the vehement feeling of sorrow wherewith they are striken soone as they bear any part of his severitie: and this is profitable for them. On the other side the reprobate, when they are striken with the scourges of God doe alreadie after a certaine manner begin to feele the paines of his judgement. Al which things are prooued by testimonies of the Scripture, and also by the expostions of Chryfostone and Augustine. 3.4.32,33.

God when hee had forgiuen the adulterie of David, chastised him both for common example, and also to humble him: and for this reason hee daily maketh the faithfull (to whom hee is mercifull) subject to the common miseries of this life. 3.4.35.

An exposition of the article of the Creed concerning Remission of Sinnes. 4.1.20,21.

The keys were gien to the Church, to forgive sinnes, not onely to men at their first conversion to Christ, but to the faithful all their life long. 4.1.22.

This doctrine is prooued by testimonies of Scripture against the Noumanes, and certaine of the Anabaptists which faie that the people of God are by baptism regenerate into an angelike life, & afterward there remaineth no pardon for them that fall. 4.1.23,24,25,26,27.

A confutation of them which make a voluntarie transgression of the lawe a sinne unpardonable. 4.1.28.

Repentance.

Repentance commeth of faith, and goeth not before it. 3.3.1.

A confutation of their reasons, which think otherwise, but hereby is not signified any space of time wherein faith-breedeth repentance: but only is shewed that no man can earnestly endeavour himselfe to Repentance vnlesse he know himselfe to be Gods. Of the error of certaine Anabaptists, Leui's, and such other, which appoint to their nouces certaine dates for repentance. 3.3.2.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two partes of Repentance, namely namely. Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, Vitiification which they wrongfully expound to be comfort by the feeling of the mercy of God: whereas it rather signifieth a desire to live well. 3.3.3.

They do make two other fortes of Repentance, the one of the Law, the other of the Gospel: where also are shewed examples of either sort out of the Scripture.

3.3.4.

A true definition of repentance taken out of the Scripture; & hence Repentance though it cannot be severed, yet ought to be distinguished from Faith. 3.3.5.

A plainer declaration of the definition of Repentance: where first is shewed, that there is required a turning to God, that is to say, an alteration, not only in outward worke, but also in the soul it self. 3.3.6. then that it proceedeth of an earnest fear of God: where also is entreated of the sorrowfulness that is according to God. 3.3.7.

Thirdly, that saying is declared that Repentance consisteth of two partes, the Mortification of the flesh, and the quickening of the Spirit. 3.3.8.

Both these things doe we obtaine by partaking of Christ, the first by communicacating of his death, the second of his Resurrectionence. Therefore Repentance is a new forming of the Image of God in vs, and a restoring into the righteousnesse of God by the benefite of Christ: and this restoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3.3.9.

But there remaineth in all the Saints, while they live in mortall body, matter of strife with their flesh, and so thought all the Ecclesiastical writers that have beene of sound judgement: and specially Augustine, which calleth this nourishment of evil and disease of lusting in the flesh, weakness, and sometime sinne: and indeede it is sinne. 3.3.10.

This is confirmed by the testimonie of Paul, and by the summe of the communemones. Whereas it is faide that God cleanseth his Church from all sinne, the same is spoken rather of the guiltines of sin, then of the matter of sinne it selfe, which ceaseth not to dwell in the regenerate (but ceaseth to reigne in them) though it be not imputed. 3.3.11.

A declaration of the seven caules or effectes, or partes or affections of Repentance, which Paul rehearseth: Tho be studie or carefulnesse, excusing, displeasure, fear, desire, zeal, revenge. Whereunto also is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernard, that in such renewing we must keepe a measure. 3.3.12.

The fruities of Repentance are devotion toward God, charity toward men, holinesse and purenesse in all our life: but all these ought to begin at the inward affection of the hart, from whence outward testimonies may afterward spring forth: where also is spoken of certaine outwarde exercises of Repentance, which the olde Writers see me enforec somewhat too much. 3.3.13.

Turning of the hart to God is the chief point of Repentance: Sackcloth and Ashes, weeping and fasting, were vsed of them in the olde time before Christ, as tokens of publike repentance: of which the two last may yet be vsed to appease the wrath of God in the miserable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of Repentance or penance is unproperly drawne from his natural sense to this outwarde profession. Publike confession is not alway necessarie in sinnes: but private confession to God may never be omitted, wherein we ought to confess not onely those things that we have lately committed, but the displeasure of our gracious fall ought also to call vs backe to remembrance of our pasted offences. Of speciall penance which is required of hainous offenders and certaine other: and of the ordinances which the children of God, even the most perfect, ought to vs all their life long. 3.3.18.

God doth therefore freely justify them that be his, that he may also with the sanctification of his Spirite restore them into true righteousness: therefore John, Christ, and the Apostles preached Repentance and remission of sinnes. The effect of which sayinge is declared. 3.3.19.
Christians ought to exercise themselves in a continual Repentance, & he hath most profited, that hath learned most to mistake himselfe. 3.3.20.

Repentance is a singular gift of God, unto which he calleth all men, which he giveth to all them whose purpose is to save, and which the Apostle pronounceth, that it shall never be given to wiffull Apoftles whose wickednes is unpardonable, that is to say, such as have sinned against the holy Ghost. 3.3.3.

Although fained Repentance doth not please God, yet hee sometime for a season spareth hypocrizes which make a shewe of some confession, which hee doth not for their fakes, but for common example, that we may learne more chearfully to give our mindes to unvayned Repentance: and this is prooued by the examples of Absab, Efau, and the Israelites. 3.3.25.

The Schoole Sophisters doe fowle error in those definitions which they make of repentance, and no better doe they devise it, when they parte it into contrition of hart, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of works: where is entirect of certaine questions which they mooue: whereupon is easillie gathered, that they babble of things which they know not, when they speake of Repentance. 3.4.1.

When they require those three things in Repentance they must needs binde thereunto forgiuenesse of finnes: And if it be so, then are we most miserable, forasmuch as we can never haue quietnes of conscience: which is prooued first in that contrition of hart such as they require. 3.4.2.

There is a great difference betweene the doctrine of such contrition, and that contrition which the Scripture requireth of finnes, that they truly hunger and thirst for the the mercy of God. 3.4.3.

In what fente the olde writers thought that folenne penance, which was then required for hainous offences, might no more be enforced done then Baptisme. 4.1.29.

Reason of Man.

Mans understanding is not so to be condemned of perpetuall blindness, that we leave it no white of understanding in any kindie of thing: but it hath some knowledge in as much as he is naturally caried with desire to search out truth: And yet this desire by and by falleth into vanitie, because the minde of Man cannot for dulneske keape the right way to search out truth, and for the most part he differenth not of what things it is behoouelie for him to seeke the true knowledge. 2.2.12.

As touching earthly things it is prooued by examples that the minde of Man hath a sharpe understanding, as first of households, sith every Man understandeth that the fellowship of men must be holden together by lawes, and comprehended in minde the principles of those lawes. 2.2.13.

Also in liberal Artes and handy crafts for learning whereof, yea for amplifying and garnillings of the same, there is in man a certayne aptitude, although some be more apt then other. But the light of reason and understanding of men, is so a generall good qualitie in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Godds liberaltie toward evry man: which thing God theweth when he createth some Idiots and dull witted: Also when he maketh one man to excell in sharpe invention, an other in judgement, an other in quickenesse of minde, againe when he powreth into men singular motions according to euerie mans calling, and according to the time and matter that is to be done. 2.2.14.17.

The invention of Artes, the orderlie teaching of depe and excellent knowledge thereof, which appeare to haue bene in the olde Lawyers, Philosophers, Phisitians, being prophanes men, doe declare unto vs, that the minde of men how much sooner it be fallen from his first vprightnesse, is yet still garnished with excellent giftis of God. 2.2.15.

They are the giftis of the holy Ghost which the Lord giveth to whom hee will, even to the vngodly for the publike benefite of mankind: therefore we ought to vse them although they be communicate unto vs by the miniterie of the wicked, to whom they are but transitorie and fleeting, because they are without the sound foundation of truth 2.2.16.

It is shewed in the first two pointes that mans reason seeth nothing that concerneth the kingdom of God and heavenly matters, which are contained in three things, that is to say, to know God, his fatherly favour toward vs, and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his law. 2.2.18. and to that purpose are alleged divers testimonies of scripture. Sect. 19, 20, 21. In the three it seeth that hee hath done more understanding than in the other, for as much as man is instructed by the lawe of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowledge is vnperfect in the vnbelieuers, and aunthele to no other ende, but to make them vnexcusable: neither doe they by that natural light, see the truth in every thing. And here is expounded the saying of Themistius, that understanding in the vnuniversall definition is feldome deceiued, but the errore is when it descendeth to particular causes, and there is showed, that mans vnuniversall judgement in the difference of good and euill, is not alwaye found and vpright. For it atayneth not those which are the chief things in the first table of the law, namely of confidence in God, &c. In the second table, although it have some more understanding, yet it appeareth that it sometime erreth: as when it judgeth that it is an absurd and too impetuous government, and not to reuenge wrongs: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the law. 2.2.22. 23, 24.

It is prooved by the scripture, that the sharpenes of our reason in all the parts of our life, is nothing before the Lord, and our mindes do escape the grace of enlightening, not onely at the beginning, or for one day, but at every moment. 2.2.25.

See under the title of freewill, certain things pertaining to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the resurrection of Christ all is vnperfect that we beleue concerning his crueltie, death, & burial, therof we receiue three profites: forasmuch as he hath both purchased vs righteousnes before God, and is to vs a pledge of the resurrection to come, and by his life, we are now regenerate into newnes of life. 2.16 13.

A declaration of the historie of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.2.5.2.

Last Resurrection.

For as much as the faithfull, doe cieffely neede hope and patience, lest they should faint in the course of their calling: he hath found profited in the Gospell which is accustomed to a continual meditation of the blessed resurrection. 3.2.5.1, 2.

The article concerning the last resurrection, contains a doctrine of great weight, grage and hard to beleue: for the overcoming of which hardnes by faith, the Scripture giueth two helps, the example of christ, and the almightines of God. 3.2.5.3, 4.

A confession of the Sadducaes, which denie the resurrection, and of the Millenaries which appoint the kingdom of Christ to endure but a thousand yeeres. 3.2.5.5.

A confession of their error, which imagine that soules at the last day shall not receiue againe the bodies wherewith they are now clothed, but shall have new and other bodies. 2.2.5.7, 8.

Of the manner of the last resurrection. 3.2.5.8.

By what reason, the last resurrection, which is a singular benefit of Christ, is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God. 3.2.5.9.

Sabbath.

An exposition of the fourth commandement, the end thereof, and the three causes whereupon we must note that it consisteth. 2.8.28.

The first cause is a shadowing of spiritual rest, that is to say, of our sanctification: this is prooved by divers places to have beene the chief thing in the Sabbath 2.8.29.

Why the Lord appointeth the seuenth day. 2.3.0.31.

This part, for as much as it was Ceremonial, is taken away by the death of Christ. 2.8.31.

The two later causes, that is to say, that there should be certaine days appointed for assemblies in the church, & that there should be given to servants, a rest from their labor, do stauie for all ages. 3.8.32.
The Table.

Of dyes of meeting in the church to hear the worde of God and common prayers: where is spoken of offering of the funday, 2,8.3,3. and of superstition to be avoided in this behalfe. 2,8.34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament. 4,14,1.
For what reason the old writers vsed this word in that sense. 4,14,2,13.
A Sacrament is ever without a promise going before, which the Lord sealeth by that mean, wherein he prouideth helpe for our ignorance and dulnese, and also for our weakenes. 4,14,3,5,6,12.
A sacrament consists of the worde and the outward signe: but the sacramental word is to be taken otherwise than the papists think. 4,14,4.

Sacraments cease not to be testimonies of the grace of God, although they be given also to the wicked, which do gather to themselves more grievous damnation thereby. 4,14,7.

Our faith is so confirmed by sacraments, that yet it hangeth upon the inward effectual working of the spirite, 4,14,9,10,1 and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confusion of the diuellish doctrine of the popish schoole, that the sacraments of the new law do mystifie and do give grace, so that we do not stop it with deadly sinne. 4,14,14.

Augustines good distinction between a sacrament and thing of the sacrament, whereby is proued that though God in sacraments do truly offer Christ, yet the wicked receive nothing but the sacrament, that is to say, the outward signe. 4,14,15,16.

We must not thinke that there is joyned or fastened to the sacraments any secret virtue, whereby they by themselves do give vs the graces of the holy Ghost. 4,14,17.

In the old time God gave vnto his people some sacramentes in miracles and some in natural things. And there is spoken of the tree of life and of the rainebow. 4,14,18.

Sacramentes are on the Lordses behalfe testimonies of grace and salvation, and on our behalfe tokens of our profession. 4,14,19.

The sacramentes of the olde Church vnder the lawe, tended to the same ende that our sacramentes do, that is to say, Christ: whom yet our sacraments do more plainly represent, wherefore the schollermens doctrine is to reected, which say, that the old sacraments did shew a shadow of the grace of God, and ours do giue it presently. 4,14,20,21,22,23,23,24.

The five falsifie called Sacraments.
When we denye those five to bee sacraments, which are invented by men, we finde not about the name but the thing: because the papists will have them to be visible forms of invisible grace. 4,19,1.

Many reasons are brought, why it is not lawful for men to make sacraments. Also there is a difference to be put betweene sacraments, and other ceremonies. 4,19,2.

The number of feauen sacraments cannot be proued by the authoritie of the olde church. 4,19,3.

Although the old church vnder the lawe, had no sacraments, yet at this day, the christian Church ought to be content with those two, which Christ hath ordained: and it is not lawful for men to make other, nor to add vnto those any thing of their owne. 4,18,20.

Sacrifices.
A difference betweene the sacrifices of Moses his law, and the supper of the Lord in the christian church. 4,18,12.

What the name of a sacrifice properly signifieth; and of the duters kinds of sacrifices vnder the lawe: which may be deuised into two forts, whereof some may bee called of thanksgiving, and other some propitiatory or of cleansing. 4,18,13.

Our onely propitiatory sacrifice, is the death of Christ. Sacrifices of thanksgyuing we have many, as all the duties of charitie, praier, praifes, giuing of thanks, and all that we do to the worshipping of God. 4,18,13,16,17.

This manner of sacrificing is daily vsed in the church, and in the supper of the Lord. And thereupon all Christians are sacrificing priests.

Satisfacon Papistical.
Of satisfaction, which they make the thirde thing in penance, of retaining the paine, the fault being forgiven, and such like lies, which all are overthrown, by setting against the free forgiving of sins, by the name of Christ. 3.4.25.

A confusion of the blasphemous error of the schoolmen, that forgivenes of sins, and reconciliation is once done unbatchime, but after Baptisme we must rise againe by satisfactions. 3.4.26.

By such error, Christ is spoyle of his honor, & the peace of conscience is troubled, forasmuch as they cannot certainly determine, that their sins are forgiven them. 3.4.27.

In Daniel, when Nabuchadnezer is commanded to redeem his sins with rightousnesse: that same redeeming is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set forth, but rather the manner of true conversion. The same is to be saide of certaine other places of Scripture. 3.4.36.

An expostion of that place in the Gospel, Many sins are forgiven her, because she hath loved much: Meaning that love is not the cause, but the prove of forgivenes. 3.4.37.

The olde writers of the Church did not speake of satisfactions in such sense as the Pulpits doe: for they understond that the penitent doe make satisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3.4.38.39.

Scripture, the Word of God, and the authoritie thereof.

Men doe not sufficiently know God the creator, and discern him from fained gods, by consideration of his creatures, vnles they be also holpen by the light of the word. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his, not onely since that he chose the Lewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, even toward Adam, Noah, and the other Fathers. 1.6.1.

Either by oracles, or by visions, or by the ministerie of other, the Fathers had the word which they were certainly persuaded to be the word of God, whereby they knew the true God the creator and governor of all things: which word afterward, that he might provide for men in all ages, he caused to be written in the Law and the Prophetes, as it were in publike registres. 1.6.2,3. in which place also is proued by testimonies of Scripture, that the doctrine of the word, must be joyned to the consideration of creatures, lest we conceive a fickle knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authoritie of Scripture hangeth upon the judgement of the Church, and in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1.7.1.

This error is well confuted by the place of Paul in the second chapter to the Ephesians, where he saith that the faithfull are builded upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes. 1.7.2.

In what sense Augustine sayeth, that he would not have belieued the Gospell, vnles the authoritie of the Church did moue him: which place they doe cauoulyly wret to the confirmation of their error. 1.7.3.

Although there be many other argumentes, which do proue, yea, doe enforce the wicked to confesse, that the Scripture came from God, yet by none other meanes than by the secret testimonie of the Holy Ghost, our harts are truly perswaded that it is GOD, which speaketh in the Lawe, in the Prophetes, and in the Gospell, And this is proued by many places of Esiae. 1.7.4.5.

The orderly disposition of the wisdome of God, the doctrine fauouring nothing of earthlinesse, the goodly agreement of all the partes among themselves, and specially that basenesse of contemptible wordes, vtering the high mysteries of the heauenly kingdome, are second helps to stablishe the credit of Scripture. 1.8.1,2,11.

Also the antiquity of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doth not himselfe invent a new God, but setteth forth to the Israelites, the God of their fathers. 1.8.3,4.

Whereas Moses doth not hide the shame of Levi his Father, nor the murmuring of Aaron his brother, & of Mary his sister, nor doth aduance his owne children: the same are argumentes, that in his bookes is nothing fained by man. 1.8.4.

Also the miracles which happened, as well at the publishing of the law, as in all the rest of time. 1.8.5.
The Table.

Which miracles, when the prophane writers could not deny, they cauall'd, that Moses did then by Magiical Artes. Which slander is confuted by most strong reasons. 1.8.6.

Also whereas Moses speaking in the person of Leob, assigneth the government to the Tribe of Judea, and where he telleth before of the calling of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeares after, and the other almost two thousand yeares: these are arguments, that it is God himselfe which speaketh in the Booke of Moses 1.8.7.

Whereas Esay telleth before of the captiuitie of the Iewes, and their rettoring by Cyrus (which was borne a hundred yeares after the death of Esay) and where Jeremia before that the people was ledde away, appointed their exile to continue three score and tenne yeares, whereas Jeremy and Ezechiel, being farre distant in places the one from the other, doe agree in all their sayings, where Daniel telleth before of things to come, for six hundred yeares after: these are most certaine praouces, to stablith the authoritie of the Booke of the Prophetes 2.8.3.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which ask how we know that those are the writings of Moses and the Prophets, which are read in their names: and how we know that there was ever any such Moses 1.8.9.

Also of them that ask, from whence the copies of the Booke of the Scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commanded them all to be burned. And there is spoken of the wonderfull providence of God in preserving them so many ages, among so many enemies, and so cruell perfections 1.8.10.

The simplicitie of speech of the first three Evangelistes, containing heavenly mysteries, the phrase of John thundering from on high with weightie fentences, the heavenly majestie shining in the writings of Peter and Paul, the sudden calling of Matthew from the boorde, the calling of Peter and John from their fisherbotes to the preaching of the Gospell, the conversion and calling of Paul being an enemie to Apostleship, are signes of the holy Ghost speaking in them 1.8.11.

The content of so many ages, of so sundrie nations, and of so duerle minds in embracing the Scripture, and the rare godlineffe of some, ought to stablith the authoritie thereof among vs 1.8.12.

Also the bloud of so many Martyrs which for the confession thereof, haue suffered death with a constant and sober zeale of God. 1.8.13.

Against certaine phrentike men, which for sake the reading of Scripture and learning, doe boaste of the Spirtue and doe flie to revelation 1.9.1.2.

A confutation of their objection, that it is not meete that the Spirtue of God, to whom all things ought to be subject, should be subject to the Scripture 1.9.2.

Also where they say that we rest upon the latter which flayeth 1.9.3.

The Lord hath ioyned with a mutual knot the certaine of his doctrine and of his Spirtue 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heaven and earth and other creatures doth deface out God vnto vs, such doth the Scripture let him forth, that is to say, eternall, full of goodness, clemencie, mercie, righteounesse, judgement and truth: and also to the fame end 1.10.1.2.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirit of man is not only a breath, but an immortal substance, although it were created, is proved by conscience, by the knowledge of God, & by so many excellent gifts wherewith the mind of man is endued, yea, and by those things which it conceueth in sleepe, and also by many arguments taken out of the scripture 1.15.2. Finally by this that it is said, that man was created after the image of God. Sect.5.

Against them that under the colour of Nature do denying the providence and governance of God uttering it felle in the marvellous and in a manner innumerable powers of the soule.1.5.4.5.

A confutation of the error of the Manichees and of Sermettus, that the soule is a derivation of the substance of God: also of the error of Ofander, which acknowledge no image of God in man without an essential righteousness.1.15.5.

Concerning the immortality of the soule, in a manner none of the philosophers hath certainly spoken; but they doe binde the powers thereof to this present life, whereas the scripture doth so give to it the chief rule in government of life, that it also stirreth vp man to the worshipping of God. Also of the diuersitie of souls, and of the diuision of the powers of the soule according to the Philosophers.1.15.6.

Another diuision more agreeable with Christian doctrine, that is to say, that the powers of the soul are understanding and will: and the office and force of either of them in mans first estate.1.15.7.8.

That there yet remaineth somewhat of the seed of religion yet imprinted even in the corruption of the soule.1.15.6.

It is not one or another particular falling, but a general forsaking, the description whereof is declared by the Apostle. Neither is it any maruell if God will be alwayes vnappeasable to them that have so fallen.3.3.23. forasmuch as he promiseth pardon only to them that repent, which they shall never do. And though the scripture do say that some such have groan and cried, yet that was not repentance or conversion, but rather a blind torment by desperation.3.3.24.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes saying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: also of their opinion which say that in all Sinnes there is an aduised malice and slowardnes.2.2.22, 23.25.

Against the false imagination of the Sophisters concerning veniall sinnes, which they call defires without a determined affent, which do not long rest in the harte: it is proved that every sinne, even the lightest desire defeuereth death, and is deadly, except in the Saints which obtaine pardon by the mercie of God.2.8.58,59.

Supposition.

The simplicities of the superstitious doth not excuse them, because their blindness is found to be mingled with vanity, pride, and obtinacie. 1. 4. 1.3.

When superstition goeth about to please God, it mocketh him with lying colours. 4. 3.

The superstitious do not approche vnto God but against their will and with seruile feare. 1. 4. 4.

Who soever do corrupt the true religion, although they follow the consent of antiquitie or the custome of any citie, yet they depart from the one and true God. 1. 5. 12.

The craft of superstition, when granting the chiefe place to the one God, it becometh him with a rout of smaller Gods. 1. 12. 1.3.

Supper of the Lord.

Of the bread and wine the signes in the holy supper: and it is declared by his own words at his Supper, why the Lord willed that we should vse them. 4. 17. 1.

Wee gather a great fruit of confidence and sweete nede out of this sacrament, which testifieth that we are so grown together into one bodie with Christ, that whatsoever is his, wee may lawfully call it ours. 4. 17. 2.

This is declared by the words of the supper. 4. 17. 3.

The chiefe office of the sacraments is not to give vnto vs the body of Christ without any higher consideration, but rather to seal the promise wherein he testifieth that his flesh is verily meat. 4. 17. 4.

The supper maketh not Christ then first to beginne to bee the bread of life, but that wee should seelke the force of that bread. He once gave his flesh for the life of the world, & dayly giveth it to them that bee his. Wee must beware that we do not too much abase or advance the signes. The eating of the flesh of Christ is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4. 17. 5.

So throught Chrysostome and Augustine: and in what sense Augustine said, that in beleeming we eat the flesh of Christ. 4. 17. 6.

They do not say enough, which passing over the mention of flesh and blood, doe thinke that wee are made partakers onely of the spirit of Christ. The mysterie of the Supper is so great, that neither the tong can express with speaking, nor the heart comprehend with thinking the greatness thereof. 4. 17. 7.

How faire the perfect communicating of Christ extendeth. Where is declared that Christ, which from the beginning was the life giuing word of the father, made the flesh which he took upon him to be also life giuing to vs. 4. 17. 8. 9.

The faithfull doe truely eate of the same flesh howe great distance of places soever there be between them and it. 4. 17. 10.

The mysterie of the supper consisteth of two things, the bodily signes, and the spiritual truth: Which spiritual truth containeth three things, signification, matter, and effect. 4. 17. 11.

They are without testimony of antiquitie. And in what sense the old writers said, that in the consecration is made a secret turning. Also the signification of the supper agreeth not, vnlesse the substance of the outwarde signes remaine. 4. 17. 14.

The bread is a sacrament to none but to men to whom the wordes are directed. And here are confuted certaine arguments of the teachers of transubstantiation. 4. 17. 15.

Of some men, which though they do at one word grant that the substance of the signes remaineth, yet placing the body of Christ in breade and vnder breade, they fall backe into the locall presence, and faine being every where. 4. 17. 16. 17. 18. 20.

A confutation of their objections. 4. 17. 21. 22. 23. &c.

It is proved that this doctrine is not maintained, neither by the testimonie of Augustine, nor by authoritie of scripture. 4. 17. 28. 29. 30. 31.
The Table.

A confusion of certain other of their objections, and chiefly of this that they say, that whatsoever we teach of spiritual eating, is against the true and real eating: where also is declared that the body of Christ is in the supper offered to the infidels, but they receive it not 4.17.33.

Neither can the saying of Augustine bee drawn to this purpose, that the Sacraments are nothing appared by the infidels of men, which is proved by divers other testimonies of the same man 4.17.34.

In the papacie the Supper (the true ministiration whereof is not without the word) is turned into a dumme action. And here is spoken of the laying vp of the Sacrament to bee extraordinarily distributed to sick men 4.17.39.

The doctrine of the papists, when they go about to prepare men to the worthinesse of eating the body of Christ, doth in cruel wise torment consciences: And the diuell could not by any reader way destroy men of the best remedie to avoid this destruction. They erre which in the supper doe require of the faithfull perfection of faith 4.17.41,42.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared that it is a kind of worshipping of God: And therefore wee must beware that our owne conteniente not any dishonor to the name of God, which is done in forswearing: or any contempt of it, which is done in superfuous othes, or in which the name of any other than God is vfed 2.8.19,23,24,25.

It is pronounced by Scripture against the Anabaptists, that all othes are not forbidden vs, that Christ in the Gospell changed nothing, as touching the rule of Swearing, set forth in the lawe 2.8.26. Which is pronounced by his owne example: and not onely publicke, but also private othes are permitted, keeping the moderation which the lawe commandeth 2.8.27.

Temptations.

- Of diverse kindes of Temptations: and in what sense it is said that God tempteth vs. 3. 20. 46.

Testament, old, and new.

- Of the likenes of the old, and new Testament: Where is declared, that they are all one in substance and matter, but onely do differ in ministration. The likenes standeth chiefly in three points. 2. 10. 1. 2.
- The first point is, that the old Testament did not holde the fathers in earthly felicitie, but had chiefe regard to the life to come. Which is proved by Paul, which saith that the promises of the Gospell are contained under it. 2. 10. 3.
- The same also is proved by the lawe and the Prophetes: First, by considering the wordes of the covenant: I am your God. 2. 10. 7. 8.
- A conclusion of this point with rehearting certain testimonies out of the new Testament. Sect. 23.

- The second point is that the olde Testament did not stand upon the merits of men, but upon the free merce of God. The third point is that the covenant of the Fathers with God, did then stand upon like knowledge of Christ the mediator. 2. 10. 4.

Also in signification of Sacraments the Israelites under the law were equal with the Christian people. 2. 10. 5. 6.

- There are lower differences of the olde Testament from the newe, whereunto wee may add a fift. The fift is, that although in the old time also the Lords wil was to direct the foules of his people to the heavenly inheritance: Yet to the ende that they might bee the better nourished in the hope thereof, hee gave it them to bee beheld, and after a certaine manner tasted under earthlie benefits. But nowe the grace of the life to come, being more clearly vnderstood by the Gospell, bee directed our minde to the straight way to the meditation thereof, leaving the inferiour manner of exercing which hee vseth among the Israelites. 2. 11. 1.

- Therefore the old Church is compared to an heir under age, which is governed by Gardians 2. 11. 2.

- For this reason, the fathers so much esteemed this life, and the blessings thereof. 2. 11. 3.

- The second difference is in figures wherein the olde Testament did thowe forth the image and shadow of spiritual good things. The newe Testament giueth the present truth and perfect bodie. There is also a reason shewed why the Lorde kept this order: And a description of the old testament 2. 11. 4.

- In this sense it is faide, that the Iuwes were by the introduction or schooling of the lawe ledde vnto Christ: before that he was deliuered in the flesh. 2. 11. 5. which appeared in the most excellent Prophets that were endued with singular grace of the spirit. Sect. 6.

- The third difference, is taken out of the one and thirtie Chapter of Jeremie, and the thirde Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, that the old Testament is literal, and the new Testament is spiritual: the old bringeth death, the newe is the instrument of life. 2. 11. 7. 8.

- The fourth difference is, that the Scripture calleth the olde Testament, the Testament of bondage, because it engendreth feare Traditions.

For as much as the Lord, willing to teach a rule of true righteousness, hath drawn all the partes thereof to his owne will, there-

which men deuise of their owne wits, are nothing worthe before him: But the true

they call Traditions of the Church, into such as containe ceremonies, and other which are said to pertaine to discipline. The Thefe in mens mindes: but the new is called the Testament of libertie, because it rais-eth them vp to confidence and suretice. The three latter differences are comparisons of the lawe and the Gospell. The first containeth also the promisses made before the law.

The fathers lusted so vnder the lawe and the olde Testament, that they staid not there, but alwayes aspire to the new, ye and imbraced a certaine communicating thereof.

2.11.9,10.

The fifth difference is, that before the comming of Christ, the Lorde had seuered one nation, in which hee would keepe the covenant of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles is a certaine signe, wherewith the excellencie of the new Testament is set forth above the olde: a thing so incredible, that it seemed yet newe to the Apollles themselves, being exercized in reading of the Prophets, and ended with the holy Ghost 2.11.11,12.

A conclusion of this matter, and an answer to divers objections of some men, which faie that this varietie in the Church, this diverse manner of teaching, so great change of vsages and ceremonies, is a great aburditie. Where is declared that the constancie of God appeareth in this chang-ning, and hee hath done nothing but wisely, righteously, and in mercie, when he governeth his Church, after one fort in childhood, and after another fort in riper age, and also when hee did keepe close in one people the shewinge forth of his grace before the comming of Christ, which afterwarde he powred forth vpon all nations.

ment: where is intreated of divers kindes

Of Warres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magistrates are driven of necessitie to take weapon in hand, to execute publike revenge vpon those that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they bee ciuill or forret enemies. 4.20,11.

It maketh not to the contrarie heercof, which manie alleage, that there is not in the newe Testament any testimonie or example which prooueth that Warre is a thing lawfull for Christians. But Magistrates ought to take greaheede, that in taking of weapon in hand, they nothing at all followe their own lustes. As Warre, so garisons also, leagues and ciuill fortifications are thinges lawfull for Christians to vs. 4.20,12.

Will of God.

Of the secret will of God. Also of another Will, whereunto answereth Willing obedience. 3.20,43. and 3.24,13,7.

Will of Man.

Whether the Will of man bee in euerie part through defiled and corrupted, so that it bringeth forth nothing but ciuill: Or whether it yet retaine some libertie of choise. Where is declared the common saying taken out of the Philosophers, that all things by natural disposition coast that which is good. And there is shewed that the libertie of wil cannot be prooued thereby. 2.2.26.

The soule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it selfe to aspire to goodness. And sith the whole man is subject to the dominion of sin, it is prooued by testimonies of Scripture and of Augustine, that the will of man is bound with most straight bonds 2.2.27.

Man by his fall lost not his Will, but the soundnesse of his Will, so that hee cannot move, much lesse applie himselfe to godnes, but is necessarilly drawn or lead vnto ciuill, howbeit not by compulsion but voluntarilie. Which is prooued by Augustine and Bernard. A large declaration of the difference between compulsion and necessitie. 2.3.5.

Sith the Lorde both beginneth and perfiteth good in our harts, sith he worketh in vs to will, that is to sake the good will, sith he createth a newe hart, taketh away the stone hart and giueth a fleesly hart, it followeth, that the Will of man is vntierie corrupted and hath no goodnesse at all. 2.3,6.

It is cleereely prooued by reasons and diverse testimonies of Scripture, that God worketh good will in them that bee his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginning so as it may afterwaies doe some good of it selfe. But because it is his onely worke that Will conceiued a love of goodnes, that it is inclined to the studie thereof, that it is stirred and mooved to an endeouour.
endevour to follow it, and againe that the choice, judic, and endeauour doe not fain, but proceed to effect, finally that man goeth constantly forward in them and continueth to the end. 2.3.7, 8, 9.

Therefore it is prooved by the authoritie of Scripture & of Augustine that this which hath bin taught these many ages, that God doth accomad our will, that it is afterward in our owne choice to obey or disobey his motion and other like sayings are utterly false. 2.3.10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

Also in doings, which of themselves are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belong rather to the bodily than the spirituall life, the wil of man is not free, but by the special motion of God is inclined to clemency, mercy, wrath, feare, and other divers affections, when it pleaseth him to make way for his prouidence. Which is prooved by scripture, by daily experience, and by the authoritie of Augustine. 2.4.6, 7.

Works.

A comparison of the purenes of God with all the righteousnes of men. 3. 12, 4, 5.

All the offspring of Adam being divided into fewer kinds of men, it is prooved that they have no holines, or righteousnes: First in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whom although there do sometime appeare excellent qualities (which are the gifts of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3. 14, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

The same is shewed in them which being profess’d by Sacraments, are Christians onely in name, denying God in their deeds: Also in hypocrites which with vaine false colours doe hide the wickenes of their hart. 3. 14, 7, 8.

Finally, it is prooved that eu’n the children of God truly regenerated by his spirite, can not stande by any righteousnes of their owne works before the judgement of God, because they can bring forth no good worke that is not sprinkled with some vnequallnes of the fielth, and therefore damnable. Moreover although they could bring forth anie such worke, yet one sin is enough to blot out the remembrance of all former righteousnes. 3. 14, 9, 10, 11.

A confusion of the Papistes shifts concerning the righteousnes of works: and specially of the same horrible monsiter of works of supererogation. 3. 14, 12, 13, 14, 15.

When we entreat of worke we must thrust two phellences out of our minds: that we put no trust in the righteousnesse of our owne worke, and that we ascribe no glorie unto them. 3.14, 16.

The scripture setteth out and declareth several kinds of caufe in stablising our salvation: And it is prooved that in them all there is no regard of worke. 3. 14, 17.

Where sometimes the Saints do bolden themselves with remembrance of their own innocencie and vprightenes: how the fame is to be taken: and howe it doth in no wise abate any thing from the free righteousnes in Christ. 3. 14, 18, 19, 20.

Where the Scripture faith that the good works of the faithfull do mooue God to doe them good, the order is therein rather expressed than the caufe. 3. 14, 21.

Why the Lorde in the Scripture calleth good worke ours, and promiseth rewardes to them. 3. 15, 3.

A confusion of the Sophisters invention concerning morall worke, whereby men bee made acceptable to God, before that they bee graftet into Christ. 3. 15, 6, &. 17, 4.

Those rewardes are given to the worke of the faithfull which the Lorde in his law hath promis’d to the followers of righteousnes: but thereof there are three caufes to be considered. 3. 17, 3.

We may note in the scripture two acceptances of man with God: of which the later although it have respect to the good worke of the faithfull, yet is also the free mercie of God. 3. 17, 45.

When it is saide that God doth good to them that love him, heere is not rehearsed a caufe why he should doe them good, but rather the manner of what fot they be by his grace. 3. 17, 6.

An exposition of certaine places where-in the scripture gueth to good worke the name of righteousnes. And there is shewed that thofe places are not against the doctrine of justification of faith. 3. 17, 7.

One good worke or manie do not suffice for righteousnesse before God, although one one sinne suffice to condemme And here the principle hath no place, the contraries have all one rule. 3.18.10.

Why the Lorde saide that he rendereth to workes that which hee had freely given before Workes. 3.18.3. And therein he helpheth our weakenesse least we should be diffcouraged. 3.18.4,6,7.

Hereupon hangeth the righteousnesse of the good Workes which the faithfull doe, that by pardon they are allowed of God. 3.18.5.

THE ENDE OF THE TABLE.

TO THE CHRISTIAN AND STYDIVOS READERS OF this Booke, Augustine Marlorate witheth health.

W hoseuer shall read and peruse these two Tables following, and especially the latter, may manuell what I meant (after so many impression and corrections of this worke) to collect and gather all the places of holy Scriptures therein alleged: and a great part of the authorities therein expounded, whereas if any fruit or profit thereof were to be had, the same long before might have beene done: and especially about three yeeres past, when the author himselfe was so diligent therein: who besides the many and profitable additions (which it containeth) bee himselfe setting the same in order, with his owne handes, and reducing it to a most exact perfection did then set and publish it forth, in such sort, that in foure books being divided into Chapters and divers Sections, bee hath right woorthily and in familiar manner, comprised the summe of the whole Christian Religion. And certainly I cannot deny but it would have bee very good and commodious, if that any one man would have taken the paine, faithfully and truly to have collected those places: which thing I thought once to have done by the advice of the Imprinter, seeing that my charge and office did else where call mee, as also when I had perused and set it in another order than it was before, and had then finished it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the least to suspense for the time. And after that this book being put forth both in Latine and French, was set to sale in curious place, because I sawe no man who then did take the paine to reduce the places of Scriptures to a Table, and understanding how profitable the same would be to all men: I could not choose but after my power and as lesse or none in those troblesome times, to impoyse my whole care and travell therein. And because all things should be done and come forth more certaine and in better order: I would not give credite, nor trust to the numbers which the Imprinter had before set and made: for when I had diligently conferred them all, I found many false, many omitted, and some disorderly set: And surety that happeneth very soon such as are not best skilful in examining and prouing the places of holy Scripture to bee done deceived. Wherefore all things diligently restored, and that supplied which seemed to want, I did so order the places of Scripture collected out of the old and new Testament, that if there were any through forgetfulness, or by any other means omittted or overskipped: (as it cannot be but that in a great hauaue someone care of corne shall ecape the reapers handes) I daie warrant so few shall be found, that this Table being brought to trial you shall not finde one much more plentiful or larger. Neuerthelesse I do pray and request the readers, that if they do finde any, they shall advertise the Imprinter, whereby the same may better be examined and correcte. And this is to be noted, that such whole verses as I have comprized in this Table, they were not wholly but in part allag ed, much lesse expounded in the Institucion: which thing I did with good consideration. For oftimes it happeneth that in divers places of the Institucion, some authorities are allag, which are proven but by some part of the verse. And because in noting the places and numbers, we must The Preface.

ye repetitions (which for the most part bring a loathsome ease to the reader) it thought it better to put in the whole verse, than by omissions, or omissions, or repetitions, or omissions, or repetitions. And as concerning the commodity which the reader may gather by this my traveall (besides that which by yse and experience I am taught by these Tables, which for mine owne private study and exercise I wrote upon the Institutions heretofore set forth) I durst not affirm this much that they which are not exercised in treating the holy Scripture, and yet desirous to serve the Church of God, doe diligently endeavour themselves therunto, they shall finde a large and plaine way both with dexterity to expound the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, as also apply to apply the authorities here allaged, and such like to the edifying of the Church, which is the very end of the whole. And although wee want not good Commentaries to discover unto us the natural sense of the Scripture, which we doe now study and apply: yet because they who wrote the same, and who with good success have travealled therein, were contented with the plaine and sincere exposition of the text: none could tell by the yse of the said Commentaries alone (unless they were well practised in the principles of religion) how and to what common place they ought to apply the argument then in hand. But who can be so contented to yse this Table, when sooner he shall finde the places which he entreateth, he shall see how and to what end the same is to be applied, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the adueraries, or to the reconciling of such places as seeme to be repugnant. And this shall be very commodious and profitable, not only for the amplifying of any argument, but also to satisfie them, which are desirous to be confirmed in the principal points of Christian Religion. For it is manifest how simple and slender is their oration and speech, which bring and allege nothing else, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the authors themselves (being most woorthie and well learned) doe chiefly desire breuitie, because the readers should yse and finde the common places themselves, to the ende they shoulde the more largely be applie to these things which in the Commentaries are but briefly expounded. Againes, for as much as we have not alwaies in readiness, what good authors have written upon the Scripture: and very few Commentaries upon some bookes, and namely upon this Institution, are to be found or bad: this Table expounding the obscure and hard authorities, shal greatly further and helpe the readers. For they shall either finde some readie interpretation, or some entrance whereby to search and finde out the true sentence. And as touching the translation, I tryst it shall not seeme strange to the reader, that I have rather followed the selfe same words, as they be in the Bible, than as they be allaged by Calvin in this his Institution. For he being a man most excellently well learned, and of great reading (as by his works doth appeare, how readie and familiar the Scriptures were to him) had not alwaies the bookes in readinesse, or lying open before him, when he wrote: neither was it necessarie that whatsoever he did assault out of the old or new Testament, he should express or write it in the selfe same worde: for it is sufficient, that the sense be faithfully retaine, and the true proprie of the wordes observed, and so to shew the caullings of all men, sauing such as will finde fault in that, which in the least part cannot be followed nor observed. Being therefore perswaded, that neither he himselfe will be offended, nor the reader mislike, if the sentences in the Bible be translated according to the Hebrew, as concerning the olde Testament, and according to the Grecce, as touching the new Testament: I have aduentured to assault the authorities of the Scriptures in another order (as concerning the worde) then they are allaged in this booke of Institutions. And therefore sometimes that which is recited in the thrise person, this Table doth express in the seconde, and so contrariwise: but yet so, that the sense and meaning is alwaies referre, which thing everie man shall easely perceive, if diligently and without haue judgement, he doe confere everie thing together: for else curious heads doe loose that fruite, which by aduised reading they might have and receive. And as concerning the names and numbers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde Testament, we have not followed the common translation, but that which is most agreeable to the Hebrew. And therefore we doe aduertise the readers, that they doe not take the first booke of the Kings, for the first of Samuel: nor the seconde of Kings, for the seconde of the same Prophet: which is so done by them, who heretofore have quoted the Chapters in this imprinted booke, because they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Concordances, which is collected according to the common translation: and by that meanes, as it may evidently appeare
The Table.

to all men some books of the Olde Testament are not lightly intituled: and the Psalms otherwise and in another order divided, than did the Hebrewes, And forasmuch as all the principal points of religion are in this Booke copiouslie and faithfully expounded, we may easilie refute the false opinions of the Aduersaries. Whosoeuer shall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learne, or a desire to profit: there is no doubt, but he shall very much profit himselfe, and helpe others: whose consciences he may so strengthen and assure, as they need not to quake in any point, because they be assured, that their Faith is grounded upon the firme foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, who wrote and spake, being inspired by the holy Ghost, who hath willed and commanded his most precious and deare word, to be read, heard, and handled, in all fear and reverence, without adding thereunto, or taking from the same: lest we be woorthily reproosed of our folly. Let us therefore, in all simplicitie and fear of God, read so wholesome and necessarie things, and dayly proceed therein, in the grace and knowledge of God, who onely is the Saviour, head and Doctor of the Church: To whom now and for ever be all glory. ANOTHER TABLE IN WHICH are contained the places of the Bible

according to the course of the olde and new Testament.

If at any time you do finde two numbers in the margens, the first signifieth the Chapter of the Bible, the second the verse the verse of the same Chapter: but if you finde one number alone, then that signifieth the Verse only. The first number put after the text signifieth the Booke of the Institutions, the second the Chapter, and the third the Section.

that Soule shall be wiped out from amongst his people, because hee hath broken my covenant.

11 I will ordaine my covenant with Israell.

18.1 The Lord appeared vnto him in the valley of Mamre.

2 There were three men appeared vnto standing by him.

10 Returning, I will come vnto thee about this time, and thy wife Sarai shall have a sonne.

23 If there shall be 50 just in the citie, shall they perish alio? and wilt thou not spare that place for 50 just, if they shall be in it?

27 Because I haue begun once, shall I speake vnto my Lord, being duste and ashes?

19.1 And two Angels came to Sodom in the evenning.

20.2 And he said of Sarai his wife, she is my sister.

3 Whether or no wilt thou die for the woman which thou broughtest? for the hath a husband.

18 For God did shew euery wemb of the house of Abimelech, for Sarai the wife of Abram.

21.1 And Sarai conceived, and bare a sonne to Abram in his age.

10 Cast out this handmaid and his sonne.

12 All things that Sarai shall say vnto thee, hearken vnto her, because in Isaacs shall thy seede be called.

24 And Abram said, I will sweare.

25 And Abram blamed Abimelech, for the well of water which his servants took away by force.

22.1 The which after they were done, God tempted Abram.

2 Take thou thy only sonne Isac, whom thou loue, and go into the land of visions, and offer him in sacrifice.

3 Therefore Abram rising by night did led his Asse, carrying with him two yong men and his sonne Isac, and when they had cut wood for sacrifice, he went into the place that God had commanded him.

8 My Sonne, God will provide to him-

Depart
The Table.

15 Depart from euill and doe good. 3. 3. 8
16 The eyes of the Lord be vpon the lyft, and his cares to their prayers. 1. 16. 7. & 3. 20. & 3. 20. 10
17 The countenance of the Lord is vpon them that doe euill, that he may roote from the earth their memorie. 1. 16. 17
18 The death of the wicked is euill. 2. 10. 14. & 2. 10. 18
19 The Lord redeemeth the soules of his servantes. 2. 10. 16
20 The wicked man faide to himselfe that he might doe euill: there is no feare of God before their eies. 1. 4. 2
21 For he hath done deceitfully in his owne sight, that his iniquitie may be found to hatred. 1. 4. 2
22 Thy mercie O Lord, reacheth vnto the heavens, and thy truth vnto the cloudes. 3. 2. 7
23 Thy judgementes are wonderous deep. 1. 17. 2. & 3. 23. 5
24 With thee is the fountaine of life, and in thy light we shall see light. 2. 2. 20
25 Be subiect to the Lord and entreate him. 3. 2. 37
26 For because those that bee blessed of him, shall possesse the earth: but they that be cursed of him, shall perish. 2. 1. 2
27 O Lord in thy wrath reprove me not, neither in thy anger correct me. 3. 4. 32
28 Mine iniquities have gone ouer my head, and as a heauie burden they have weighed vpon me. 3. 4. 16
29 I was dumme and opened not my mouth, because thou diddest it. 1. 17. 8
30 I am a stranger and a pilgrime with thee, as all my Fathers were. 2. 10. 15
31 Let me paufe, that I may come to my selfe before I depart, and be no more. 3. 20. 16
32 And he put in my mouth a new song, a verfe to our God: many shall see and feare, and they shall truft in the Lord. 3. 20. 26. & 3. 20. 28
33 Many haft thou made, O Lord, thy marvellous works, & there is none that is like to thee in thoughtes. 1. 5. 9. & 1. 17. 1
34 Thou wouldest not sacrifice and offering, but thou madest vnto me cares. 3. 22. 10
8 Then I faide, behold, I come: it is written of me in the Chapter of the Booke. 2. 16. 5
9 I desired to doe thy good will, O my God, and thy law is in the midst of my hart. 2. 16. 5
10 I haue shewed forth thy truth and salvation, I haue not hid thy louing kindnesse and truth from the great congregation. 3. 2. 7
11 Thy louing kindnesse and truth haue alwaies preferred me. 3. 2. 7
12 My Soule thirsted after the strong God, even the living God: when shall I come and appeare before the face of God? 4. 17. 21
13 Why art thou sadde my Soule? and why dost thou trouble me? truft in the Lord. 3. 2. 16
14 Why art thou sadde, O my Soule? and why dost thou trouble me? truft in the Lord. 3. 2. 16
15 Neither did they possesse the lande by their owne sword, and their owne arme did not save them, but thy right hande and thy arme, and the light of thy countenance, because thou diddest faue them. 3. 21. 5
16 If we haue forgot the name of our God, and haue stretched forth our hands vnto a strange God. 3. 20. 27
17 Shall not God search this out? For he knoweth the secrets of the hart. 3. 20. 27
18 For thy sake be we slaine all the daie long, we be esteemed as sheepe for the slaughter. 3. 25. 3
19 Thy feate, O God, endureth for euer, the rod of thy kingdome is a rod of direction. 1. 13. 9
20 Thou haft loued righteousness and hated iniquitie, therefore God thy God hath annointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy companions. 2. 15. 5. & 4. 19. 18. & 4. 20. 10
21 And all the daughters of Tyrus with the rich of the people, shall doe homage before thy face with gifts. 1. 11. 15
22 God is our refuge and strength, our helper

6 God is in the midst thereof, it shall not be moued. 4.1.3
47.3 The Lord is high & terrible, a great King aboue all the earth. 1.13.24
5 He hath choosen vs vnto his inheritance, the beautie of Jacob whom he hath loved. 3.21.5
48.9 As we have heard, so we have seene in the Citie of the Lord of power, in the Citie of our God: God hath built it for euer. 1.11.14
11 According vnto thy name O God, such is thy praife throughout the earth, thy right hand is full of righteoufnes. 3.2.10.41.14 & 4.16.32
5.7 They that trust in their owne strength, and glory in the multitude of their riches. 2.10.17
8 He can by no meane redeeme his brother, he shall not pay his raunfome to God. 2.10.17
11 When he shall see wise men die, & ignoraunt persons and fooles perish. 2.10.17
12 The building of them from generations to generations, they called their names by their Lands. 2.10.17
13 And Man when he was in honor, knew not thereof: he was compared vnto foolish beasts, and he was made like vnto them. 2.10.17
14 This way vnto them is the stumbling blocke of them, and afterwards they delight themselves in the honor thereof. 2.10.17
15 As Sheepe they be put into hell; death feedeth vpon them: and the righteous shall rule over them in the morning. 2.10.17
50.15 And call vpon me in the day of trouble: and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt honor me. 3.20.13.28.8 & 4.17.37
23 He that offereth vp praiſes, hee doth glorifie me: and this is the way by the which I will shew him the f dallation of God. 4.18.17
51.8 Have mercy vpon me, O God, for thy goodnes sake, &c. 3.4.9
6 That thou maiſt be acknowledged pure, when thou haſt judged. 1.18.3.6 & 3.1.11.11 & 3.23.2
7 Behold, I was fashioned in iniſque, and my Mother conceiued me in finne. 2.1.5 & 3.3.18. & 3.20.9 & 4.1.16.17
12 Create in me O God, a clean hart, and renue a right Spirit vnto me. 2.17.25,27 & 2.3.9
17 Open thon my lippes, O Lord, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praife. 3.20.8
19 The sacrificce to God is a broken Spirit, a contrite and broken hart, O God, thou wilt not despife. 3.20.1.6
21 Then thou shalt be delighted with offering, with the sacrificce and burnt offering of righteouſnes, then they shall lay Calues vpon thine Altar. 4.18.17
52.10 But I will be like the greene Olue tree in the house of the Lord. 2.20.17
53.4 There is not one that doth that which is good. 2.3.2
55.23 Cast thy burden vpon the Lord, and he shall vphold thee: he will not suffer the righteous to fall for euer. 1.17.6 & 2.1.0.17
24 Thou in the meane time O God, shalt throw downe these bloody thirſt and deceitfull ones, into the pit of destruction. 2.10.17
56.5 I haue trusted in God, I feare nothing that flesh maie do vnto me.1.17.11
10 So often as I call vpon thee, mine enimies guide backe: in this I am affrued, that thou art my God. 3.20.11
12 I will make vowes vnto thee, O God: I will shew forth thy praife. 4.13.4
59.11 Thy goodnesse O Lord may preuent me, bring it to passe O God, that I may see thy worke on mine enimies. 2.10.17
60.14 In God we shall doe valiantlie, and he shall trade downe our enimies. 3.20.16
62.9 Power out your hartes before him, for God is our refuge. 3.20.5
10 The Sons of men be vaine, the fonnies of men be liers: if they were put in a paſte of baſſance, they would be lighter than vanities it felte. 2.3.1 63.4 Thy louing kindneffe is more to be be wished for than life it selfe. 3.2.28. &c. 3.17.14

65.1 Vnto thee, O God, is praise in Sion, vnto thee shall the vowe be paid. 3.20.29
3 Thou hearest prayers, because of this shall all flesh come vnto thee. 3.20.13
5 Blessed is he whom thou choosest, he shall dwell in thy courts, &c. 3.21.5

68.19 Thou art gone vp on high, and hast led captiuitie, &c. 1.13.11

21 Vnto the Lord God belong the illues of death.

36 Thou art terrible O God out of the holy places: the God of Israell hee giueth strength to the people. 1.11.14

69.3 I am suncke downe into a depe mire, in the which there is no botomme. &c. 4.7.13

5 That I am constrained to repay that I tooke not.

22 For they gave me in my meat gall: and when I thirsted they gave mee vinegar to drinke. 4.17.15

29 Let them be wiped out of the booke of the living, and let them not bee written amongst the just. 3.10.18 & 3.24.9

is a sure winnes in heaven. 2.15.3 90.4 A thousand yeeres is before thee as yesterday which is past, yea as a watch in the night. 3.2.42
7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled 3.4.34 9 For all our days were spent, thou being angrie we ended our yeeres sooner than thought. 3.25.12
11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? as every man searcheth thee, so is the indignation of thy anger fierce towards them. 3.25.12 91.1 The man sitting in the secre of the most high, shall abide under the shadowe of the almighty. 1.17.6. & 2.8.42

1.16.5

10. Hee doth not allow of the strength of a horse, and is not delighted with the legs of man.

2.2.10

20. He hath not dealt thus with all nations, neither hath he declared to them his judgements.

3.21.6

PROVERBS.

1.7. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge.

3.2.26

2.21. The righteous shall inhabite the earth, and the upright shall liue long therein.

2.11.2

22. But the wicked shall be cut from the earth, and the transgressors shall be vterrorly taken therefrom.

2.11.2

3.11. Beware thou bee not against the chastisement of the Lord, my sonne, neither do thou loath at his corrections.

3.4.32 & 3.8.6

12. For whom the Lorde loueth hee doth chastise, and he is delighted with him, as a father with his childe.

3.8.6

8.15. By me princes raigne, and kings decrees justes.

4.20.47

22. The Lord possetted me in the beginning of his waies, I was then before his works.

1.13.7

23. I was ordeined from everlasting, and from the beginning before the earth.

1.13.7

24. As yet the depthes was not when I was formed, as yet the fountains did not abound with waters.

1.13.7 & 2.14.8

9.10. The beginning of wisdome is the fear of the Lord.

3.2.26

10.7. The memorie of the just is laudable, but the memorie of the wicked is filthie.

Every word of God is pure, and a shield vnto them that leane vnto him. 3.2.15

And not vnto his words, leaft he reproe thee, and thou be found a lyer. 4.10.17

2.11

And I turned my selfe vnto all the works that my hards had wrought, and to the labour that I had done, and beholde all was vanitie and griefe of minde. 2.3.12

3.19 The selfe same things are woont to happen vnto men and beastes, and what manner of death one hath, the same hath the other, and the selfe same spirit is in all: neither hath man any thing more excellent than beastes: for why all thing is vanitie. 3.2.38

2.1 Who knoweth whether the spirit of man doe ascend vpward, or the spirit of beast descend downward into the earth? 3.25.5

7.36 God made man righteous: but they being made haue followed many vaine thoughts. 2.1.10. & 2.5.18

9.1 No man knoweth other loue or hatred of all things that is before them. 3.2.38. & 3.13.4

2 All things come alike vnto all: both to the just and wicked, &c. 1.16.9

4 A liue dogge is better than a dead lion. 3.25.5

5 They which liue knowe they shall die, but the dead know nothing at all. 3.20.24

6 Both their loue, hatred, and enmie, is now abolished, neither haue they longer portion in the world, of all that is vnder the sunne. 3.20.24

12.7 And the spirit doth returne to God, which gave it. 1.15.2. & 1.15.5

The song of Salomon.

1.14 Shew me thy countenance, speake vnto me, for thy voice will be vnto me sweete, and thy countenance louely. 1.11.14

5.3 I haue put off my coate and how shall I put it on againe? and I haue washed my feete, how shall I defile them againe? 1.16.4

E S A I.

1.5 To what purpose should ye bee smitten any more? for ye shall away more and more, every head is sicke, and every hart is heaque. 3.4.33

10 Heare the word of the Lord ye reignants of Sodome, and thou people of Gomorrhia, heare the law of the Lord. 4.1.18

12 Who requireth that at your hands? 3.14.15

13 Bring no more oblations in vaine, incense is an abomination vnto me: I cannot suffer your newe Moones or Sabbatothes, &c. 2.8.34. & 3.14.8

14 My soule hateh your newe Moones and appointed feastes, they make me wareie. 4.2.10

15 And when you stretch forth your hands, I will hide my eyes from you, and although you multiplye your praire, I will not heare for your hands be full of bloud. 3.20.7

16 Take away all naughtines. 3.3.8

17 Leane to do well, seek right: judgement, releeue the oppressed, judge the fatherlesse, and defend the widow. 2.8.52. & 3.3.8

18 If your sins were as crimson, they shall be made whiter than snow: and though they were as redde as scarlet, they should bee made as wool. 2.4.29

19 If you consent and obey, you shall enjoy the good things of the earth. 2.5.10

20 But if you refuse and be rebellious: you shall be euoued with the sword, because the mouth of the Lorde hath spoken it. 2.5.10

2.8 Their land was full of idols, they worshipped the works of their owne hands, & that which their fingers made. 1.1.1.4

3.1 Beholde the governour the Lorde of hostes, will take from Jerusalem and Juda the valiant and mightie: even all the strength of bread and water. 1.16.7

3 And I will make children their princes, and effeminate persons shall rule them. 4.20.25

4.1 Only let vs be called by thy name, and take away our reproch. 3.20.25

5.8 Woe bee to them that ioyne house to house, and fielde to fielde, continuing till there be none left, &c. 1.18.1. & 2.4.4

26 And,
The Table.

16 And he shall raise vp a signe to the people that be a farre off, and will hisse vp to them from the ends of the earth, &c. 3.19.9

6.1 I saw the Lord sit vp on a high throne and lifted vp, and his lower partes did fill thee, &c. 1.13.11. & 1.13.23

2 The Seraphins stood vp on it, every one had sixe wings. 1.11.3. & 1.14.8

5 Woe vnto mee, for I am brought to silence, because I am a man haing polluted lips. 4.8.3

6 Then flue one of the Seraphims to me, hauing in his hand a burning cole, taken from the altar with the tongs. 1.11.3

9 He said, goe and lay vnto this people, in hearing ye that heare and not understand, &c. 1.13.15. & 3.23.13. & 3.24.13

be in the midst of the lande of Egypt. 4,18.4 21 The Lord shall be known of the Egyptians, and the Egyptians shall know the Lorde in that day and doe sacrifice and oblations, and shall vow vows vnto the Lorde and performe them. 4,18.4
25 Whom the Lord of host hath blessed, saying: blessed be my people of Egypt and Abur, the works of my hands. 1,18.1
25.1 Thou hast done wonderfull things, according to thy counsell of olde, with a stable truth. 3,24.4
8 He will destroy death for ever, and the Lorde will wipe teares from every face, &c. 3,9.6
9 Loe this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will saue vs.1.13.10 & 1.13.24
26.1 We have a strong Citie, saluation shall God set for wals and bulwarks. 1,17.6
19 The dead shall live, and as my bodie shall they rise: awake and sing ye that dwell in dust, &c. 2,10.21 & 3,25.4
21 Beholde, the Lord commeth out of his place, to visite the iniquities of the inhabitants of the earth, and the earth shall shew forth her bloud, and shall no more hide her blaine. 3,25.8
28,16 He which beleeueth shall not make haste. 3,13.13
29 L3 Because this people come neere me with their mouth, and doe honour me with their lips, but their hart is far from me, & their fear towards me was taught by the preceptes of men, &c. 3,20.7,31 & 4,10.15,16,23
14 Therefore behold, I will also addde there to that I may worke manuellously with this people, cuen maruell and woonders, that is, the wisdome of their wise men shal perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shal hide it selfe. 4,10.6
30.1 Woe vnto their rebellious children, faith the Lord, which dare take counsell but not of me, &c. 3,20.28
15 In being quiet and keeping silence shall be your strength. 3,2.37
33 Tophet is prepared moreover long a-gone: this is also prepared for the king: O how deepe and wide he hath made it, his inwared part is fire and much wood, the breath of the Lorde like a riuier of brimstone doth kindle it. 3,15.12
31.1 Woe vnto them that goe downe to Egypt for aye, and lay on horses, and haue trust in chariots, because they bee many. 3,20.28
7 For in that day evry man shall cast away his images of siluer, and his images of golde, which your wicked hande did make vnto you. 1,11.4
33.14 The sinners in Sion shall be atlarge, feare shall possesse the hypocrites, they shall say, which of vs shall abide with the consuming fire? who amongst vs shall dwell with the euerlafting burning? 3,12.
1,16,23 & 3,17.6
22 The Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawe gius, the Lord is our king, hee shall faue vs. 2,10.8 & 2,15.5
24 The people that dwell therein shall haue their iniquities forgiven them 4,1.10

39. Behold, the daies come that all that is in thy houfe, and which thy Fathers haue laid vp in store vntill this day shall be carried to Babylon, nothing shall be left faith the Lord. 1:8.7

7 And of thy fonnes that shall procede out of thee, and which thou shalt beger, shall be carried away, and they shall be Eunuches in the place of the King of Babylon. 2:8.19

40.3 The voice of a crier in the Wildernes, prepare ye to the way of the Lorde make straight in the defatt a path for our God. 3:3.2

6 A voice did say, Cry: and I said, what shall I cry, &c. 2:9.5 & 2:10.7

11 He shall feede his flocke as a Shepheard. 4:19.34

12 Who hath measured the waters with his fift, and counted heauen with his pan, and comprehended the duff of the earth with his three fingers? 3:2.31

13 Who hath inuoked the spirit of the Lord? or who was of his counsell and hath taught him? 4:18.2.9 & 4:19.2

17 All people before him be as nothing, and they are counted to him leffe than nothing and vanity. 3:2.25

18 To whom therefore will you make God like? or what image will you set vp like him? 1:11.2.12

21 Hath not this beece shewed you from the beginning of things? haue you not beece taught by the foundations of the earth? 1:11.4 & 1:14.1

22 Who stitteth upon the circle of the eart, &c. 1:5.5

29 He giueth rather strength to the weare, and vnto him that might fail, he doth increafe power. 2:2.10

41.7 So the workeman comforted the founder, and he that smote with the hammer him that smote by couerle sayyng. It is ready for the foddering: and he fastened this image with nails that it should not be moued out of his place. 1:11.2

9 I haue chosen thee and not caft thee away. 3:2.1.5

29 Beholde they are all vaine, and their works be nothing, their images are winde and confusion. 1:11.2

42.1 Behold my fervant: I will lay vp in him, &c. 2:14.2

8 I will not give my glory to an other nor my prayers to carued images. 1:13.9

9 Behold, the former things haue come to passe, and I shew newe things the which I declared vnto you before they happened. 1:8.7

Seek the Lord whilst he may be found, call ye vpon him whilst he is nere. 3.3.20.

Keepe judgement and do justice, for my saluation is at hand to come and my righteousnes to be revealed. 3.3.20.

Blessed is the man that doth this & the son of man that laieth hold of it, that is to say, keeping the Sabbath that hee pollute it not, &c. 2.8.29.

Those will I bring to my holy mountaine, and make them joyful in my house of prayer, their sacrifice and burnt offerings shall be acceptable on my altar, because my house shall be called the house of prayer for all people. 3.10.29.

Their watchmen are all blind, they have no knowledge, they be dumme dogs, &c. 2.8.29.

Thus saith the high and excellent, he that inhabiteth the eternitie, and whose name is holy, &c. 3.12.6.

It is such a fault that I haue chosen, that a man should afflict his soule for a day, or that he should bow his head? &c. 4.12.

And do not I chose rather this fault, to loose the bands of iniquitie, &c. 3.3.6.

And hide not thy selfe from thine owne flesh. 3.7.6.

Then shall thou call, and the Lord shall hear thee: thou shalt cry, and he shall say, here I am. 3.10.14.

If thou turne away thy footes from the Sabbath, so that thou dost not thy owne will on my holy day, &c. 2.8.31. & 2.8.34.

Behold, the Lords hand is no shorten'd, that he cannot save, neither is his ear heavye that it can not heare. 3.11.

But your iniquitie have separated between you and your God, and your sinnes hath hid his face from you that hee will not heare; 2.12.1. & 3.11.21.

Their feet do run to euill, and they make hafts to shed innocent blood: the thoughts of them are vaine thoughts, desolation and destruction is in their pathes. 2.8.

And when the Lord did see (and that being abashed and woondred) that there was none, that there was none I say, that would offer himselfe, hee made his arme the safegard thereof, and his righteousnes did suftaine it. 3.14.6.

Hee putt on righteousnes for a breast-plate, and the helmet of saluation on his head, &c. 1.11.12.

And the redeemer shall come to Sion, and vnto them that turne from their wickednes in Jacob. 3.3.20.21.

My spirit which is vpon thee, and my word which I haue put in thy mouth, shall never depart out of thy mouth, neither out of the mouth of thy seed, &c. 4.1.1.5.

12 Go and erie these words towards the North, and say: thou disobedient Israel, returne faith the Lord, and I will not let my wrath fall upon you, for I am mercifull, &c. 4.1.25
4.1 O Israel, if thou returne, returne vnto me, faith the Lord: and if thou put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remoue. 2.5.10 & 3.3.6
4 Breake vp your fallow ground, and lowe not among the thornes: bee circumcised to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your hearts, ye men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, &c. 2.5.8. & 3.3.6.7. & 4.16.21
9 And in that day, faith the Lord, the heart of the king shall penf, & the heart of the princes, and the prifte shall be astonisht, and the prophetes shall woonder. 4.9.6
11 At that time shall it be said to this people, and to Jerusalem, a dreie winde in the high places of the wildernes, commeth toward the daughter of my people, &c. 1.16.7
14 O Jerusalem, washe thine heart from wickednes, &c. 2.5.8
5.3 O Lord, are not thy eies vpon the truth? thou haft striken them but they haue not forrowed: thou haft consumed them, but they haue refused to receive correction: they haue made their faces harder than a stone, and have refused to turne. 3.4.3.5. & 3.14.8
7 How should I spare thee for this? thy children haue forfaken me, and sworn by them that are no Gods, &c. 2.8.23
14 Because ye speake such words, behold, I will put my word into thy mouth, like a fire, and this people shall be as wood, and it shall deoure them. 3.24.13
6.13 For from the leaff of them, even to the greatest of them, every one is given to coutenonties: and from the Prophet euene to the Priest, they shall deal falsely. 4.9.3

16 And John sawe the spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting vpon him.
1.1.13.
4.17.21. & 4.19.20
17 And lo, a voice came from heavent saying: this is my beloved sonne, in whom I am well pleased.
2.16.11.
& 3.2.32.
8.1. & 3.24.5
4.2 And when hee had fasted fortye daies and fortye nights, he was afterward hungrie.
4.12.10
3 Then came to him the tempter, and said, if thou be the sonne of God, commaund that these stones be made bread.
3.20.46
4 Man shall not live by bread onely, but by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.
3.20.44
10 Then said Iesu vnto him, auid Satan: for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serve.
1.1.12.3
11 Then the diuell left him; and behold, the angels came and ministred vnto him.
1.14.6
17 From that time Iesu began to preach, and to saye, Amende your lives for the kingdome of heaven is at hande.
2.9.2.
3.2.
3.3.19
19 Follow me and I will make you fathers of men.
4.16.3
5.3 Blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heaven.
3.17.10
4 Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.
3.8.9
8 Blessed are the pure in hart: for they shall see God.
3.25.6
10 Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteounes sake: for theirs is the kingdome of heaven.
3.8.7
12 Reioyce and bee glad, for great is your reward in heavent, &c.
3.18.1
13 Yee are the salt of the earth, &c.
4.3.2.
4.5.14.
4.8.4
14 Yee are the light of the world, &c.
4.3.2.
& 4.5.14.
4.8.4
15 Nether doe men light a candle and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candlestick,
The Table.

Sticke, and it gie eth light vnto all that are in the house. 1.11,14

Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works & glorifie your father which is in heauen. 3.16.3

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them. 2.7.14

Whosoever therefore shall breake one of these least comandements, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heauen: but whosoever shall obserue, &c. 2.8.59

Ye haue heard, that it was saide vnto them of old time, thou shalt not kill; for whosoever killeth, shall bee culpable of judgement. 4.20.10

But I say vnto you, whosoever is angry with his brother, vndeniably shall be culpable of judgement, &c. 2.8.7 & 2.8.59

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him least, &c. 3.5.7

Verily I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou haist paid the vntermost farthing. 3.5.7 & 3.2.5.6

Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her alreadie in his hart. 2.8.7

Sware not at all neither by heauen, &c. 2.8.26 & 4.13.12

But I say vnto you, resist not euill: but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turne to him the other also. 4.20.20 & 19.4.20

Lowe your enemies: bleffe them that curse you, &c. 2.8.57 & 3.7.6 & 4.13.12

That ye may be the children of your father which is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to rise on the cuill, and on the good, &c. 3.20.15 & 3.24.16 & 3.25.9

For if you love them which love you, what rewarde shall you haue: do not the publicanes even the same? 2.8.9.8

Therefore when thou giuest thine almes, thou shalt not make a trumeter to be bloued before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets, to bee praifed of men. Verily I say vnto you, they haue their reward. 3.7.2

But when thou praifest, enter into thy chamber: and when thou haist shut the doore, pray to thy father which is in secretes, &c. 3.20.29

Also when you pray, vs no vaine repetitions as the heathen, for they think to be heard, for their much babbling. 3.20.29

After this maner therefore pray ye, Our father which art in heauen, halowed bee thy name, &c. 3.20.6 & 3.20.34

Give vs this day our daily bread. 2.5.14

And forgive vs our debts, as we also forgive our debters. 3.4.3.8 & 4.1.23

For where your treasure is, there will your hart be also. 3.2.25 & 3.18.6 & 3.2.5.1

But if thine eye be wicked, then all thy body shall bee darke: Wherefore if the light which is in thee be darke, how great is that darke? 2.3.25

Aske, and it shall be giuen you: feele, and yee shall finde: knocke, and it shall be opened vnto you. 3.20.13

If ye then which are cuill, can giue to your children good gifts, how much more shall your father which is in heauen, giue good things to them that ask him. 3.20.36

Therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should doe vnto you, even so doe ye to them. For this is the lawe and the prophets. 2.8.53

Beware of false prophets, which cometh to you in sheepe's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. 4.9.4

Then Jesu said vnto him, see thou tell no man: but goe, and shew thy selfe vnto the priest, & offer the gift that Moyses comanded, for a witneffe to them. 3.4.4

And when Jesu heard this, he maruellled, & said to them which followed him: verily I say vnto you, I haue not found so great faith euens in Israel. 3.4.13

Many shall come from the East and from the West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, and Isac and Iacob, in the kingdom of heauen. 2.10.2.3 & 4.16.13

And the children of the kinglymome shall bee cast out into vnter darke: there shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12

Then Jesu saide vnto the Centurion, goo thy waues, and as thou haist beleued, so bee it vnto thee. And his seruant was healed the same hower. 3.10.11

25 Then
Then his disciples came & awoke him, saying: maister, laue vs, we perith. 3.2.21

Ifesus the sonne of God, what haue we to doe with thee? art thou come hither to torment vs before the time? 1.14.19

And loe, they brought to him a man sicke of the palsey lying on a bed, & Isus seeing their faith, saide to the sicke of the palsey, sonne, be of good comfort: thy sinnes are forgiven thee. 3.2-13. & 3.4. 35. & 3.20.9

Certaine of the Scribes faide within themselves, this man blasphemeth. 1.13.12

For whether is it easier to say, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee, or to say, Arise and walke? 4.19.29

And that yee may know that the sonne of man hath authority to forgive sinnes in earth, (then saide he to the sicke of the palsey,) arise, take vp thy bed & goe to thy house. 1.13.12

The whole neede not a physician, but they that are sicke. 2.12.4

For I am not come to call the righteous, but the sinners to repentance. 3.3.20 & 3.1.27. & 3.14.5

Can the children of the marriage chamber mourne, as long as the bridegroom, &c. 3.3.17. & 4.12.17

Then touched he their cies, saying according to your faith, be it vnto you. 3.2.43. & 3.4.22. & 3.20.11. & 4.19.18

But the Pharisees faide, hee casteth out diuels, through the prince of diuels. 3.3.22

And Iesus went about all cities, & towne, preaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospell of the kingdome, &c. 2.9.2

And he called his twelve discipiles vnto him, and gaue them power against vn-cleane spirits, &c. 4.3.5

Go not into the way of the gentiles and into the cities of the Samaritans enter ye not. 2.11.12

Heale the sicke: clese the leapers, rais vs the dead, cast outh diuels, &c. 1.13.13

And yee shall be brought to the governours & kings for my sake, in witnessing to them and to the Gentiles. 3.4.4

For it is not yee that speake, but the spirit of your father that speake in you. 4.19.8

And feare yee not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule: but rather feare him which is able to destroy both soule & body in hell. 1.15.2 & 3.25.7

Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your father? 1.16.1 & 1.16.5. & 1.17.1

Yeare, and all the haires of your head are numbered. 1.16.2

Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows. 1.17.6

But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my father which is in heauen. 4.1.26

For this is he of whom it is written: behold, I sende my messenger before my face, which shall prepare thy way before the.

Among them which are begotten of women, arose there not a greater than John Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdome of heauen, is greater than he. 3.3.19

For all the Prophets and the law prophesied vnto John. 2.11.5.10

And thou Capernaum, which art lifted vp vnto heauen, shalt be brought downe to hell; for if the great works which have beene done in thee had beene done among them of Sodome they had remained to this day. 3.24.15

At that time Iesus answered, and said: I give thee thanks, O father, Lorde of heauen and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and men of understanding, and hast opened them vnto babes.

Neither knowest any man the father, but the sonne, and he to whom the sonne will reuale him. 3.2.34

Come vnto me all yee that be weary and laden, and I will eate you. 3.3.20. & 3.4.3. & 3.12.7. & 3.18.9

Take my yoke on you, and learne of me that I am meeke and lowly in hart and yee shall finde rest vnto your soules. 3.18.9

For
The Table.

30 For my yoke is easie, and my burden light. 5.19-3
12.24 But when the Pharisees heare it, they said, This man casteth the diuels no otherwise out, but through Beelzebub the prince of diuels. 3.22
31 Every sinne and blasphemie shall be forgiuen vnto men: but the blasphemie against the holy Ghost shall not be forgiuen vnto men. 1.13.15. & 3.3. 21. & 3.22
32 And whosoever shall speake a word against the sonne of man, it shall be forgiuen him: but whosoever shall speake against the holy Ghost it shall not be forgiuen him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. 3.5.7
41 The men of Ninine shall rifie in judgement, with this generation, and shall condemne it: for they repeate at the preaching of Jonas, &c. 3.24-15
43 Now when the vnclene spirit is gone out of the man, he walketh throughout drye places, seeking rest, and fIndeth none. 1.14.14. & 14.19
13.4 And as he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side, & the fueles came & devoured them vp, 3.22.10. & 4.14.11. & 4.17.33
5 And some fell vnpon stony ground where they had not much earth, and anon they sprong vp, because they had no depth of earth. 4.17.33
7 And some fell among thornes, and the thornes sprong vp, and choked them. 4.17.33
9 He that hath eares to heare, let him heare. 3.23.13
11 Because it is giuen vnto you, to know the secrets of the kingdom of heauen, but vnlo them it is not giuen. 1.7.5. & 3.24.13
16 But blessed are your eies, for they see: and your eares, for they heare. 2.9.1
17 Verily I say vnlo you, that many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seene them, &c. 2.11.6
19 The kingdom of heauen is like vnlo a man, which soweth good seed in his fielde. 4.1.13
29 But he saide, Nay: least whilst ye go about to gather the tares, ye plucke vp also with them the wheate. 4.12.11
31 The kingdom of heauen is like vnlo a graine of Mustard seeede, which a man taketh and soweth in the fielde. 4.19.34
33 Another Parable spake he vnlo them, saying: the kingdom of heauen is like vnlo leuens, which a woman taketh and hideth in three peckes of meale, till it be all leuened. 4.19.34
39 And the enemy which soweth them, is the diuell, &c. 1.14.15
47 The kingdom of heauen is like vnlo a net: that was cast vnlo the Sea, and gathered of all kinde. 4.1.13. & 4.16.31.
14.25 And in the fourth watch of the night, Iesus went vnlo them, walking on the Sea. 4.17.29
15.3 Why doe ye also transgrefle the commandement of God by your tradition? 4.10.10
4 For God hath commanded, saying, hony thy Father and Mother, and he that curseth Father and Mother, let him die the death. 2.8.36
8 This people draweth neere vnlo me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their hart is farre off from me. 3.10.31
9 But in vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrines, mens precepts. 4.10.15. & 4.10.23
13 Every plant which mine heauenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted vp. 2.3.9. & 3.2.12. & 3.23.1. & 3.24.6
14 Let them alone: they be the blind leaders of the blinde, and if the blind leade the blinde, both shall fall in the ditch. 19.11. & 4.9.12
24 I am not sent, but vnlo the loft shepke of the house of Israel. 2.11.12
16.6 Take heed and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, and Saducses. 4.10.16
12 Then understood they that he had not said that they should beware of the leuen of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Saducses. 4.10.16
17 Thou art Christ the Sonne of the liuing God. 4.6.6
17 Blessed art thou Simon the Sonne of Jonas, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it vnlo thee, but my Father which is in heauen. 2.2.19. & 3.1.4. & 3.2.3.4
18 And I say also vnlo thee that thou art
The Table.

Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church. 4:6.3 & 4:6.5

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose, on earth shall be loosed in heaven. 3:4.12. & 3:4.12. & 3:4.20. & 4.6. & 4:3:11. & 4:12.4

23 Get thee behind me, Satan: thou hast an offence against me, &c. 4:7.28

24 If any man will follow me, let him forsake himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. 3:7.2. & 3:8.1

27 For the Sonne of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his Angels: and then shall he give to every man according to his deeds. 3:18.1

17.2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the Sunne, and his clothes were as white as the light.

While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud shaded them: and beholde, there came a voice out of the cloud, saying: this is my wellbeloved Sonne in whom I am well pleased, hear him. 1:5.2. & 3:3.2.32. & 3:8.1. & 3:20.48. & 4.8.1. & 4:8.7

18.10 For I say unto you, that in heaven their Angels always beholde the face of my Father which is in heaven. 1:14.7. & 1:14.9

11 For the Sonne of man is come to save that which was lost. 2:12.4

If thy brother trespass against thee, goe, and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he hear thee, thou hast wonne thy brother. 4:12.3

And if he will not vouchsafe to heare him, tell it vnto the Church: and if he refuse to heare the Church also, let him be vnto thee as a heathen man, and as a publicane. 4:8.15. & 4:11.2. & 4:12.3

Verily I say vnto you, whatsoever ye bide on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. 3:4.12. & 3:4.20. & 4.1.2. & 4:2.10. & 4:8.4. & 4:12.4. & 4:12.9

Again, verily I say vnto you, that if two of you shall agree in earth vpon any thing, whatsoever they shall desire, it shall be given them of my Father which is in heaven. 3:20.30

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midstes among them. 4:1.9. & 4:6.4. & 4:9.2

If ye shall not forgive men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. 4:4.23

And his fellow therefore fell downe and befoyled him, saying, haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. 4:1.23

Wherefore they are no more twaine, but one flesh: let not man therefore put asunder that which God hath coupled together.

All men cannot receiue this saying, save them to whom it is giuen. 4:15.22

For there are some chaffe, which were borne of their Mothers belly: and there be some chaffe which be made of chaffe by men: and there be some chaffe, which haue made themselves chaffe for the kingdom of heaven, &c. 2:8.42

Then were brought vnto him little children, that he should put his hand vpon them, and pray: and the Disciples rebuked them. 4:16.7

Suffer little children to come vnto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. 4:16.7. & 4:16.17. & 4:16.26

And when hee had put his handes on them, he departed thence. 4:4.16

There is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. 1:13.13.24. & 3:18.9

Thou shalt not kill: thou shalt not commit adultery: thou shalt not steal, &c. 2:8.3.5.36.37.38.39. &c. to the end of the Chapter

Honor thy Father and thy Mother, &c. 2:8.12.35

If thou wilt be perfect, goe, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, &c. 4:1.13

And when his Disciples heard it: they were exceedingly amazed, saying, who then can be saved? 2:7.5

And let us beheld him and said vnto them: with men this is vnpossible, but with God all things are possible. 2:7.5

28 And
28 And Jefus faid vnto them, verily I faye to you : that when the fonne of man fhall sit in the throne of his maieftie, ye which followed me in the regeneration, fhall fit alfo vpon twelve thrones : and judge the twelve tribes of Ifrael. 2.16,18,3.25,10

29 And whofoever fhall forfake houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my names fake, hee fhall receive an hundred foldes more, and fhall inherit life euerlafting. 3.16

20.1 For the kingdom of heauen is like vnto a certaine housholder, which went out at the dawning of the day, to hire labourers into his vineyard. 3.18,3

25 Ye know that the Lordes of the Gentiles haue domination over them, & they that are great, exercise authority over them. 4.11.8, & 4.11.9

26 But it fhall not bee fo among you: but whofoever will beare great among you, let him be your fervant. 4.11.8

28 Even as the fonne of man came not to be ferued, but to ferue, and to give his life for the ransom of many. 2.16,5

21.9 Moreover, the people that went before, and also they that followed cried, saying: Hosanna the fonne of David: blefed be he that commeth in the name of the Lord, &c. 2.6.4

22 Whafoever ye fhall aske in praiere if ye beleue, ye fhall receiue it. 3.20.11

25 The baptism of Iohn whence was it? from heauen or of men? then they refoned among themselves faying, if we fhall fly from heauen, he will fay vnto vs, why did ye not then beare him. 4.19.5

31 Whether of them twaine did the will of the father? they finde vnto him, the firft Iefus faid vnto them, verily I fay vnto you, that the publicanes and the harlots fhall go before you into the kingdom of God. 2.8,14, & 3.7.2

22.2 The kingdom of heauen is like vnto a certaine king, which married his fonne. 3.24.8

2 Friend how cameft thou in hither, & haft not on a wedding garment? 4.17.45

13 Bind him hand and foote, take him away, and cast him into vnder darkness: there fhall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12

14 For many are called, but few are cho-"en. 3.24.6

23 The fame day the Sadduces came to him,vhich fay that there is no reftoration. 2.10.23

30 For in the resurrection, they neither ma-rie wifes, nor wifes are beftowed in marri-age, but are as the Angels of God in heau-en. 1.14.9, & 1.15.3, & 2.12.6, & 3.25.11, & 4.1.4

32 I am the God of Abraham, the God of Ifaac, and the God of Iacob: God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. 2.10.6, & 4.16.3

37 Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy foule, and with all thy mind. 2.8.11, & 2.8.15, & 3.3,11

39 And the second is like vnto this, thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy felf. 2.8.11

23.4 For they finde heauie burdens, and greuous to be borne, and lay them on mens shoulders, but they themselves will not moue them with one of their fingers. 4.10.1, & 4.10.16

8 But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your doctor to wit, Christ, and all yee are brethren. 4.8.8

9 And call no man your father vpon the earth: for there is but one, your father which is in heauen. 3.20.38

23 And ye leaxe the weightier matters of the law, as judgement, and mercy, and fidelity, thefe ought ye haue done, and not to have left the other. 2.8,52

25 Woe vnto you scribes and Pharifes, hypocrites, for yee make cleane the outer side of the cup, & of the platter, but within they are full of bibratie and exceffe. 3.4,36

37 Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killef the prophets, and floncft them which are fent to thee: how often would I haue gathered thy children togethcr, &c. 3.24,16

24.11 And many falfe prophets fhall arise and fhall deceive many. 4.9,4

14 And this Gofpel of the kingdom fhall be preached through the whole world, for a winnes vnto all nations: and then fhall the end come. 3.4,4

24 For there fhall arise falfe Chrifies, and falfe false Prophets, and shall shew great signes and wonders: so that if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect. 4

30 And then shall appear the signe of the sonne of man in heauen, and then shall all the kindreds of the earth mourn, & they shall see the son of man come in the clouds of heauen with power and great glorie. 2

36 But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the Angels of heauen, but my Father onely. 1.14.9

45 Who then is a faithful servant, and wise, whom his master hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in season? 4.16.3.1

253 The foolish took their lampes, but took no oyle with them. 3.5.7

21 Then his master saide vnto him, it is well done good servant and faithfull: thou hast been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler over much: enter into thy masters joy. 2.3.1

23 It is well done good servant and faithfull, thou hast been faithfull in little,&c. 2.3.11

29 For vnto every man that hath, it shall be given, and he shall have abundance: and from him that hath not, even that hee hast, shall be taken away. 2.3.11 and 3.1

31 And when the sonne of man commeth in his glorie, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sit vpon the throne of his glorie. 2.16.17

32 And before him shall bee gathered all nations, and he shall separate one from another, as a shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats. 2.16.17 & 3.25.9

34 Come ye blessed of my father, inherite the kingdom prepared for you from the foundations of the world. 3.18.1 & 3.18.2 & 3.18.3 & 3.24.16

35 For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I thirsted, and ye gave me drinke,&c. 3.1.8.1

40 Verily I say vnto you, in as much as ye have done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it to me. 3.18.6

41 Depart from me ye cursed, into euerla-

46 And these shal go into euerlasting paine, and the righteous into life eternall. 3.14.25.5

26.10 Why trouble yee the woman? for she hath wrought a good worke vpon me. 3.25.8

11 For ye have the poore alwayes with you, but me shal ye not haue with you alwayes. 4.3.1 & 4.17.26. & 4.17.23

12 For in that shee powred this ointment vpon my bodie, she did it to bury me. 3.25.8

15 And he saide to them, what will ye gue me, and I will deliever him vnto you? and they appointed vnto him thirtie peece vnto siluer. 4.18.14

26 And as they did eate, Iesus tooke the bread: and when hee had given thankes hee brake it, and gave it to the diyciples, and said, take, eate: this is my bodie. 4.14.20 & 4.16.30 & 4.17.1 & 4.17.20 & 4.19.23

27 Also he tooke the cup, and when he had given thankes hee gave it to them, saying, drinke ye all of it. 4.9.14

38 Then said Iesus vnto them my foule is verie heauenly euens to the death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. 2.16.12 and 8.9

39 So he went a little further, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible let this cup passe from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. 2.16.12

53 Thinkst thou that I cannot now pray to my father, and he will give me more than twelve legions of Angels. 1.14.8

74 Then began hee to curse himselfe and to sweare, saying, I know not the man. 4.1.26

75 Then Peter remembreth the words of Iesus, which said vnto him, Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice. So hee went out, and wept bitterly. 3.3.4

MARK.
1. The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the son of God. 2.9.2
4. John did baptize in the wilderness, & preached the baptism of amendment of life for remission of sins. 3.19, and 4.19.
15. And saying the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand, repent and beleue the Gospel. 3.3.19
3.15. And that they might have power to heale sickes, and to cast out duname. 1.13.13
28. Verily, I say vnto you, all sins shall be forgiven vnto you. And those whom ye shall bind on earth shall be binded in heaven. 6.18.
29. But hee that blasphemeth against the holy Ghost, shall never be forgiven, but is culpable of eternall damnation. 1.13.15 & 3.3.22
6.7. And gave them power over vncleane spirits. 1.13.13
13. And they cast out many duname, & they anointed many that were sick with oyle, and healed them. 4.19.18. & 4.19.21
7.33. Then hee tooke him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers in his ears, and did spit, & touched his toong. 4.19.23
8.38. For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words among this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, &c. 4.1.26
43. To go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched. 3.25.12
44. Where their worme dieth not, and the fire never goeth out. 3.25.12
10.9. Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate. 4.1.1
30. But he shall receive a hundred fold new, at this present: houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, & children, & lands with persecutions: and in the world to come eternall life. 3.18.3

tance for the remission of sins. 3:3:19, & 4:15.7. & 4:19.17

8 Bring forth therefore fruites woorthy the amendment of life, and begin not to say with your fathers, for I say vnto you, that God is able of these stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham. 3:3:5

14 The fouldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? and he saied vnto them, Doe violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. 4:20.12

16 John answered, and said to them all, Icinde I baptize you with water, but one stronger than I, commeth, whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he will baptize you with the holy Ghost, and with fire. 3:1.3.4. & 4:15.6.7

22 And the holy Ghost came downe in a bodily shape like a Dove, vpon him, and there was a voice from heaven, saying, thou art my beloved Son: in thee I am well pleased. 4:17.21

23 And Jesus himselfe began to bee about thirtie yeares of age, being as men supposed the sonne of Joseph, which was the son of Eli. 4:25.27.39

38 Which was the sonne of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the sonne of Adam, which was the sonne of God. 2:12.7. & 2:13.3

4:17 And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the prophet Esias: and when he had opened the booke he found the place where it was written. 4:19.23

18 The spirit of the Lord is vpon mee because he hath anointed me, that I should preach the Gospel to the poore; he hath sent me, that I should heale the broken in heart. 2:15.2. & 3:1.20. & 3:4.3

5:13 And touched him, saying, I will, be thou cleane. And immediately the leprosie departed from him. 2:15.2. & 3:3.20. & 3:4.3

14 And he commanded him that he should tell it to no man: but go, faith he, & shew thy selfe to the priest, and offer for thy cleansinge, as Moses hath commanded, for a witness vnto them. 3:3:4

34 Can ye make the children of the wedding chamber fast, as long as the bridegome is with them? 4:12.17

6:13 And when it was day, hee called his disciples, and of them hee chose twelve, which also he called Apostiles. 4:3.5

23 Reioice ye in that day, and be glad, for behold, your reward is great in heaven. 3:1.8.1

24 But woe be to you that are rich, for you have received your consolation. 3:19.9

32 Be ye mercifull therefore, as your father also is mercifull. 3:7.6

7:29 Then all the people that heard, and the publicanes satisfied God, being baptised with the baptisme of John. 3:11.3

35 But widowe is satisfied of all her children. 3:11.3

36 And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him: and he went into the Pharisees house, and sat downe at the table. 3:4.37

47 Wherefore I say vnto you, many sinnes are forgiuen her: for the loued much. To whom a little is forgiuen, hee doth loue a little. 3:4.31

8. And certain women, which were healed of cull spirits, and infirmities, as Marie which was called Magdalen, out of whom went fouen diuils. 1:14.14

7 And some fell among thornes and the thornes sprung vp with it, and choke it. 3:2.10

13 But they that are on the stones, are they which they have heard, receu the word with joy, but they have no roots, which for a while believe, but in the time of tentation go away. 3:2.10

15 But that which fell on good ground, are they which with an honest hart heare the word, and keepe it, and bring forth fruit with patience. 4:14.11

9:23 If any man will come after me, let him deny himselfe, and take vp his crosse daily and follow me. 3:1.5.8

26 For whomsoever shall bee ashamed of me, & of my words, of him shall the son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his glory, and in the glorie of the father, and of the holy Angels. 1:14.9

55 But Jesus turned about, and rebuked them, and said, ye know not what spirit ye are. 3:20.15

10:1 After these things the Lord appointed other 70. also, and sent them two and two.

4 And the Apostles said vnto the Lord, increase our faith.
7 Who is it also of you, that hauing a servant plowing or feeding cattle, woulde sawe vnto hym by and by, when hee were come from the field;
10 So likewise yee, when ye haue done all these things which are commanded you, say, yee are vnprouitable servant, we haue done that which was our dutie to do.

14 And when hee sawe them, hee faide vnto them, go shewe your selues vnto the Priests.
18.1 And he spake also a parable vnto them to this ende, that they ought alwaies to pray, and not to waxe fauent.
13 But the Publiqueane standing a farre off, woulde not lift vp so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his breast, saying: O God, be mercifull to me a sinner.
14 I tel you, this man departed to his house justified, rather than the other: for the man which exalthe himself, shall bee brought low, and he that humblyth himselfe shall be exalted.
42 And Iesus faide vnto him receve thy sight, thy faith hath saued thee.
10 17 And he faid vnto him, well, good servant because thou haft bin faithful in a very little thing, take thou authority ouer ten cities.
26 Vnto all them that haue it shall bee giuen, and from him that hath not euenc that he hath shal be taken from him.
20.27. Then came to him certaine of the Sadducess, which deme that there is any resurrection, 37 And that the dead shal be rised againe, even Moses shewed it besides the Bush, when hee faide, the Lord is the God of Abraham, and the God of Iuuat, and the God of Jacob.

34 For hee whome God hath fent, speaketh the worde of God: for God giveth him not the spirit by meafure. 2.15.1. and 2.15.5.

36 Hee that beleueth in the Sonne, hath everlasting life: and hee that obeith not the Sonne, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. 4.16.31.

4.1 Now when the Lord knewe, that the Pharifees had hearde, that Jefus made and baptised more disciples than Jofh. 4.15.

14 But whofeouer drinketh of the water that I shall giue him, shall neuer be more a thirst: but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a wel of water, springing out into everlasting life. 3.1.3.

22 Yee worship that which ye knowe not: wee worship that which wee knowe: for salvation is of the Jewes. 1.5.1. & 1.6.

& 2.6.1.

23 But the howre commeth, and now is, when the true worhippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and truth, &c. 3.20.30. & 4.10.14.

24 God is a Spirit, &c. 1.15.24.

25 I knowewell that Messiah shal be which is called Chrif: when he is come, he will tell vs all things. 2.15.1. & 4.8.

7 Behold, I fay vnto you, lift vp your eies, and looke on the regions, for they are white already vnto harueft. 4.16.31.

42 And they fliade vnto the woman, now we beleueth not because of thy faying: for we have heard him oure felves, and know that this is in deed the Chrif: that foulour of the world. 3.2.5.

53 Then the father knewe that it was the fame howre in the which Jefus had fende vnto him, his familie liuen. And he beleued, and all his houshold. 3.2.5.

5.8 Jefus fayd vnto him, take vp thy bed, and.
and walke.

17 My father worketh hitherto, & I worke.

1. 13. 7. & 1. 13. 12. & 1. 16. 4. & 2. 14. 2

38 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him: not only because he had broken the Sabbath: but saide also that God was his father, and made himselfe equall with God.

1. 13. 12

21 For like as the father raiseth vp the dead, and quickeneth them, so the sonne quickeneth whom he will.

2. 14. 3

22 For the father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgement vnto the sonne.

2. 14. 3. & 2.16. 18

23 Because that all men shoulde honour the sonne, as they honour the father: he that honoureth not the sonne, the same honoureth not the father, which hath sent him.

2. 6. 2. & 2.14. 3

34 He that heareth my word, and beleeueth in him that sent me, hath euerlafting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life.

2. 9. 3. & 3. 15. 6. & 3. 24. 5. & 3. 25. 1. & 4. 16. 6. 26

25 The hour shall come, and nowe is, when the dead shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and they that heare it, shall live.

2. 5. 19. & 2. 12. 4. & 3. 14. 5

26 For as the father hath life in himselfe, so likewise hath he given to the sonne, to have life in himselfe.

4. 17. 9

28 Maruell not at this: for the hour shall come in the which all that are in the graves, shall heare his voice.

3. 25. 4. and 3. 15. 7

29 And they shall come forth, that have done good vnto the resurrection of life: but they that have done evil, vnto the resurrection of condemnation.

3. 17. 1

32 There is another that beareth witness of me, &c.

1. 13. 17

35 He was a burning, and a shining candle: and ye would for a season have rejoiced in his light.

2. 9. 5

36 For the worke which the father hath given me to finish, the same works that I doe, beare witness of me, that the father sent me.

1. 13. 13

44 How can you belicue, which receiveth honor one of another, and seeketh not the honor that commeth of God alone?

3. 11. 9

46 For had ye beleeueth Moses, ye would have beleeueth me: for he wrote of me.

2. 9. 1

6.27 Labour not for the measse which perisheth, but for the meate that endureth vnto euerlafting life, which the sonne of man shall give vnto you, &c. 3. 18. 1.

& 4. 14. 2

29 This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue in him whom he hath sent. 3. 19. 10

35 I am the bread of life: hee that commeth to me shall not hunger, and he that beleeueth in me shall never thirst.

3. 24. 5

& 4. 17. 4

37 All that the father giueth me, shall come to me, and him that commeth to me, I cast not away.

3. 22. 7. & 5. 24. 6

38 For I came downe from heauen, not to doe mine owne will, but his will which sent me.

2. 14. 2

39 And this is the fathers will, which hath sent me: that of all which he hath giuen me, I should loose nothing, but shoulde raise it vp againe at the last day.

3. 22. 7. and 3. 22. 10. & 3. 24. 6. and 3. 24. 7. & 25. 8

40 And this is the will of him that sent me, that euerie man which seeth the sonne, and beleeueth in him should have euerlafting life, &c.

3. 22. 10. & 3. 24. 6

44 No man can come vnto me, except the father which sent me drawe him, and I will raise him vp at the last day.

2. 5. 5. & 3. 23. 4. & 3. 22. 7. & 3. 24. 1

45 It is written in the prophets, and they shall bee all taught of God. Euerie man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the father commeth vnto me.

1. 3. 10. & 2. 2. 20. & 2. 3. 7. & 2. 5. 5. & 3. 2

& 3. 24. 1. & 3. 24. 14

46 Not that any man hath seene the father, fane he which is of God, hee hath seene the father. 3. 2. 34. & 3. 22. 10. & 3. 24. 1

47 He that beleeueth in me, hath euerlafting life.

1. 13. 13

48 I am the bread of life. 3. 11. 9. & 4. 17. 4.

& 4. 15. 8

49 Your fathers did eate Manna in the wildencesse, and are dead.

2. 10. 6

50 This is the bread which commeth downe from heauen, that he which eateth of it, should not die.

2. 10. 6. & 4. 17. 34

51
I am the living bread, which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread: he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. 3.11.8. & 4.17.5. & 4.17.14

Then saith Jesus to them, verily, verily I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. 3.11.9. & 4.17.6

Who so ever eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. 3.11.9. & 4.17.34

For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. 2.17.5. & 4.17.8

He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. 4.17.5

As the living father hath sent me, so live I by the father: and he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. 1.17.5

Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it be given unto him of my father. 3.23.13

Hate not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil. 3.22.7. & 3.22.9

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. 2.8.26. & 4.8.4

Now in the last and great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried saying: If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. 1.14.14. & 3.1.2. & 3.1.3. & 4.19.6

For the holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified. 4.17.2

Then spake Jesus again to them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me, shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. 2.14.3. & 3.1.1. & 3.1.12. & 4.19.23

For I am not alone, but I and the Father, &c. 1.1.3.17

But he that receiveth me, receiveth me, and he that receive me receiveth not me, but him that sent me. 3.2.1. & 3.2.5

As he spake these things, many believed in him. 3.2.5

Then saith Jesus to the Jews, which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, ye are my disciples. 3.2.12

Verily, verily I say unto you, that whosoever commiteth sin is the servant of sin. 2.21.27

Yea are of your father the devil, and ye do the will of your father. He speaketh a lie, and his lies, ye hear. 14.15

And can it be that is of God, heareth not his words? Yea, and ye hear not. 1.34.16. & 1.14.18. & 1.14.19

He that is of God, heareth the words of God. 4.2.4

And I seeke not mine own glory, but there is a Father that judgeth me. 14.2

Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad. 2.9.1. & 2.10.4

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, nor himself, that he should die, and that they should perish, not the world. 3.2.1

And saith, Behold, the poore of Sileam (whom the Son of man shall anoint), is come unto me, and saith, There is no room for me. 4.19.18

And saith unto him, Go, wash thy self in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent). And he went his way, and was made whole. 4.19.19

And saith unto him, Go, and sin no more: for thou art a son of God. 2.28.24

Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him heareth he. 3.20.7. & 3.20.10

To him the porter openeth, and the surety heareth his voice, and he calleth his owne sheape by name, and leadeth them out. 3.24.6

And when he hath foorth his owne sheape, he goeth before them, and the sheape followeth him. 3.22.10. and 4.2.4

And they will not follow a stranger, but they flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers. 3.22.10

Then saith Jesus unto them again, verily, verily.
The Table.

44 Then he that was dead, came forth bound hand and foot with bands, and his face was bound with a napkin. Jesus said vnto them loose him, and let him go. 4.19

47 Then gathered the high priests, and the pharisees a councell, and said: what shall we do? &c. 4-9.7

12.27. Father, save me from this hour: but therefore came I vnto this hour. 2.12.4.

28 Father glorifie thy name, &c. 2.12.4

31 Nowe is the judgement of this worlde: now shall the prince of this world be cast out. 1.14.13

32 And I, if I were lift vp from the earth, wil draw all mine vnto me. 3.25.6

39 Therefore could they not believe because that Esaias faith againe. 3.24.13

41 These things said Esaias, when hee saue his glory and spake of him. 1.13.11.1.

43 For they loued the praiso of men, more than the praiso of God. 3.11.9

49 For I haue not spokeno of my selfe, &c. 4.4.

13.4 He riseth from supper, and lаith aside his upper garment, and tooke a towel, and girded himselfe. 4.19.23

15 For I haue gien you an example, that ye should do, even as I haue done to you. 3.16.2

18 I speake not of you all: I knowe whom I haue chosen, &c. 3.22.7 & 3.24.9

34 A new commandement giue I vnto you, that ye loue one another as I haue loved you, that even so ye loue one another. 3.16.2

14.1 Yee beleue in God, beleue alio also in me. 1.13.13. & 2.6.4

5 Thomas saide vnto him: Lorde we knowe not whither thou goest: howe can wee then knowe the way? 4.17.23

6 I am the way, and the truth, and the life, &c. 1.13.17. & 2.6.1. & 3.20.21. & 4.16.17

8 And Philip saide vnto him: Lorde, shew vs the father, and it sufficeth vs. 4.17.13

10 Beleueft thou not, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the worde which I spake vnto you, I spake not of my selfe: but the father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works. 2.14.2. & 4.8.13

11 Beleue
The Table.

11. Beleeue me, that I am in the father and the father in me: at the least beleeue me, for the very works sake. 2.13.13
13. And whatsoever yee aske in my name, that will I doe, that the father may be glorified in the sonne. 3.20.17
16. And I will pray the father, and he shall give you another comforter, &c. 1.13.17 & 4.8.11
17. Even the spirit of truth, whom the worlde cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but yee know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. 3.1.4 & 3.2.39
26. But the comforter, which is the holy Ghost whom the father will sende in my name, hee shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, which I have tolde you. 2.2.1 & 3.1.14 & 4.8.8 & 4.8.13
28. For my father is greater than I. 1.13.26
30. Hereafter will I not speake many things vnto you: for the prince of this worlde commeth, and he hath nought in me, 1.14.18
3.1. I am the true vine, and my father is an husbandman: every branch that beareth not fruites in me, he taketh away: and euery one that beareth fruites, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more. 2.3.9 & 2.14.3 & 4.19.34
3. Nowe are yee cleane through the worde, which I have spoken vnto you. 3.6.3
5. I am the vine, yee are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same brinketh forth much fruites: for without me, &c. 2.1.8 & 2.3.9 & 2.5.4 & 4.19.34
10. If yee shall keepe my commandements yee shall abide in my love, eueryone as I have kept my fathers commandements and abide in his love. 1.16.2
11. But I have chosen you, and ordeined you, that yee go and bring forth fruites, and that your fruites remaine, &c. 3.2.23, & 3.22.3, & 4.1.6
19. If yee were of the world, the world would love his owne: but because yee are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. 3.22.7
26. Even the spirit of truth, which proceeeth of the father, &c. 1.13.17
3. They shall excommunicate you, &c. 4.2.6
7. It is expedient for you, that I go away, &c. 1.13.26 & 2.16.14 & 3.15.3 & 4.17.26
11. Of judgement, because the prince of the world is judged. 1.14.13
12. I haue yet many things to say vnto you, but yee can not bare them away. 3.2.21 & 4.8.14
13. When he is come which is the spirit of truth, he will leade you into all truth: for he shall not speake of himselfe, but whatsoever he shall hewe, that shall he speake, &c. 1.9.1 & 3.2.4 & 4.8.8 & 4.8.13
20. Verily, verily, I say vnto you, that yee shall wepe and lament, and the worlde shall reioice: and yee shall sorrowe, but your sorrowe shall be turned to ioie. 3.8.9
24. Hitherto haue yee asked nothing in my name: aske and yee shall receive, that your ioie may be full. 3.20.17
26. In that day shall yee ask in my name, &c. 3.20.18
28. I am come out from my father, &c came into the worlde: againe, I leave the worlde, and go to my father. 4.17.26
17. And this is liffe eternall, that they know thee to be the onlye very God, and whom thou haft sent Iesus Christ. 1.13.26. & 2.6.1 & 3.2.3
5. And nowe glorifie mee, thou father with thine owne liffe, with the glorie which I had vwith thee, before the worlde was. 1.13.8 & 1.13.22 & 2.14.2
6. I haue declared thy name vnto the men which thou gauest me out of the worlde: then they were, and thou gauest them me. 3.24.1 & 3.24.6
9. I pray for them: I pray not for the world: but for them which thou haft given me, for they are thine. 3.22.7
12. While I was with them in the worlde, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gauest me, I kept, and none of them is lost, but the childes of perdition, that the scripture might be fulfilled. 3.22.7 & 3.24.6 & 7.9
15. I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the worlde: but that thou keepe them from cull. 2.5.11
19. And
The Table.

19 And for their sakes sanctifie I myself, that they also may be sanctified through thy truth. 2.13.14. & 2.15.6. & 2.17.6. and 3.11.12.

21 That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, & I in thee, even as they may be also one in vs: that the world may believe, that thou hast sent me. 3.2.24.

18 4. Then Jesus knowing all things that should be come vnto him: went foorth, and saide vnto them: whome seek ye? 2.16.5.

36 Jesus answered: my kingdom is not of this worlde, if my kingdom were of this worlde, my servants woulde surely fight, that I should not be deliuered to the Iewes: but nowe is my kingdom not from hence. 2.15.3.

37 Euereie one that is of truth, heareth my voice. 4.2.4.

38 Pilate saide vnto him, what is truth? and when hee had saide that, hee went out againe vnto the Iewes, and saide vnto them, I finde in him no caufe at all. 2.16.5.

19.30 Now when Jesus had receiued of the vineger, hee saide, it is finished, &c. 4.18.3.13.

34 But one of the souldiers, with a spear, pearfed his side, and forthwith came there out bloud and water. 4.14.22.

36 Not a bone of him shall be broken. 1.16.9.

20 8 Then went in also the other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw it, and beleuued. 3.2.4.

17 Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my father, &c. 2.12.2. & 4.17.29.

19 The same day then at night, which was the first day of the weeke, and when the doores were shut where the disciplics were assembled for feare of the Iewes, came Jesus and stode in the middes, &c. 4.17.29.

22 And when he had saide that, he breathed on them, and saide vnto them: receive the holy Ghost. 4.19.7.29

23 Whosoever sinneth ye remit, they are remitted vnto them: and whosoever sinneth ye retaine, they are retained. 3.4. 10. & 4.1.22. & 4.2.10. & 4.6.3. & 4.6.4. & 4.8.4. & 4.11.1. & 4.12.4.

28 Thou art my Lorde, and my God. 13.11.

31 But these things are written, that ye might beleue, that Jesus is Christ the sonne of God, and that in beleuynge, ye might haue life, &c. 3.2.6.

21.15 Simo sonne of Joanna, lonell thou me more than these? he saide vnto him, yea Lord, thou knowest that I love thee: he said vnto him, feede my lambs. 4.6.3.

& 4.11.1. & 4.19.28.

8 When thou wast young, thou girdedst thy selfe, & walkedst whither thou wouldest, but when thou shalt bee old, &c. 3. 8.10.

A C T E S.

13 To whom also he presented himselfe alive after that he had suffered by many infallible tokens being seen of them by the space of fortie daies, and speaking of those things which appertained to the kingdom of God. 2.16.14. & 3.25.3. & 4.17.17.

5 For John in deede baptised with water, but ye shall be baptised with the holy Ghost, within these few daies. 4.15.18.

8 But ye shall receiue power of the holy Ghost, when he shall come on you: and ye shall be witnesses vnto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and vnto the uttermost part of the earth. 4.1.2. & 4.19.28.

9 And when hee had spoken these things while they beheld, he was taken vp, for a cloude tooke him out of their sight. 2.16.

10 Beholde two men stode by them in white apparell. 1.14.6.

11 This Jesus which is taken vp from you into heaven, shall so come, as ye haue seene him goe into heaven. 1.14.6. & 2. 16.17. & 4.17.24.27.

15 And in those daies Peter stood vp in the middes of the disciplics, and saide (now the number of names that were in one place, were about an hundred and twentie) 4.3.15.

23 And they presented two, Joseph called Barsabas, whose surname was Justus, and Matthias. 4.3.15. & 4.3.14.

26 Then they gaue foorth their lots: and the the lot fell on Matthew, and he was by a common consent counted with the eleven Apostles. 4:3.15

2.3 And there appeared vnto them cloven tongues, like fire, and it sat vpon eac h of them. 4:15.8

4 And they were all filled with the holy Ghost, and beganne to speake with their tongues. 4:19.8

21 Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved. 1:13.20

23 Him, I lay, have ye taken by the hands of the wicked, being delivered by the determine counsell and foreknowledge of God, and have crucified and slaine. 1:18.23, 3.

24 Whom God hath raised vp, and loosed the sorrowes of death, because it was vnpossible, that he should be holden of it.2.26.11. & 2.16.12

33 Since then he by the right hand of God hath beene exalted, and hath received of his Father the promise of the holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and heare 2.16.15

37 Men and brethren, what shall we doe? 3:3.4. & 4.16.23

38 Amend your liues, and be baptizd every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sinnes: and ye shall receive the gift of the holy Ghost. 4:15.7. & 4:16.23.

39 For the promise is made vnto you, and your children, and to all that are far off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. 4:16.15

41 Then they that gladly receiued his word, were baptizd: and the same day, there were added to the Church about three thousand soules. 4:15.7. & 4:17.6

42 And they continued in the Apostles doctrine, and fellowship, and breaking of bread, and prayers. 4:17.5. & 4:17.35. & 4:17.44

3:6 Then saide Peter: Silver and Gold haue I none, but such as I have, that giue I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise vp and walke. 1:13.13. & 4.19.18

15 And ye killed the Lord of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses. 2:17.1

18 But those thinges which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Christ should suffer, &c.1.18.1

19 Amend your liues therefore, & turne, that your sinnes may be put away, &c.3.20

21 Whom the heauen must containe vntill the time that all thinges be restored, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Prophets, since the world began. 2.16.15. & 4.17.29

25 Ye are the children of the Prophets, and of the covenant, which God hath made vnto our Fathers, &c. 2. 10.23. & 4.16.15

26 First, vnto you God hath raised vp his Sonne Jesus, & he liehath sent to bleffe you, in turning every one of you from your iniquitie. 3:3.20

4:12 Neither is there salvation in any other: for among men there is given none other name under heauen, whereby we must be fauned. 2.16.1

23 To doe whatsoeuer thin hand and thin counsell had determined before to bee done. 1:18.1. & 1:18.3

32 And the multitude of them that beleuued, were of one hart and of one soule: &c. 4:1.3

5:4 Thou hast not lied vnto men, but vnto God. 1:13.15

16 There came also a multitude out of the Cities round about about Jerusalem, bringing sick folk, &c. and them which were vexed with unclean spirits, who were all healed. 4:19.18

29 We ought rather to obey God than men. 3:3.19

31 Him hath God lift vp with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, to gue repentance to IIsrael, and forgiuenes of sinnes. 3:2.19

41 So they departed from the councell, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for his name. 3.8.7

6:1 And in those days, as the number of the Disciples grew, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians towards the Hebrews, because that their widows were neglected in the daylie ministring. 3.2.6

2 Then the twelve called the multitude.
of the Disciples together, and said: It is not meete that we should leave the word of God to serue the tables. 3.2.6 & 4.3. & 15. & 4.11.9

3 Wherefore brethren, looke you out among you seuen men of honest report, &c.

6 And they praied, and laid their handes on them.

7 And the word of God increased and the number of the Disciples was multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, &c.

10 But they were not able to refit the wisedome, and the Spirit which he spake.

7.5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not the breadth of a foot: &c. 2. 10, 13

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yester day? 4.20.10

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of wittes in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

48 The most high dwelt not in Temples made with hands, &c. 3.20, 30. & 4.15

53 Which have receiued the law by the ordinance of Angels, and have not kept it.

1.14.9

55 But he being full of the holy Ghost, looked steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God. 3.25.3. & 4.17. 17. & 4.17.29

56 And said behold I see the heavens open, and the Sonne of Man standing at the right hand of God. 2.16.15. & 4.17.29

59 And they stoned Steuen, who called on God, and said, Lord Jesus receiue, &c. 13.1 & 1.15.2. & 3.25.6

8.13 Then Simon himselfe beleued also, and was baptised, and continued with Philip, and wondered when hee saw the signs, &c.

14 They sent vnto them Peter and John.

6.7. & 4.15.8

15 Which when they were come downe praied for them, that they might receive the holy Ghost. 4.19.6

16 For as yet he was come downe on none of them, but they were baptised onely in the name of the Lord Jesus. 4.15.6 & 19.31

17 Then laid they their handes on them, and they receiued the holy Ghost &c. 4.15.8. & 19.31

18 And when Simon saw, that through laying on of the Apostles handes, the holy Ghost was giuen, he offered them money.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickednesse, and pray God, that if it be possible, the thought of thine hart may be forgiuen thee.

27 And he arose, and went on, and beheld, a certain Aquila of Ethiopians, Ca dafes Queene of the Ethiopians chief Governour, who had the rule of all his trea sure, and came to Jerusalem to worship.

3.2.32

31 And he said how can I, except I had a guide? &c.

37 And Philip said vnto him, if thou beleuest with all thy hart, thou shalt,

4.14.8. & 4.16.23

38 And they went downe both of them into the water, both Philip and the Eu nucine, and he baptised him. 4.16.22. & 4.16.31.

9.1 And Saul yet breathing out threatenings, and slaughter against the Disciples of the Lord, &c.

3.2.6

3 Now as he journeyed, it came to passe, that as he was come neere to Damascus, sudenly there shined round about him a light from heaven.

4.17.17

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice, laying vnto him Saul, Saul, why perpe tuitest thou me? 3.25.3. & 4.17.29

6 Arise and goe into the Citie, and it shall be told thee what thou shalt doe. 4.3.3

10 And there was a certaine Disciple at Damascus named Ananias, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias, and he said, behold, I am here, Lord.

13 Lord, I haue heard by many of this man, how much euill he hath done to thy Saints at Jerusalem.

1.13.13

14 Moreover here he hath autoritie of the high Priestes, to binde all that call upon thy name.

1.13.13

15 He is a chosen vessel vnto me, &c. 4.3.5

17 Then Ananias went his way, and ented red into the house, and put his handes on him, and said, brother Saul, the Lord hath sent me (even Iesus that appeared vnto thee in the way as thou camest) that thou mightest receive thy sight, &c. 4.

19 So was Saul certaine daies with the Disciples which were at Damascus, 3.2.6
25 Then the Disciples tooke him by night, and put him through the wall, and let him downe in a basket. 3.2.6
36 There was also at Ioppa, a certaine woman, a Disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: she was full of good works and almes which she did. 3.2.6
38 Now forasmuch as Lidda was neere to Ioppa, and the Disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent vnto him two men, &c. 3.2.6
40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeléd downe and prayed, &c. 4.19.2
10.2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his houshold which gave much almes to the people, &c. 3.24.10
3 He saw in a vision evidently (about the ninth hour of the day) an Angel of God comming in to him, &c. 4.3.3
15 And it came to passe as Peter came in, that Cornelius mette him, and fell downe at his feete, and worshipped him. 1.10.3
31 And said, Cornelius thy praier is heard, and thine almes are had in remembrance in the sight of God. 3.2.32
34 Of a truth I perceive, that God is no Accepetor of persons. 3.17.4, & 3.23.10
42 And he commanded vs to preach vnto the people, and to testifie, that it is he that is ordained of God a Judge of quick and dead. 2.16.17
43 To him also gave all the Prophetes wittneffe, that through his name all that beleue in him shall receive remission of sinnes. 3.4.25, & 3.5.2
44 While Peter yet spake these words, the holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 4.16.17
48 So he commanded them to be baptised in the name of the Lord, &c. 4.15.15
11.3 Thou wentest in to men vn circumcision, and hast eaten with them. 4.6.7
4 Then Peter began, and expounded the thing in order to them. 4.6.7
15 Then I remembered the worde of the Lord, how he said John baptised with water, but you shall be baptised with the holy Ghost. 4.15.18
18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying: Then hath God alio to the Gentiles, granted repentance vnto life. 3.2.21
26 Infomuch, that the Disciples were first called Christians in Antioch, 3.2.6, & 4.16.31
29 Then the Disciples every man according to his abilitie, purpoted to send succour, &c. 3.2.6
12.15 Then said they, it is his Angel, 1.14.7
13.2 Separate me Barnabas, & Saul, for the worke wherunto I haue called the. 4.3.14
3 Then fasted they, and prayed, and laid their hands on them, and let them goe. 4.3.15, & 4.12.14, & 4.12.16
36 Howbeit, David after he had issu'd his time, by the counsel of God he slept, and was laid with his Father, and law corruption. 3.20.23
38 Be it knowne vnto you therefore men and brethren, that through this Man is preached vnto you the forgiveness of sinnes. 3.11.3, & 3.11.22
39 And from all things, from which ye could not be iustified by the law of Moses, by him euery one that beleueth, is iustified. 2.17.5, & 3.11.3
43 Which spake to them, and exhorted them to continue in the grace of God. 2.5.8
48 And when the Gentiles heard it, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained vnto eternall life beleueth. 3.2.11, & 3.14.2, 13
52 And the Disciples were filled with joy, and with the holy Ghost. 3.2.6
14.16 Who in times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne ways. 1.5.13, & 2.11.11
20 Howbeit, as the Disciples floode round about him, he arose vp, and came into the Cittie, &c. 3.2.6
22 We must through many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God. 3.8.1, & 3.18.7, & 3.18.8

Q. 19.2
23 And
The Table.

And when they had ordained them elders by election in euerie Church, & praised, and fasted: they commended them to the Lord, in whom they beleued. 4.3.7, 12.15. & 4.12.16

And when there had bene great disputition, Peter rofe vp, and laide vnto them: Ye men and brethren, ye know that a good while agoe, among vs, God chose out me, &c. 4.6.7

And he put no difference betweene vs and them after that by faith hee had purged, &c. 3.14.8. & 4.14.4

Now therefore why tempt ye God, and lay a yoke on the discipiles necks, &c. 3.2.6

But we beleue, through the grace of the Lord Iefus Christ, to be faued, even as they do. 3.5.4

But that we write vnto them, that they abstaine themselves from filthinesse of idols, and fornication, & that that is strangled, &c. 4.10.17.21

That is, that yee abstaine from things offered to idols, &c. 4.10.17

Then came he to Derbe, and to Lystra: and behold, a certaine disciple was there, named Timotheus, a women sonne, which was a Jewesse & beleued, &c. 3.2.6

Therefore Paul would that he should goe forth with him, and hee tooke and circumcised him, because of the Lewes which were in those quarters, &c. 3.19.12

And a certaine woman named Lydia, a feller of purple, of the cite of the Thayrians, which worshipped God, &c. 3.24.13

And when thee was baptised, and her household, &c. 4.16.8

And was baptised with all that belonged vnto him straight way. 4.16.8

Then saide Paul vnto them, after that they have beaten vs openly uncondemned, which are Romans, they have cast vs into prison: and now would they put vs out prudely? Nay verily: but let them come and bring vs out. 4.20.19

That they should seek the Lord, if to be they might haue groped after him, & found him, though double hee be not far from every one of vs. 1.5.3.8.13

For in him we live, and mooue, and haue our being, as also certaine of your owne poets haue said, for wee are also his generation. 1.15.5. & 1.16.14

Forasmuch then as we are the generation of God, we ought not to thinke, that the Godhead is like vnto golde, or siluer, or stone, grauen by art and the invention of man. 1.11.2

And the time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now hee admonishteth all men euery where to repent. 3.3.7

Now when they heard of the resurrection from the dead, some mocked, &c. 3.2.6

After that he had shorne his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow. 4.19.26

Strengthening all the discipiles, 3.2.6

And found certaine discipiles, and saide vnto them, &c. 3.2.6

Vnto what were yee baptised? and they said vnto Iohnes baptism. 4.15.8, 18

John verily baptised with the baptism of repentance, saying vnto the people, that they should beleue in him which should come after him, &c. 4.15.7

So when they heard it, they were baptised in the name of the Lord Iefus. 4.15.6, 8, 18

And Paul laid his hands vpon them, and the holy Ghost came vpon them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. 4.3.15

So that from his body were brought vnto the sicke kerrchises, and handkerrchises, & the diseases departed from them, and the euil spirits went out of them. 4.19.18

Then certaine of the vagabond Lewes, exorcistes, tooke in hande to name over them which had euil spirits, the name of the Lord Iefus, saying: wee adore you by Iefus, whom Paul preacheth. 4.19.24

Now after the tumult was ceased, Paul called the discipiles vnto him, and embraced them, &c. 3.2.6

But Paul went down, and laid himselfe vpon him, & embraced him, saying: trouble not your selues, for his life is in him. 19.19

Wherefore from Miletum he went to Ephesus, and called the elders of the Church 4.3.8

Ye know from the first day that I came to Asia, after what manner I haue bene with you at all seasons. 4.3.7

And
10 And how I kept backe nothing that was profitable, but haue shewed you, and taught you openly, and throughout ever ey house. 4.1.21. & 4.3-6. & 4.12. 2 1 Witting both to the Iewes and to the Grecians, the Repentance towards God, and Faith towards our Lord Iesus
Christ. 3.2.1. & 3.3-2. 25 26 Wherefore I take you to recorde this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. 4.4-3. & 4.12. 1 28 Take heed therefore vnto your selues, and to all the flocke, whereof the holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feede
the Church of God which he hath purchased with his owne blood. 2.14.2. & 3.
5.2. & 3.11.8. & 3.13.11. & 4.3.8. & 4.5.8
29 For I know this, that after my departing, shall grievous wolves enter in among you not sparing the flocke. 4.9.4 30 Moreover of your owne selues shall men arise speaking peruerse things to draw Disciples after them. 4.9.4 31 Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three yeres I ceased not towarne euery one night and day with tears. 4.3.6
36 And when he had thus spoken, he knee-ked downe, and prayed with them all. 4.
19.2
21.4 And when we had found Disciples, we tarried there seven daies. 3.2.6 22.1 Ye men, brethren, and Fathers, heare
my defence now towards you. 3.20.19 16 Arise and be baptised, and waft away thy finnes, in calling on the name of the Lord. 4.15 15
18 And I saw him sauing vnto me: make hast and get thee quickly out of Ierusalem, for they will not receive thy witnes concerning me. 4.17.17.25
25 And as they bound him with tongues, Paul said vnto the Centurion that stood by, is it lawfull for you to scourge one that is a Romaine, and not condemned?
4.20.19
23.1 And Paul beheld earnestly the coun-cell, and said: Men and brethren, I haue in all good conscience setted God vntill
this day. 3.17.14
8 For the Sadduces said, that there is no
Resurrection, neither Angell, nor Spirit,
&c. 1.14.9. & 1.15.2. & 2.10. 23. & 3.25.5 12 And when the day was come, certaine of the Iewes made an assembly, & bound them selues with an oath, saying, that they would neither eate nor drinke, till they had killed Paul. 4.13.3 24-12 And they neither found me in the Temple disputing with any man neither making vp more among the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city. 4.20.19 15 And haue hope towards God, that the Resurrection of the deade which they themselves looke for also, shall be both of Iust and vnust. 3.25.9 16 And herein I endeavoure my selve to have alway a cleare confidence towards God, and towards men. 3.19.16. & 4.
10.4
25.10 Then said Paul: I stand at Cefars judgement seate, where I ought to bee judged: To the Iewes I haue done no wrong, as thou very well knowest. 4.20.19 11 For if I haue done wrong, or committed any thing woorthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof they accuse me, no man can deliuere me vnto them: I appeal vnto
Cefar. 4.20.19
26.17 Deliuering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, vnto whom now
I find thee. 3.2.1
18 To open their eyes, that they may tune from darkenesse to light, and from the power of Satan vnto God that they may receive forgiveness of finnes, and inher-itage among them, which are sanctified
by Faith in me. 3.2.1 20 But shewed first vnto them of Damascus, and at Ierusalem, and throughout all the cost of Iudea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent, and tune to God, and doe worke worthy amendment of life. 3.3.5
28.15 And from thence when the brethren heard of vs they came to meete vs.
4.6.17
16 So when we came to Rome, the Cen-turion deliuered the prifoners to the Generall Captaine, &c. 4.6.15 25 Well spake the holy Ghost by Efaias
the Prophet, vnto our Fathers. 1.13.15 Romans.
The Table.

1. For as many as have sinned without the law, shall perish also without the law, & as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law. 2.2.22

2. For the hearers of the law are not righteous before God: but the doers of the law shall be justified. 3.11.15 & 3.17.13

3. For when the Gentiles which have not the law, doe by nature the things contained in the law, they having not the law, &c. 2.2.22

4. Which shew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their confessions also bearing them witness, and thoughts accruing one another, &c. 3.19.15 & 4.10.3

5. If thou be a transgressor of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision. 4.14.24

6. Yea, let God be true, and every man a liar, &c. 4.15.17

7. What then? are we more excellent? no, in no wise, for we have already praised, that all, both Jews and Gentiles are vnder sinne. 3.4.6

8. As it is written: there is none righteous, no not one. 2.1.9 & 2.3.2 & 2.5.2

9. There is none that doth good, no not one. 2.3.3

10. Their feet are swift to shed blood, &c. 2.3.3

11. Now we know, that whatsoever the law faith, it faith it to the that be vnder the law, that every mouth may be stopped, & all the world be culpable before God. 2.7.8 & 2.10.3 & 3.4.6

12. Therefore by the words of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight: For by the law came the knowledge of sinne. 2.5.6 & 2.7.7 & 3.11.19

13. But now is the righteousness of God made manifest without the law, having witnesses of the law, and of the Prophets. 2.9.4 & 2.10.3 & 3.11.18.19

14. And are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. 2.5.3 & 2.16.5 & 2.17.5 & 3.4.30 & 3.11.4.19 & 3.15.6 & 3.20.45

15. Whom God hath set forth to be a reconciliator through Faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness by the forgiveness of the sins that are past, through the patience of God. 4.15.3

To
26 To shew at this time his righteousness, that he might be just, and a justifier of him which is of the faith of Jesus. 3.11.12. & 3.13.1. & 3.13.2. & 3.14.17

27 Where is then thy rejoicing? It is excluded. By what law of works are you? But by the law of faith. 3.11.13. & 3.11.18

4.2 For if Abraham were justified by works, he had wherein to rejoice, but not with God. 3.11.13. & 3.11.18

3 Abraham beleued God, & it was counted to him for righteousness. 3.17.8.10

4 Now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by favour, but by debt. 3.11.11

5 But to him that worketh not, but belieueth in him that faitheth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. 3.11.6

6 Even as David declareth the blessednes of the man, vnto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying: 2.17.5. & 3.11.4. & 2.10.22

7 Blessed are they whose iniquities are for-given, and whose fins are covered. 3.11.10

10 How was it then imputed when he was circumsiced, or vncircumsiced? &c. 4.4.16.3

11 After he receiued the signe of circumsic- sion, as the seale of the righteousness of the faith which he had, when hee was vn- circumsiced, &c. 4.14.5. 21.23. & 4.16.20

12 And the father of circumcision, not vnto them onely which are of the circumcision, &c. 4.16.12

13 For the promise that hee should be the heire of the world, was not giuen to Abraham, or to his feeede, through the lawe, but through the righteousness of faith. 3.14.11

14 For if they which are of the lawe, bee heires, faith is made voide, & the promise is made of none effect. 3.11.11. & 3.13.3

15 For the lawe causeth wrath: for where no lawe is there is no trangres- sion. 2.7.7. & 3.11.19

16 As it is written: I haue made thee a father of many nations, even before God whom he beleued, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which bee not as though they were. 2.10.11. & 3.2.15. & 3.14.5

21 And being full certified that what he had promised he was able also to performe. 3.2.5

25 Who was delivered to death for our sins, and is risen againe for our justification. 2.16.5. & 2.16.13. & 2.17.5

5.1 Then being justified by faith, we have peace toward God through our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.16. & 3.13.5

3 Knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience, &c. 3.8.3

5 And hope maketh not ashamed, because the loue of God is shed abroad in our hart by the holy Ghost, which is givne vnto vs. 3.12.2. & 3.12.12

8 But God setteth out his loue toward vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. 2.1.4. & 2.16.4. & 3.4.25

9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, wee shall bee saued from wrath through him. 2.16.5

10 For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his son, much more being reconciled, we shall bee saued by his life. 2.16.2.4.5. & 2.17.3.6. & 3.11.2.1. & 3.14.6

12 As by one man sin entred into the world, and death by sin, & so death entred into all men, forasmuch as all men haue sinned. 2.1.6.8. & 2.13.4

15 But yet the gift is not so as is the offence: for if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, & the gifts of grace, which by one man Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.4

16 Neither is the gift so, as that which entred in by one that sinned: for the faulte came of one offence vnto condemnation, but the gift is of many offences to justification. 2.17.3

19 For as by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many also be made righteous. 2.1.4. & 2.16.5. & 2.17.3. & 3.11.4.9.12.23. & 4.14.21

20 Moreover, the law entred therupon, that that offence should abound: nevertheles, where sin abounded, there grace abounded much more. 2.5.6. & 2.7.7
The Table.

6.3 Know ye not, that all we which have been baptised into Jesus Christ have bin baptised into his death? 4.15.5
4 We are buried then with him in baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised vp from the dead by the glory of the father, so wee also should walke in newenes of life. 2.16.17.13 & 3.3.5 & 4.16.16.21 & 4.19.3
6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that hence forth we should not serve sin. 3.3.9.11
12 Let not sinne therefore reign in your mortall body, that ye should obey it in the lustes thereof. 3.13
14 For sinne shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not vnder the law, but vnder grace. 3.19.6 & 4.15.12
18 Being then made free from sinne, ye are made the seruants of righteousnes. 3.6 & 3.16.2
19 I speak after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh, for as ye haue given your members seruants to vncleanneffe, and to iniquitie, to commit iniquity, &c. 2.24.16 & 3.25.8
2 For the wages of sinne is death: but the gift of God is eternall life through Jesus Christ our Lord. 2.8.5.9 & 3.4.28.
7.1 Know ye not brethren, for I speake to them that know the law, that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liueth? 4.15.12
7 What shall we say then? is the law sin? God forbid, Nay I know not sinne by the law; &c. 2.5.6 & 2.7.6
12 Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandement is holy, and just and good, 2.9.4
14 For we know that the law is spiritual, &c. 2.8.6
15 For I allow not that which I doe: for what I would that doe I not, but what I hate, that do I. 2.2.27
18 For I know, that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, &c. 2.1.9
19 For I doe not the good thing, which I would, but the evil, which I would not, that do I. 2.2.27 & 3.3.11
20 Now if I doe that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but the sinne that dwelleth in me. 2.2.27
23 But I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captive into the law of sinne, which is in my members. 3.3.14
24 O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 3.9.4 & 3.11.11 & 4.15.12
8.1 Now then there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, which walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit. 3.4.8 & 4.15.12
3 For that that was impossible to the law, in as much as it was weake because of the flesh, God sending his owne sonne, in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sin, condemned sinne in the flesh. 2.7.5 & 2.14.4 & 4.13.14 & 2.16.6 & 3.2.2 & 3.4.27 & 3.11.23
6 For the wisedome of the flesh is death: but the wisedome of the spirit is life and peace. 2.3.1
7 Because the wisedome of the flesh is enimie against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither in deed can be. 1.9 & 3.3.8 & 3.20.24
9 Now ye are not in the flesh but in the spirit, because the spirit of God dwelleth in you: but if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his. 3.1.2 & 3.2.39 & 4.17.12
10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sinne: but the spirit is life for righteousnes sake. 2.1.6 & 3.1.3 & 3.2.24 & 3.25.3 & 4.17.12
11 But if the spirit of him that raised vp Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, hee that raised vp Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortall bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you. 1.13.18 & 3.1.2 & 3.2.39 & 3.25.3 & 4.17.12
14 For as many as are lead by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. 3.2.39
15 For ye haue not receiued the spirit of bondage, to feare againe: but ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption, &c. 2.11.9 & 2.14.5 & 3.1.3 & 3.2.2.11 & 3.13.5 & 3.20.1 & 3.24.1 & 4.19.22
16 The same spiritu beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.
The Table.

3.2.39 Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednes, or peril, or sword? 3.13.5. & 3.2.28.

3.2.39 Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednes, or peril, or sword? 3.13.5. & 3.2.28.

36 For thy sake we killed all the day long, we are counted as shepe for the slaughter. 3.9.6. & 3.25.3. & 3.14.19

38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, 3.2.16. & 3.2.40. & 3.15.8. & 3.24.6

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor anie other creature shall bee able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. 3.2.16. 28.

92 For I would wish my selfe to bee separated from Christ, for my brethren that are my kinckmen according to the flesh, 3.20.

35 Of whom are the fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is God over all blessed for euer, Amen.1.13. 11 & 2.13. 1.3. & 2.14.6

6 For all they are not Israelites, which are of Israel 3.22.4 & 4.2.3

7 Neither are they all children, because they are the seed of Abraham: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. 3.21.7. & 4.16.14

8 That is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are accounted for the seed. 3.2.17

11 For ere the children were borne, and when they had done neither good nor eueil, that the purpose of God might remaine according to the election, not by workes, but by him that calleth. 3.22.4

12 It was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger. 3.2.25

13 As it is written, I have loved Leobs, and haue hated Eisim. 3.2.17. & 3.2.11

14 What shall wee say then? is there unrighteousnes with God? God forbid. 3.22.8

15 I will haue mercie on him to whom I will shew mercie: and I will haue compassion on him to whom I will haue compassion. 3.22.6

16 So then it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth
The Table.

sheweth mercy. 2.5.4.17. & 3.24.1

17 For this same purpose have I shewed thee vp, that I might shew my power in thee, &c. 3.24.14

18 Therefore he hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. 1.18.2. & 3.12.11

20 But, O man, who art thou that pleadest against God? &c. 3.23.1,4. & 3.24.16

21 Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the same lump, &c. 3.17.5

22 What and if God would, to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, suffer with long patience the vessels of wrath? &c. 1.14.18. & 3.23.1

24 Even vs, whom he hath called, not of the Jewes onely, but also of the Gentiles, 3.24.16

32 For they have stumbled at the stumbling stone.

33 Behold, I lay in Sion, a stumbling stone, and a rocke of offence. 1.10.11. And whosoever believeth on him, shall not be confounded. 1.13.13

10.3 For they being ignorant of the righteousnesse of God, and going about to establish their owne righteousness, &c. 3.11.13

4 For Christ is the ende of the lawe, for righteousness vnto every one that believeth. 1.6.2. & 2.6.4. & 2.7.2. & 3.2.6. & 4.8.13

5 That the man that doth these things shal live thereby. 3.11.14. & 3.17.3

6 But the righteousness of Faith speaketh on this wise: Say not in thy hart, who shall ascend into heauen? &c. 1.17.2

7 Or, who shall descend into the deep? that is, to bring Christ againe from the dead. 1.17.2

8 This is the worde of Faith which wee preach. 2.5.12. & 3.2.29.30. & 4.14.14

9 For if thou that confest with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and shalt believe in, &c.

3.11.14

10 For with the hart, man beleueth vnto righteousness, and with the mouth man confesseth to salvation. 3.2.2.8

11 Whosoever believeth in him, shall not be ashamed. 1.13.13

14 But how that they call on him, in whom they have not beleued, &c. 3.20.1,11

17 Then Faith is by hearing, and hearing, &c. 3.20.27. & 4.1.5. & 4.6.3. & 4.8.

9. & 4.16.19

11.2 God hath not cast away his people which he knew before, &c. 3.22.6

4 But what faith the anfwere of God to him? I have referred vnto my selfe, seven thousand men, which haue not bowed the knee to Baal. 4.1.2

5 Even so then at this present time, is there a remnant, through the election of grace. 3.21.1

6 And if it be of grace, it is no more of works: or else were grace no more grace, &c. 3.14.5

16 For if the first fruittes be holy, so is the whole lump, and if the roote be holy, so are the branches. 4.16.15

17 And though some of the branches be broken off, and thou being a wilde Olive tree, waft graft in for them, and made partaker of the roote, and fatnesse of the Olive tree. 3.1.1

20 Well, through vnbeliefe they are broken off, and thou standing by Faith, be not high minded, but feare. 2.3.22. & 3.24.6

26 And fo all Israel shall be sueued, as it is written: The duncleru shall come out of Sion, and shall turne away the vngodlines from Iacob. 3.3.21

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. 4.16.14

32 For God hath shewed all in vnbeliefe, that he might shew mercy on all. 2.7.8. & 3.23.11. & 3.24.16

33 O the deepnes of the riches both of the wisedome and knowledge of God: how vnsearchable are his judgemenetes, & his waies past finding out? 1.17.2. & 3.23.3

34 For who hath knowne the mind of the Lord? or who was his counsellor? &c. 3.1.

2.34. & 4.18.19. & 4.19.2

35 Or who hath given vnto him first, and he shall be recompensed? 3.14.5. & 3.22.3. & 3.23.11

36 For of him, and through him, and for him, are all things, &c. 2.8.13

12.1 I beseech you therefore brethern, by the mercies of God, that ye giue vp your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God which is your reasonable seruice of God. 3.7.1. & 3.16.3. & 4.18.16

2 And
And fashion not your felues like vnto this world, but be ye changed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prooue what is the will of God, good, and acceptable, and perfect. 2.1.9. & 4.16.4

As God hath dealt to euerie man the measure of faith 4.13.3, & 4.16.4, & 4.17.32

For as we haue many members in one body, & all members have not one office. 3.16.2

Whether we haue prophecie, let vs prophesie according to the proportion of our faith. 4.16.4, & 4.17.32

Or an office, let vs waie on the office, or he that teacheth, on teaching. 4.3.8

Or hee that extorteth on exhortation: hee that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicitie: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that weth mercie, with chearfulnesse. 4.3, 8, 9, & 4.11.1, & 4.20.4

Be afficted to love one another with brotherly loue: in giving honor, goe one before another. 3.7 4

Blesse them that persecute you: blesse I say, and curse not. 4.20.20

Deeily beloved, auenge not your felues, but giue place vnto wrath: for it is written: Vengeance is mine I will repay, faith the Lord. 4.20.19

Be not overcome of cuil, but overcome cuil with goodnes. 4.20.20

Let euerie soule be subject vnto the higher powers: for there is no power but of God: and the powers are ordained of God. 3.19.15, & 4.10.3, 5, & 4.20.7, 23

For hee is the minister of God for thy wealth: but if thou do cuil, scare: for he beareth not the sword for noough, for hee is the minister of God, to take vengeance on him that doth cuil 4.20.10, & 4.20.17, & 4.20.19

Wherefore ye muft see be subiect, not because of wrath onely, but also for conscience sake. 3.19.15, & 4.10.3, & 4.29.22

For, for this cause ye pay also tribute: for they are Gods ministers, applying themselves for the same thing. 4.10.13

Oue nothing to any man, but to loue one another: for he that loueth another, hath fulfilled the law. 2.8.53

For this, thou shalt not commit adultererie, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bære false witnoufe, thou shalt not covet: and if there be any other commandement, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy felue. 2.8, 5

But put ye on the Lord Iefus Chrift, and take no thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lustes of it. 3.1.1, & 3.10.3

Him that is weake in the faith, receive vnto you, but not for controversyes of disputations. 3.19.11

This man esteemeth one day above another day, & an other man counteth euerie day alike: let euery man be fully perswaded in his minde. 2.8.33

For we shal al appeare before the judgment seat of Chrift. 1,13.11, & 3.5, 8

For it is written I houe, saie the Lord: And euerie knee shall bow to me, and all tongues shall confess vnto God. 1.13.11, 23. & 3.2.5, 7

Let vs therefore judge one another any more: but vs your judgemenrather in this, that no man put an occasion to fal, or a stumbling blocke his brother. 3.19.11

I know, and am perswaded through the Lord Iefus, that there is nothing vnuean of it selfe: but vnto him that judgeth any thing to be vneclean, to him it is vneclean. 3.19.8

For the kingdom of God is not meate and drinke: but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost. 2.15.4

Hast thou faith? haue it with thy selfe before God: blesse is hee that condemneth not humselfe in that thing which he allowed. 3.19.8

For he that doubteth is condemned if hee este, because he eateth not of faith: & whatsoever is not of faith is sin. 3.5.10, & 3.15 6, & 4.13.17, & 4.15.2

We which are strong, ought to bære the infirmities of the weake and not to please our selues. 3.19.11

Now the God of patience and consolation, graunt that you be like minded one towards another, according to Christ Iefus. 4.2.5

That ye with one minde and with one mouth mouth may praise God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. 3:20.29.31 8 Now I say, that Jesus Christ was a Minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the Fathers. 3:2.32. & 4:16.15
12 There shall be a roote of Ieffe, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust. 1:13.13
19 So that from Jerusalem, and round about Tyre, I have caused to abound the Gospel of Christ. 4:3.4
20 Yea, lo I enforced my selfe to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, &c. 4:3.4
25 But now go I to Jerusalem, to minister vnto the Saints. 4:6.14
30 Also brethren, I beseech you for our Lord Ieffus Christes sake, and for the loue of the Spirite that yee would strive with me by prayers to God for me. 3:20.20
16,3 Greet Prisilla and Aquila my fellow helpers in Christ Ieffus, 4:6.14
7 Salute Andronicus and Iunia my Cousins and fellow prisoners which are notable among the Apostles, and were in Christ before me. 4:3.5
20 The God of peace shall tread Satan vnder your feete shortly. 1:14.18. & 3.15.5
25 By the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began. 2:9.4
26 But now is opened, and published among all nations by the Scriptures of the Prophetes, &c. 2:9.4

1. CORINTHIANS.

1:1 Paul called to be an Apostle of Ieffus Christ, through the will of God, and our brother Sopham. 4:3.10
3 Grace be with you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Ieffus Christ. 1:13.13
9 God is faithful by whom ye are called vnto the fellowship of his Sonne Ieffus Christ, &c. 3:5.5
11 For it hath beene declared vnto me my brethren, of you by them that are of the houle of Cloe, that there are contentions among you. 4:1.14
12 Now this I say, that every one of you sayeth, I am Paul, &c. 4:13.14
13 Is Christ deadened? was Paul crucified for you? Either were ye baptised into the name of Paul? 3:5.2. & 4:15.13
20 Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? &c. 2:20.20
21 For seeing the worldyling with wisedome knew not God in the wisedome of God, it pleased God by the foolishnes of preaching to save them that beleeue. 2:6.1
23 But we preach Christ crucified vnto the Iewes, even a stumbling blocke and vnto the Grecians, foolishnes. 3:24.14
26 For brethren, you see your calling how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. 3:23.10
30 But ye are of him in Christ Ieffus who of God is made vnto vs wisedome and righteousnes, and sanctification, &c. 2.15.2. & 2.16.19. & 3.3.19. & 3.4.30. & 3.11.6.12. & 3.14.27. & 3.15.5. & 3.16.1
2.2 For I esteemed not to know any thing among you, save Ieffus Christ, and him crucified. 1:13.15. & 2:12.45. & 2:15.2. & 3.2.1
4 Neither stood my word and my preaching in the ensign speech of mans wisedome, but in plaine evidence of the Spirite. 1:8.1. & 4:1.6. & 4.14.11
5 That your Faith should not be in the wisedome of men, but in the power of God. 3:2.25
8 Which none of the Princes of this world hath known, for had they known, &c. 1:5.12. & 2.14.2. & 4.17.30
10 But God hath revealed them vnto by the Spirite: for the Spirite searcheth all things, yea the deepe things of God. 1:13.14. & 3.2.34
11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, faue the spirite of a man which is in him, even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirite of God. 3:2.34
12 Now we have receiued not the Spirite of the world, but the Spirite which is of God, that we might know the things that are given to vs of God. 3:2.39. & 4.8.11

13 Comparing
Comparing 3. 4, 1

3.2 I give you milk to drink, and not meat: for ye were not able to bear it: neither yet now are ye able. 3.19.13

For who hath known the minde of the Lorde, that hee might instruct him? but we have the minde of Christ. 1.13.14. & 3.13.4

For when one faitheth, I am Paulus, another, I am Appollos, are ye not carnall? 4.4.3. & 13.14

6 And every man shall receive his wages according to his labour. 3.16.3. & 3.18.1

9 For we together are Gods labourers, ye are Gods husbandry, and Gods building. 2.5.17. & 4.1.6

11 For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laide, which is Jesus Christ. 3.15.5. & 4.6.6

12 And if any man build on this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, timber, hay, or stubble. 3.5.9

13 Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it because it shall be revealed by the fire, &c. 3.5.9

14 If any man's work that he hath built upon, abide, he shall receive wages. 3.5.9

15 If any man's work burne, he shall lose, but he shall be saved himselfe: yet as it were by the fire, 3.5.9

16 Knowe yee not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? 1.3.15. & 3.6.3. & 3.16.2. and 2.5.7. & 4.3.1

19 For the wisdome of this world is foolishness with God: for it is written, Hee catcheth the wife in their owne craftiness. 2.5.7. & 2.2.20

21 Therefore let no man rejoice in men: for all things are yours. 4.19.1

4.16 Let a man ffo thinke of vs, as of the ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God. 4.3.6. & 4.8.1

For I knowe nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iudged: but he that iudgeth me, is the Lord. 3.12.2. & 3.17.14

5 Therefore judge nothing before the time, vntil the Lord come, who will lighth ten things that are hid in darkness, and make the counsels of the hart manifest, &c. 3.2.4

7 For who separateth thee? and what hast thou, that thou hast not received? if thou hast received it, why receiues thou, as though thou hadst not received it? 2.5.2 & 3.7.4. & 3.24.12

1.5 For in Christ Jesus I haue begotten you through the Gospel. 4.1.6

5.1 It is heard certainly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, &c. 4.1.14

2 And ye are puffed vp, and haue not rather sorrowed, that hee which hath done this deed, might bee put from among you. 4.1.15

4 When ye are gathered together, and my spirtu, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that, such a one I say, by the power of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 4.11.

7 Be deliuered vnto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be sauid in the day of the Lord Iesus. 4.12.5.6

6 Knowe ye not that a little leaue hath leane neth the whole lump? 4.1.2.5

7 For Christ our pasccouer is sacrificed for vs. 4.11.13. & 4.18.3

11 If any that is called a brother, bee a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioneer, with such a one eate not. 4.1.15 & 4.1.2.5

12 For what haue I to doe, to judge them also, which are without? doe ye not judge them that are within? 4.1.15

6.6 But a brother goeth to law with a brother, and that vnder the infidels. 4.20.21

7 Now
The Table.

7 Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to lawe, one with another. 4.1.14
9 Know ye not that the vnrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? &c. 3.4. 21. & 3.4. 10
10 Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggeryers, nor theues, nor contumacious, nor drunkards, nor rakers, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God. 3.4. 21.
12 Meates are ordained for the belly, and the belly for the meates: but God shall destroy both it, and them, &c. 3. 25. 8. & 4. 13. 9. & 4. 19. 7
15 Know ye not, that your bodies are members of Christ? &c. 3. 6. 3. & 3. 25. 8. & 4. 17. 9
19 Know ye not, that your body is the temple of the holy Ghost which is in you, whom ye have of God? &c. 1. 13. 1. 5. & 3. 3. 9. & 3. 25. 7. & 3. 25. 8. & 4. 3. 1
20 For ye are bought for a price: therefore glorifie God in your body, & in your spirit: for they are Gods. 2. 17. 5. & 3. 25. 7
2. 7. 2. Neuerthelesse, to adioide fornication, let euery man have his wife, and let euery woman have her owne husband. 2. 8.
3 Let the husband be giue vnto the wife due beneuolence, and likewise also the wife vnto the husband. 4. 3
5 Deceit not one another, except it bee with consent for a time, that ye may giue your selues to fasting, and prayer: and againe come together that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. 4. 12. 16
7 I would that all men were euens as I my selfe am: but euery man hath his proper gift of God, one after this maner, and an other after that. 2. 8. 42
9 But if they cannot abstaine, let them marie: for it is better to marie than to burne. 2. 8. 43. & 4. 13. 17
14 For the vnbeleauing husband is sanctified by the wife, and the vnbeleauing wife is sanctified by the husband, else were your children vnbeauine: but now are they holy. 2. 1. 7. & 4. 1. 6. 6. & 4. 16. 15. & 4. 16. 31
19 Circumcision is nothing: and vncircumcision is nothing: but the keeping of the commandments of God. 4. 14. 24
21 Art thou called being a sterue? care not for it: but if yet thou maist be free, vse it rather. 4. 20. 1
23 Ye are bought with price: bee not steruants of men. 4. 20. 32
31 And they that vse this world, as though they vscd it not: for the fashion of this world goeth away. 3. 10. 1. 4. & 4. 19. 7
34 The vnmaried woman carethe for the things of the Lord, that the may be holy both in body and in spirit, &c. 3. 10. 1. 4. & 4. 19. 7
35 And this I speake, for your owne commodities, not to tangle you in a snare. 4.
8. 1. And as touching things sacrified vnto idols, we know, that we have knowledge, &c. 4. 10. 22
4 For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven, or in earth, &c. 1. 11
6 Yet vnto vs there is but one God, which is the father, of whom are all things, and we in him: and one Lorde Jesus Christ, &c. 1. 13. 1. 1. & 2. 3. 6. & 2. 14. 3. and 2.
1. 15. 5
9 But take heed lest by any means this power of yours be an occasion of falling to them that are weake. 3. 19. 11. and 4. 10.
2 For ye are the seal of my Apostleship in the Lord. 4. 1. 6
5 Or haue we not power to lead about a wife being a sister, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? 4. 12. 25
12 Neuerthelesse, we have not vsed this power but suffer all things, that wee should not hinder the gospel of Christ. 3. 4. 1. 5
16 And woe is vnto me, If I preach not the gospel. 4. 5. 6
19 For though I bee free from all men, yet haue
The Table.

haue I made my self servant vnto all men, that I might win the more.
20 And vnto the Iewes I became as a lew, that I might win the Iewes, &c.
22 To the weake I became as weake, that I may win the weake: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all meanes saue some.
10.1 Moreover, brethren I would not that ye should be ignorant, that all our fathers were vnder the cloude, and all passe through the sea.
2 And were all baptised vnto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea.
3 And did all eate the fame spiritual meat
4 And did all drinke the same spiritual drinke, for they dranke of the spiritual rocke that followed them: and the rocke was Christ.
5 But with many of them God was not pleased: for they were ouerthrown in the wildernes.
11 And all these thinges came vnto them for enamples, and were written to admonish vs vpon whom the ends of the world are come.
12 Wherefore let him that thinketh hee standeth take heed least he fall.
13 There hath no tentation taken you but such as appeareth to man, &c.
16 The cup of blessing which we blessed, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? the bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?
17 For we are many, are one bread and one bodie, because we all are partakers of one bread.
21 All things are lawfull for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawfull for me, but all things edifie not.
25 Whatsoever is solde in the shambles, eate ye, and ask no question for conscience sake.
28 But if any man say vnto you, this is sacrificed vnto idols, eate it not because of him that shewed it, and for thy conscience &c.
29 And the conscience I say not thine but of that other, &c.
31 Whether therefore ye eate or drinke, or what sooeuer ye do, do all to the glory of God.
32 Gieue none offence, neither to the Iewes nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church of God, 11.4 Euerie man praying or prophecyng having any thing on his head dishonoureth his head.
7 For a man ought not to couer his head: forasmuch as he is the image and glorie of God: but the woman is the glorie of the man.
16 But if any man lust to be contentious, we have no such custome, neither the Churches of God.
20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eate the Lordes supper.
22 Haue ye not houses to eate and drinke in? despite yee the Church of God? &c.
23 For I haue receiued of the Lord that which I also deliuered vnto you, &c.
24 And when hee had given thanks hee brake it, & said, takke, eate, this is my body, which is broken for you: this doe you in remembrance of me.
25 After the same manner also hee tooke the cup, when he hadFliped, saying this is the new Testament in my blood, &c.
26 For as often as ye shall eate this bread & drinke this cup, ye shewe the Lordes death untill he come.
28 Let a man therefore examine himselfe, and so let him eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup.
29 For he that eatheth & drinketh unworthily, eatheth and drinketh his owne damnation, becaus hee doeth not the Lords body.
31 For if we would judge our selues we should not be judged.
The Table.

32 But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world. 3.4.

12.3 Wherefore, I declare unto you, that no man speaking by the spirit of God calleth Jesus execrable, &c. 2.2.20

6 And there are diversities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all. 2.3.6.9

8 For to one is given by the spirit, the word of wisdom; and to another the word of knowledge, by the same spirit. 4.3.11

10 And to another diversities of tongues, and to another the interpretation of tongues. 1.13.14 & 3.2.9

11 And all these things worketh even the selfe same spirit, distributing to every man severally as hee will. 1.13.14. and 4.1.3.3

12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body which is one, though they be many yet are but one body: even so is Christ. 1.1.3.16 & 3.7.5 & 3.16.2 & 4.17.2.2

13 For by one spirit are we all baptiz'd into one body, whether we be Jews or Grecians, &c. 4.2.4.7. and 4.11.15. and 4.16.12

15 Least there should bee any division in the body: but that the members should have the same care one for another. 3.2.20.20

18 And God hath ordained some in the Church, as first Apostles, secondly prophets,thirdly teachers, then them that do miracles: after that the gifts of healing, helpers, &c. 4.3.8 & 4.11.1 & 4.20.4

31 But desire you the best gifts, and I will yet shew you a more excellent way. 3.2.9

13.1 Though I speake with the toonges of men and Angells, and have not loue, I am as sounding brass, or a tinkling Cymball. 2.5.4

2 If I had al faith, so that I could remooe mountaines, and had not loue, I were nothing. 3.1.8.8

3 And though I feede the poor with all my goodes, and though I give my body that I bee burned, and have not loue, it profitteth me nothing. 4.13.13

4 Loue suffereth long: it is bountifull: loue envieth not: loue doth not boast it selfe: it is not puffed vp. 3.7.5.6

9 For we knowe in part, and we prophesie in part. 3.2.10

10 But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part, shall bee aboli-ished. 3.2.13

12 For now we see through a glasse darkly: but then shall we fee face to face, &c. 3.11.11 & 4.18.20

13 And now abideth faith, hope and loue, euen these three: but the chiefeft of these is loue. 3.18.8

14.15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, but I will pray with the understanding also, &c. 3.20.5 & 3.20.32

16 Else, when thou sleepest with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the roome of the vnlearned, say Amen at thy giving of thanks, &c. 3.20.33

29 Let the Prophets speake two or three, and let the other judge. 4.8.9 & 4.9.3

30 And if any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. 4.1.12

34 Let your women keepe silence in the Churches, for it is not permitted vnto them to speake, &c. 4.10.29

40 Let all things bee done honestly and by order. 2.8.3 & 3.20.29 & 4.3.10. and 4.10.27.30

15.6 After that he was seene of more than five hundred brethren at once, &c. 2.1.25.3

10 But I laboured more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in me. 2.3.11 & 4.1.6

12 Now if it be preached, that Christ is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead? 3.25.7 & 4.1.14

13 For if there bee no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. 3.25.3

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vaine, and your faith is also in vaine. 3.25.3

16 For if the dead bee not raised, then is Christ not raised. 2.13.2

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vaine, &c. 2.13.2 & 2.16.13

19 If in this life only wee have hope in Christ, we are of all men the most miserable,

21 For his death by man came death, by man came also the Resurrection of the dead. 2.1.6
22 For, as in Adam all men die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. 4.16.17
23 For he must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. 2.16.16
28 And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Sonne also himselfe be subject unto him, &c. 1.13.26 & 2.8.30. & 2.14.3. & 2.15.5. & 3.20.42. & 3.25.12
36 Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickned, except it die. 3.25.4
39 All flesh, is not the same flesh, but there is one flesh of men, &c. 3.25.8
41 There is another glory of the Sunne, another glory of the Moone, another glory of the Stars: for one Starre differeth from another Starre in glory. 4.19.34
45 The first Man Adam was made a living Soule: and the last Adam was made a quickning Spirit. 1.15.4, & 3.1.2
46 Howbeit that was not first made which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. 4.16.31
47 The first man is of the earth, earthly: the second man is the Lord from heaven. 2.1.12.7. & 2.13.2. & 2.13.4. & 4.17.25
50 Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, &c. 4.16.17
51 Beholde I shew you a secret thing, we shall not all sleepe, but we shall all bee changed. 2.16.17. & 3.25.8
52 In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall blow, and the dead shall be raised vp incorruptible, and we shall be changed. 2.16.17
53 For this corruption must put on incorruption, &c. 3.25.7
54 So when this corruptible hath put on incorruptible, and this mortal hath put on immortallie, &c. 3.25.10
16.2 Every first day of the week, let every one of you put a side by himselfe, and lay vp as God hath prospered him, &c. 2. 8.33
7 For I wil not see you now in my passage: but I trust to abide a while with you, if the Lord permit. 1.17.11

6 Who also hath made vs able Minis ters of the new Testaments, not of the letter, but of the Spirit : for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giueth life. 1.9.3. & 2.7.2. & 3.1.4. & 4.1.6. & 4.14.11
7 If then the ministration of death writ ten with letters and engraven on stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not behold the face, &c. 2.7.7
8 How shall not the ministration of the Spirit be more glorious? 1.9.3
9 For if the ministrations of condemnation was glorious, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glorie. 4.3.3
10 Therefore their minides are hardened: for vntil this day remaineth the same covering vntaken away in the reading of the olde Testament, which vail in Christ is put away. 2.10.23
11 But even vnto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is laid over their harts. 2.10.23
12 Now the Lord is the Spirit, & where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 2.2.8
13 But we all behold as in a mirror, the glory of the Lord, with open face, and are changed into the same Image, &c. 1.15.4. & 1.15.5. & 2.2.20. & 3.3.9
14 In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds, that is, of the Infi dels, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, which is the Image of God, &c. 1.14.13. & 1.14.18. & 1.18.3. & 2.4.1
15 For God that commanded the light to shine out of the darkness, is he which hath shined in our harts, &c. 2.9.1. & 3.2.1. & 4.1.5. & 4.3.3
16 But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of that power might be of God, & not of vs. 4.1.5. & 4.3.1
17 We are afflicted on every side, yet are we not in distress; in poverty, but not overcome of poverty. 3.3.9. & 3.15.8
18 We are persecuted, but not forsaken: cast down, but we perish not. 3.15.8
19 Every where we beare about in our body, the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life of Jesus also might be made manifest in our mortall flesh. 3.15.5. & 3.15.8. & 3.18.7. & 3.25.3. & 3.25.7
20 And because we have the same Spirit of Faith, according as it is written, I beleueth, and therefore have I spoken, &c. 3.2.3.5
21 For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be destroyed, we have a building giuen of God, &c. 3.25.6
22 For therefore we feigh, desiring to be clothed with our house, which is from heaven. 3.9.5
23 Because we would not be vnloathed, but would be clothed vpon, that immortalitie might be swallowed vp of life. 1.15.

26 & 3.25.6
27 For we walke by Faith and not by sight. 3.2.14.
28 Neuertheless, we are bold, and love rather to remoue out of the body, and to dwell with the Lord. 1.15.2
29 For we must all appeare before the judgement seat of Christ, &c. 1.13.11. & 1.15.2. & 3.18.1. & 3.25.7
30 And all things are of God, which hath reconciled vs vnto himselfe by Jesus Christ, &c. 3.2.29. & 3.5.5. & 3.11.4. & 4.6.3
31 For God was in Christ, and reconciled the world to himselfe, not imputing their finnes vnto them, &c. 2.1.2. & 2.1.7.2. and 3.2.32. and 3.4.25. & 3.11.
32. & 3.14.11. & 4.1.2.
33 Now therefore are we Ambassadors for Christ: as though God did beseech you through vs, &c. 3.4.27. & 4.1.22. & 4.3.1

For all the Law is fulfilled in one word, which is, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8.53
For the flesh lusteth against the Spiritie, and the Spirtie against the flesh, &c. 2.7.5 and 2.22.27
Moreover the workes of the flesh are manifest, which are adulterie, fornication, vnclennesse, wantonnesse. 2.1.8 &c. 3.14.1. and 4.15.10
While we haue therefore time, let vs do good vnto men, &c. 3.7.6. & 3.20.38
But God forbid that I should reioyce, but in the croffe of our Lord Iesus Christ, whereby the world is crucifiſed vnto me; and I vnto the world. 2.16.7
For in Christ Iesus, neither circumcision aquaileth any thing, nor vn circumcision, &c. 4.14.24
From henceforth let no man put me to businesse, for I beare in my body the marks, &c. 3.18.7. and 3.25.8

EPHESIANS.

1.2 Race be with you, & peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.15
3 Which hath blessed vs with all spiritual blessing in heavenlie thinges in Christ. 3.22.10
4 As he hath chosen vs in him before the fondation of the world, that we should be holy, &c. 2.3.8. and 2.8.53. and 2.12.5. and 2.16.4. and 3.15.5. and 3.17.15. and 3.19.2. and 3.12.1. and 3.23.12. and 3.24.3. and 3.24.5
Who hath predeffinate vs to be adop ted through Iesus Christ vnto himselfe, 2.12.5. and 3.11.4. and 3.18.2
To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherewith he hath made vs accepted in his beloved. 2.17.2. & 3.2.32. & 3.11.4
By whom we haue redemption through his blood, &c. 3.4.30
And hath opened vs to the mysticke of his will, according to his good pleasure, &c. 4.14.2. and 4.19.36
That in the dispersion of the fulnes of the times, he might gather together in one all things, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth, even in Christ. 2.12.5. and 3.20.21
In whom also ye haue trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, even the Gospell of our salvation, &c. 1.7.4. and 2.9.3. and 2.10.3. and 3.14.1. and 3.2.36. and 3.24.1. and 3.24.8
Which is the earnest of our inheritance, vntill the redemption, &c. 3.24.8

Rer 3 17 That
The Table.

17 That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, might give vnto you the Spirite of wisdome, &c. 2.2.21
18 That ye may know, what the hope of his calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is in the Sainetes. 3.2.16 & 4.8.11
10 Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, &c. 2.16.15
21 Farre aboue all principalitie and power, and might, and domination, and every name that is named, &c. 1.14.5. & 2.15.5. & 2.16.15
22 And he hath appointed him out all things to be the head to the Church. 2.15.5. & 4.6.9
23 Which is his body, euene the fulnesse of him that filleth all in all things. 2.13.5. & 3.20.3. & 4.1.10. & 4.17.9
2.1 That were dead in trespasses, and sins, &c. 3.24.10
2 Wherein in time past yee walked, according to the course of this world, and after the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, &c. 1.14.13. & 1.14.18. & 2.4.1. & 3.24.10
3 Among whom we also had our conversation in time past, in the lustes of our flesh, in fulfiling the will of the fleth, and of the minde, &c. 2.11.6. & 2.1.11. & 4.16.17
4 But God which is rich in loue, through his great loue, wherewith hee loued vs. 3.14.5
5 Euen when we were dead by sinnes he quickned vs, &c. 3.5.13
6 And hath raised vs vp together, and made vs to sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. 2.16.16. & 3.15.6. & 3.25.1
8 For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of your owne: it is the gift of God. 3.13.2. & 3.14.11
9 Not of works, least any man should boast himselfe. 3.13.2. & 3.14.11
10 For we are his workemen, ship created in Christ Jesus vnto good works, &c. 2.3.6. & 3.5.21. & 3.14.5. & 3.15.7. & 3.23.13
11 Wherefore remember that ye being in time past Gentiles in the fleth, and called vncircumcision, &c. 4.14.12. & 4.16.15
12 That ye were, I say, at that time without Christ, and were alienates from the common wealth of Israel, &c. 1.4.3. & 1.5.12. & 2.6.1. & 3.24.10. & 4.14.12. & 4.16.3. & 4.16.24

2.2.25
6 I am persuaded of this same thing, that he hath begun this same good work in you, &c.
2.3.6. & 3.18.1. & 3.24.6
20 As I heartily looke for, and hope that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all confidence, &c.
3.2.43
23 For I am greatly in doubt on both sides, desiring to be looked to, &c, with Christ, &c.
3.9.4
29 For unto you it is given for Christ, that not onely ye should beleue in him, &c.
2.17.5
21 Fulfill my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same loue, &c.
4.2.5
3 That nothing be done through contention, &c. That in meeknes, &c.
3.7.4
5 Let the same mind be in you, that was euin in Christ Jesus.
4.2.5
6 Who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery, &c. 1.13.11. and 1.13.24
7 But he made him selfe of no reputation, and took on him the forme of a seruant, and was made like vnto men, &c. 1.13.24 and 2.13.2. and 2.16.5. and 4.17.25
8 He humbled him selfe, and became obedient vnto the death, &c. 2.13.2. and 2.14
3.15.8. and 4.14.12
9 Wherefore God hath also highly exalted him, and given him a name, &c. 2.11.

I. THESSALONIANS.

2.18. Therefore we would have come vnto you, (I Paul) &c. 1.17.11
19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crowne of reioicing?
3.5. Even for this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent him that I might know of your faith, &c. 3.20.46. & 4.1.6
12. And the Lord increase you, and make you abound in love one toward another, &c. 2.5.6
13. To make your hearts stable, and unblamable in holiness before God, &c. 3.17.15
4.3. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, &c. 3.16.2
7. For God hath not called vs vnto vn-cleanness, but vnto holines. 3.16.2. & 3.19. 2. & 3.23.13
15. For this say we vnto you by the worde of the Lord, that we which live, and are remaining in the comming of the Lorde, shall not preuent those which sleepe. 3.25.18.
16. For the Lord himselfe shall descende from heauen with a shou't, and with the voice of the Archangell, and with the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall first rise. 1.14. 8. & 2.16.17
17. Then shall we which live and remaine, be caught vp with them also in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the aire: and so shall we be euer with the Lord. 2.16.17
5.2. For you your felues knowe perfectly, that the day of the Lord shall come, even as a thieves in the night. 4.19.34
9. For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine salvation by the means of our Lord Iefus Christ. 3.16.2

II. THESSALONIANS.

1.4 So that we our felues reioice of you in the Churches of God, because of your patience and faith in all your perfections and tribulations that ye suffer.
3.2.11 Which is a token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for the which ye also suffer. 3.2.11 & 3.18.7
6. For it is a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you. 3.9.6. & 3.18.7 & 3.25.4
7. And to you which are troubled, rest with vs when the Lord Iefus shall shew himself from heauen with his mightie Angels. 3.18.7
9. Which shall bee punished with everlasting perdition, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power. 3.2.12
10. When he shall come to be glorified in his fants, and to bee made maruellous in all them that beleue (because our testimonie toward you was beleued) in that day. 3.2.10
11. Wherefore, wee also pray alwaies for you, that our God may make you worthy of his calling, and fulfill al the good pleasure of his goodnes, and the worke of faith with power. 2.5.8 & 3.2.35
2.3. Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a departing first, and that man offinne be disclosed, eu'n the son of perdition. 4.9.7
4. And exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he doth sit as God in the temple of God, &c. 4.2.12, & 4.1.25, & 4.1.29, & 4.1.25, & 4.1.29, & 4.1.25.

9 Euen him whose comming is by the working of Satan with all power & signes, and lying wonders. 1.1.4.17

11 And therefore God shall send them strong delusion, that they should beleue lies. 1.1.4.17, & 1.1.18.2, & 2.4.5

12 That all they might be damned, which beleue not the truth, but had pleasure in vnrighteousnes. 1.1.8.2, & 2.4.5

13 But we ought alwaies to give thankes to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because hee hath chosen you from the beginning to salvation, through sanctification of the spirit, and beleef of the truth. 3.1.2

14 Whereunto he called you by our gospell, to the obtaining of the glorie of our Lord Iefus Christ. 2.10.3

3.6 We do command you brethren, in the name of our Lorde Iefus Christ that yee withdraw your selues from enemie brother that walketh inordinately, &c. 4.1.26

10 For even when we were with you this we warned you of, that if there were any that would not worke, that he should not eate. 4.16.29

12 Those that be such manner of persons, we command, and befeech for our Lord Iefus Christ, that they worke with quietnes, and eate their owne bread. 3.2.1

14 And if there bee any that follow not our counsell, note by a letter, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. 4.12.5

15 Yet count him not as an enemie, but admonish him as a brother. 4.12.10

I. TIMOTHIE.

1.5 The end of the law, is loute out of a pure heart, & good conscience, and of faith unfeamed. 2.1.6, & 2.1.8, & 1.1.5, & 3.2.1.2, & 3.1.9.1, & 4.1.10.4

9 Knowing that the law is not put for iuft men, but for the lawles and disobedient, & for those that will not be ruled, for the wicked, &c. 2.7.10

13 I Say which was first a blasphemer, and a percuter, and a doer of wrong: but he had mercy of me, for I did it ignorantly, not beleuing. 3.3.12

15 Christ Iefus came into the world to save sinners, of the which I am chiefest. 2.12.5

17 To the king eternall,immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory, &c. 1.1.13.11, 24

19 Having faith and a good conscience the which being put away, some have made shipwreck of faith. 3.2.12

2.1 I exhort therefore, that first of all prayer, supplications, intercessions, and giving of thankes be made for all men. 3.20.19, & 4.20.23

2 For kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all holinesse and honesty. 4.20.5, &

3 Who would have all men to bee saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. 3.24.15

5 One God and one Mediator betweene God and man, the man Christ Iefus. 2.1.12, & 2.2.17.5, & 3.20.17.20, & 4.1.12.25

6 Who gave himself a ransom for all men, I Say Christ that testimonie ordained in due time. 2.17.5, & 3.1.4.30

8 I will therefore that the men pray every where lifting vp pure handes without wrath or doubting. 3.20.29, & 3.25.7, & 4.1.19.2

2.2 A Bishop ought to bee vnblameable, the husband of one wife, watchful, sober, ftedfast,harborsous, apt to teach. 4.3.1.2, & 4.4.7.10, & 4.5.2, & 4.2.23.24

9 Holding the mysterie of the faith with a pure conscience. 3.2.13, & 4.19.36

3 Forbidding marriage, and commanding to abstaine from it, which God hath created to be receiv'd with thanksgiving of the faithfull and of them that have known the truth. 4.9.14 & 4.12.23

4 For whatsoever God hath created is good, nor nothing is to be refus'd if it be taken with thanksgiving. 3.19.8

5 For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. 3.19.8 and 3.20.28

6 Being nourish'd in the worde of Faith, and in good doctrine, which thou hast continually followed. 3.2.13

7 But godlineffe is profitable which hath promise of this life, and of the life to come. 2.9.3. 3.2.28. & 3.10.44

10 Therefore we labor and are reproach'd, because we hope in the living God, which is the Saviour of all men, but most chiefly of the Faithfull. 3.8.8

13 Attend vnto reading, exhortation and doctrine untill I come. 1.9.1

14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee which was given thee to prophesie with laying on of the hands of the Elders. 4.3.16 and 4.19.28

5.9 Let not a widow be taken into the number that is younger than 60. years old; that hath been the wife of one husband.

12 Therefore to be condemned, because they have forsaken their first faith. 4.13.18

17 The Elders that rule well, are worthy of double honor, but most chiefly those that doe labor in the wordes and doctrine. 2.8.35. and 4.11.1

20 Those that offend, reprooue openly, that the rest may fear. 4.12.3

21 I charge thee before God & our Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect Angels, that thou keepe these things without preferring one before another, and do nothing partiallie. 1.14.9.16, and 3.23.4

22 Lay hands sodenly vpon no man, neither be partaker of other mens sinnes. 4.3.12.15

6.4 He is puff'd vp and knoweth nothing, but dotch about questiones and strifes of words, of which there rife thence strife, railings, and euill surmisings. 1.13.3

10 For the roote of all euill is the loue of money, the which whilst some lust thereof after, they have erred from the Faith, and pearced themselves through with many forrowes. 3.2.13

16 Who only hath immortalitie, dwelling in the light that none can attaine vnto, whom never man saw, neither yet can see, vnto whom be honor and power everlafting. Amen. 1.6.3. & 1.13.3. & 3.2.1

17 Charge those that be rich in this world, that they be not high minded, and that they put not trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giueth all things abundantly to enjoy. 3.18.4

10 Of Timothee, keepe that that is committed vnto thee, and auido prophane and vaine babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. 1.16.8

II. TIMOTHEE.

1.1 Paul the Apostle of Iesus Christ, by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Iesus. 2.9.3

6 I do put thee in remembrance that thou stir vp the gift of God which is in thee, by the laying on of my hands. 4.3.16

9 Who hath fouled you and hath called you with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his owne purpose and grace, &c. 2.12.5. and 3.14. and 3.22.3. and 4.1.26

10 But now is made manifest by the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath abolisht death, and hath brought life and immortalitie to light through the Gospel. 2.9.2. and 3.25.1

12 For which cause also I suffer these things, neither am I ashamed: I know whom I haue beleued, and I am perswaded, he is able to keepe that I haue committed vnto him against that day. 3.2.3.1. and 3.25.4

14 That worthy thing that was committed vnto thee, keepe through the holy Ghost which is in vs. 3.2.33

3.14 We bee made partakers of Christ, if we keep sure vnto the end that beginning wherewith we are vpholden. 3.2.16
4.9 There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. 2.8.29
14 Having therefore a great high priest, that hath entred into heauen, euem Jesus the sonne of God, let vs hold this profession. 2.7.2.4. 4.2.1 15 We have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the infirmite of our flesh, but was in all things tempted in like fort, yet without sin. 2.12.17. & 2.14.1. and 2.

24 And he becausede for euer, hath an everlastinge priesthood. 2.15.6
25 Whereby he is able to save those which come unto God by him. 2.16.16
8.1 But this is the summe of that which we have spoken: that we have such an high priest, that sitteth on the right hand of the throne of majestie in heaven. 2.16.15
5 See, quoth he that thou make all things according to the patern that was shewed thee in the mountaine. 2.7.1
6 But now our high priest hath obtained a more excellent office, in as much as he is the Mediator of a better teament, &c. 2.16.12
9.1 The first Testament had also ordinances of religion, and a worldly sanctuary. 4.14.21
7 But into the second went the high priest alone once euer, not without blood which he offered for himselfe and for the people. 2.7.17. and 2.15.6
8 Whereby the holy Ghost this signified, that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet opened, whilst as yet the first tabernacle was standing. 2.7.17. and 2.15.6
9 Wherein were offered gifts and sacrifices that could not make holy, concerning the conscience of him that did serue. 2.
11 But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come. 2.16.16. & 4.14.21.
12 Neither by the blood of goats & calves, but by his owne blood entered he once into the holy place. 2.17.4. and 4.18.3
13 For if the blood of buls & goats, & the ashes of an heifer sprinkling them that are unleane, sanctifeth as touching the puriﬁcation of the flesh. 2.17.4
14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, which through the eternal spirit offered himselfe without spot to God, &c. 2.16.6. & 3.16.2. & 4.14.1
15 And for this cause he is the Mediator of a new Testament, that through death, &c. 2. 7.17. & 4.17.4
16 For where a testament is, there must be the death of him that made the testament 4.18.5
22 And all things almost according to the law, was puriﬁed by blood, and without shedding of blood there was no remission 2.15.6. & 2.17.4
26 But now once in the ende of the world hath he appeared to put away sinne by the sacrifice of himselfe. 4.18.3
27 And as it is ordained for men that they shall once die, and after that commeth the judgement. 2.16.17. & 3.25.8

10.1 For the law having the shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offer yecere, sanctifie the commiers thereto. 2.7.16, 17. &c. 11.4. & 4.14.23

2 For would they not then have ceased to hate beene offred because that the offerers once purged, should have had no more confidence of sinne. 3.19.15. & 4.10.3. & 4.14.25

4 For the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sin.

7 Then I said, I come (in the beginning of the booke it is written of mee) that I should do, O God, thy will. 2.16.5

8 About, when he said, sacrifice, and offerings, and burnt offerings, and sinne offerings, thou wouldst not haue, neither hast thou pleasure therein which are offered by the law, &c.

10 By the which will we are sanctified, even by the offering of the bodie of Christ once made.

14 For with once offering hee hath consecrated for euer, those that are sanctified.

19 Wherefore brethren, seeing we haue libertie to enter the holy place through the blood of Iesus.

26 If we sinne willingly after that we haue received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin.

27 But a fearful, looking for of judgment, and violent fire which shall devour the aduersaries.

29 Of how much more forer punishment thinke ye, shall he ye worthy, which treadeth vnder foote the son of God, & counteth the blood of the testament as an unholy thing, wherewith he was sanctified, and doth despise the spirit of grace.

36 Ye haue need of patience, that after ye haue done the will of God, ye might receive the promisses.

11.1 Now faith is the grounde of things that are hoped for, and the evidence of things that are not seen.

By faith we understand, that the worde was made by the worde of God, in such sort, that the things that we see, were not made of things that did appear. 1.5.13.

6 Without faith it is vnpossible to please him, for hee that commeth to God must beleue that God is, and that he doth reward them that seek him. 3.11.15. & 3.14.4 & 3.20.40

7 By faith we being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seen.

9 By faith he abode in the land of promise as a stranger, &c.

17 By faith Abraham offered vp Iaac when he was tried, and he that had receiued the promisses, offered his only begotten son.

21 He worshipped God leaning vpon his staffe.

12.3 Consider him therefore that indued such speaking against of sinners leaff yee should be wearied & faint in your minds.

5 And you have forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh vnto you as vnto children: My sonne, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint in thy mind when thou art reprooved of him.

8 For if you be without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are ye barren, and not sions.

9 Moreover, wee haue had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected vs, and we gave them recuerence, should we not much rather be in subjection vnto the father of spirits, that we might live?

17 For ye know how that afterward when he would haue inherited the blessing, hee was rejected, for hee found no place to repent, although he sought the blessing with tears.

18 For ye came not to the mount that might be touched, nor vnto burning fire, nor to blakenesse, and darkenesse, &c.
